Budget cuts sting UMass, fee imposed

Provost predicts UMass will shrink

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

Despite a 12 percent increase in costs for in-state undergraduates, the University of Massachusetts faces a budget shortfall of more than $3 million and the most uncertain financial future in years.

A lean state appropriation of $169,077,260 will force across-the-board trimming of departmental personnel costs, leaving at least 20 faculty positions vacant, UMass spokesman James Langley said.

"Budgets are being cut across the board," he said. "The University has lost a great deal of flexibility."

But Provost Richard O'Brien said the bulk of the shortfall will be restored by a one-year $230 curriculum fee, approved by the Board of Trustees in July, and through the gleaning of this year's tuition hike.

> "What we must plan for is the possiblity of becoming a smaller university.
> — Provost Richard O'Brien

"There will be a small increase in crowding and a small decrease in access [to classes]," O'Brien said of the shortfall. "But that probably won't be felt this year."

The special curriculum fee, half of which was paid by undergraduates on this semester's bill, will recover an estimated $4.2 million for the University.

O'Brien said the money will go towards hiring more graduate teaching assistants for general education programs; increasing TA stipends; creating a training program for general education TAs; equipment purchasing; and a new computer registration system.

"We ought to be better off this year entirely due to the curriculum fee," O'Brien said. Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, who voted against the fee, said she fears it will be extended beyond one year. She also objected to applying the fee to a computerized registration system, since current upperclassmen will graduate before it is installed.

"While the administration sees us as a last resort, we should not be looked at that way," Orefice said.

"In the greatest budgetary mess of the last ten years I don't think we should be spending $500,000 on a new registration system when the old one still works."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who warned in June that whole departments could be jettisoned from UMass as a result of the cuts, agreed that the curriculum fee will offset any immediate threat to programming.

But he added that the future looks grim.

"The whole campus is in a state of uncertainty," Duffey said in an meeting with Collegian editors. "Somebody's going to have to have to talk to this state about taxation." "If we want to continue educational and public services, it's far more fair to address the tax question than to keep raising fees."

O'Brien said that while the shortfall poses no immediate danger, it raises serious questions about the future of state support for UMass.

"What we must plan for is the possibility of becoming a smaller University . . . fewer students and fewer faculty," O'Brien said.

Although there were no enrollment cutbacks this semester as warned in June, Karen Copetas, associate director of admissions, said cuts are possible for next semester. "Nothing is definite," Copetas said. "There's been talk that some students might be cut."

Professor charged with harassment

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student who says she was sexually harassed by physical education professor last semester has filed a lawsuit against the University.

The suit claims Wendy Marshall, 21, of Amherst, was handed a note from Professor Maurice Brosky February 10, 1987. According to the suit filed in Northampton Superior Court, Marshall was so affected by the note that she could not concentrate on school, and attended only one class the next day.

The suit alleges Brosky "intentionally inflicted emotional harm . . . that no reasonable person could be expected to endure." According to Marshall's lawyer, Carol Booth of Amherst, Marshall is seeking $25,000 in damages against Brosky and $35,000 from the University.

"Dear little girl to my left," the note reads. "I have been sitting here wondering if you've noticed me as much as I notice you." At this point the note was footnoted: "Your 'crap detector' should be going off.

"My name is Ralph," which is footnoted: "You know this is bullshit, men don't give their real names when trying to pick up women."

"I like the outdoors, good music, and good times." After this, the note is again footnoted: "Brush this jerk off right now!!." The note continues: "Do you?

"Of course, good times should include 'freedom.' Commitment, middle-aged morality, and other conservative droll is a DRAG. Don't you agree?" Here the note is footnoted: "Now you know why fathers don't sleep?" The note concludes: "In the event you wanna 'mess around' call

Appeal for LSC set for mid-Sept.

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

Two years have passed since the controversy over whether the Legal Services Center should represent students in litigation began, and the case is headed into the courtroom once again.

Three judges from the First Circuit Court of Appeals will hear arguments from both sides on Sept. 14 to determine if the case will go to trial. Last fall, Boston US District Court Judge Joseph Tauro ruled the case did not warrant a trial.

At issue is whether LSC should have the authority to represent students in the courtroom, a power the Board of Trustees granted the center in 1975.

Ten years later the trustees revoked the power from the center, then called the Legal Services Office, to represent students in cases against the University, and in August of 1986 abolished all forms of representation. The office was then renamed the Legal Services Center and had the power to only give free legal advice.

The students then filed a lawsuit on the grounds the trustees' decision was an infringement on their Constitutional rights, but were ruled against in court by Tauro.

"The students contend that the reason for the abolition of the office is simply retaliation for prior successful First Amendment lawsuits," said Charles DiMare, director of the center. "If [the judges decide] that's relevant, then the case goes back to the US District Court."

However, Peter Ellis, the attorney for the trustees and the administration, said he does not consider retaliation the issue before the court, adding that the trustees' decision did not violate the students' rights in any way.

"The law states that the government may not restrain the students from excercising their rights, but they are not required to help them do so," Ellis said. "There is a difference between restricting and facilitating."

"The students are now in the same position as any other member of the public," Ellis said. They are still free to seek legal representation, they just have seek it from the private bar, he said.

But DiMare said one of the major advantages of the center was that the cases they took on were turned down by the private bar.

"Most of the cases, except for the Yvette Henri one, I could not get the private bar to take, because there weren't substantial money damages involved," he said. "That has always been our policy."

Yvette Henri was a UMass student wrongly accused of starting fires on campus in 1983. She sued the University for $13 million but settled out of court for what DiMare said was a substantial sum of money. The amount was in the millions, but the actual sum was not disclosed, he said.

154-year tradition over

Wheaton College finally admits men

NORTON, Mass (AP) — When 18-year-old Dennis Leary stood in line to register at Wheaton College last week, he seemed unmoved by the gravity of the school's decision to admit men after 154 years as New England's oldest women's college and a bitter struggle with alumnae who opposed the change.

When asked why he chose to attend the $16,700-a-year school, where 75 men join a freshmen class of 402 students, Leary was succinct.

"I got rejected everywhere else," he said. Most of all, he looked forward to "meeting lots of girls," Leary said.

Administrators said little has been changed to accommodate men on the campus located 35 miles south of Boston, although they were forced to buy "longer beds."

Also, the care packages of toiletries distributed to in-coming freshmen on orientation day now include a separate package for men that, several women noted, do not contain the laundry detergent given women and "have better razor blades."

The people most excited about men coming to Wheaton were, not surprisingly, incoming women.

"I wouldn't be here if it wasn't co-ed," said Susan Howland, 18, of Lincoln, R.I., as she unpacked in her dormitory room last Thursday. "I think it's going to be fun. Maybe a little odd because there aren't that many men."

Nadja Drazien, 18, of Montreal, said, "I came basically because it was going co-ed. I think our society means that women have to learn how to work alongside men."

School officials were also enthusiastic about the new men on campus. Administrators said enrollment has increased 30 percent since they decided to admit men and they added that interest in the school has never been greater. The college will house 1,150 students this year.

They said the decision to admit men to Wheaton is part of the on-going trend to make single-sex colleges co-educational because newer generations of students demand it.

"The interest in going to a women's college has diminished," said Gail Weaver, director of admissions and student aid.

"Ninety-five percent of our women come from co-educational settings where they've had the opportunity to be editor of the school paper or class president, and they've never felt discriminated against. They feel there's no reason to buy into the argument that they need to go to school with just women to succeed."

Weaver said less than 100 women's colleges remain in the country. Almost half of them are small, church-related schools, she said.

Wheaton's transformation from a small, private college for largely affluent young women, set on an idyllic 378-acre campus of stately brick buildings and a white chapel, to a co-educational school was a rocky one.

Some alumnae balked when they learned of the January, 1987, decision to admit men. They claimed that many alumnae donated money to the school's Sesquicentennial campaign, which ended in June 1986, without knowing of the school's plans to eventually admit men.

The matter went to court where a probate court judge ruled last June that Wheaton officials must notify each donor that the school would return their donations if requested.

"It's a very sad day," said Mary Anne Marsh, 31, a 1979 graduate of Wheaton, and one of the alumnae who organized the protest. "It's diminishing what little opportunites are left to women who want to attend small, liberal arts schools." But many of the incoming male freshmen last week were barely aware of the fracas that surrounded the decision to admit them.

Greeks like Dukakis and Reagan

CHICAGO (AP) — A photograph of Michael Dukakis is taped to the cash register of the "It's Greek To Me" restaurant, a souvenir of the Democratic presidential candidate's visit to Greektown before the Illinois primary.

"I'm ready to cry of happiness the first time I heard [that Dukakis would run for president]," said restaurant owner Dennis Salafatinos, 48, who moved here from his native Kalamata, Greece, 27 years ago.

"I was a Republican all my life," Salafatinos said. "What Reagan has done is fine for me, but now Dukakis fits 10 times better."

Dukakis planned a campaign appearance Tuesday morning in the Chicago area, which has the nation's second-largest Greek community.

Like most of the city's 400,000 Greek-Americans, Salafatinos claims the Massachusetts governor as one of his own. Dukakis was born in Boston, but his parents emigrated from Greece.

And like many, Salafatinos says he generally approves of Reagan's policies. But he plans to vote for Dukakis over GOP nominee George Bush in November.

In two Greek neighborhoods, storefronts like Hellas pastries and the Cafe Ouzery are plastered with "Dukakis for president" posters and bumper stickers.

But few neighborhood residents said they would vote for Dukakis simply because of his ethnic background.

"We are not voting for Dukakis, we are voting for [the] party. I don't care if it was Dukakis or somebody else," said Steve Mitropolous, a patron at the smoke-filled Cafe Ouzery on the city's Northwest Side, where about 50 men sipped Greek coffee and played dominoes or backgammon Monday morning.

Even those who approve of Reagan Administration policies say they prefer Dukakis, but loathe to admit their preference is based on the Massachusetts governor's nationality.

"One way [I like Dukakis is] because he's Greek, but I also think he's better than Bush," said Nick Giannakaris, 35, who moved to Chicago form Sparta 18 years ago.

A Republican who voted for Reagan twice, Giannakaris says he would vote for Dukakis even if Reagan were running again.

"I'm too proud," he said.

But support for Dukakis isn't universal in Chicago's Greek neighborhoods.

Petros Kogiones, who has lived in Chicago since 1961, calls the Democratic candidate "very liberal" and says he disagrees with the Governor on most issues.

"My thinking is that the majority of the Greek American community doesn't agree with him," Kogiones said. "Perhaps they support him because his parents were Greek. That is mistaken."

Ann Koupsopanagos, manager of a Greek-language radio station in Chicago, says many of the city's Greeks initially supported the candidate "simply because he's Greek."

"It means," she said, "a lot to them — the symbol behind it."

But since the primary elections, she said, many Greek-Americans have become familiar with Dukakis' positions and like what they see.

Michael Bakalis, co-chairman of the Illinois Dukakis campaign, said Chicago's Greek-Americans had contributed more than $250,000 to the campaign. He called their support "very substantial."

"It's a very important thing not only for Greek-Americans, but I think it's important for all of ethnic America," Bakalis said.

Several Greeks said they believed relations with their homeland would improve under a Dukakis administration, but added that they wouldn't expect preferential treatment for Greece.

Dukakis dedicates Polymer Research Center

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael Dukakis, speaking last Tuesday at the dedication of Polymer Research Center at the University of Massachusetts, said the $56 million facility will help to build a stronger economy in Massachusetts and make the country more competitive.

In a stop on the Presidential campaign trail, the Democratic nominee hailed the facility as one of the "centers of excellence," he hopes to establish around the country, making America stronger in research and development.

Speaking to a crowd of more than 500 in the Campus Center Auditorium, he stressed growth of "the kind of partnership and teamwork we see here today in Amherst . . . so that ideas developed in America create jobs for America, instead of sailing across the seas in either direction."

"The members of the Polymer Science and Engineering faculty here at the University of Massachusetts are justly recognized around the world as leaders in their field," Dukakis said.

Dukakis praised Rep. Silvio Conte, a republican from the district that includes Amherst, as instrumental in getting $20 million in federal funds for the polymer center. The facility, scheduled to be completed before 1993, has been named the Silvio Conte Polymer Research Center.

"The facility is a symbol of excellence and high standards; it is a symbol of the kind of partnership between government and the private sector and our colleges and universities that we need to build all across America; and it is living proof that the way to build a strong America is to invest in America," Dukakis said.

Dukakis then turned attention to his presidential bid, criticizing the Reagan administration and his rival George Bush for economic policies Dukakis says have left America far behind in the international market.

"We'll work with state and local governments to help our students become the best-prepared, best-skilled and best-educated in the world."
—Gov. Michael Dukakis

"Mr. Bush has said that our trade relationship with Japan is superb, and it is . . . for Japan," he said.

In a news conference after his speech, Dukakis criticized Bush for the sale of arms to Iran in exchange for hostages. Quoting a new book by Sens. William Cohen and George Mitchell of Maine, Dukakis said Bush knew about and approved of the trade. Dukakis called the exchange the greatest disaster of foreign policy during the Reagan years.

Dukakis said he will never make concessions to terrorist nations, and stressed accountability in his administration. "In a Dukakis White House, if you accept the responsibility for public trust and violate it, you are going to be fired, and I mean fast."

About funding for public higher education, Dukakis said money would be allotted where it was needed, such as for the polymer center. "Does this university need a law school? - No," he said.

Dukakis said a college education could be a reality for any student prepared to do college work, and teaching would become an honored and valued profession again through scholarships and loan forgiveness.

"We'll work with state and local governments to help our students become the best-prepared, best-skilled, and best educated in the world," he said.

Dukakis also reiterated his policy on Central America, saying that support for Nicaraugua's 'drug-runner' Manuel Noriega should end: "Contra-aid should stop," Dukakis said.

Speaking of his running-mate, Lloyd Bentsen, who supports aid to the contras, Dukakis said Bentsen had pledged support for Dukakis' policies, but was free to vote in Congress as he chooses.

Dukakis also briefly mentioned a trade bill written by Bentsen that would allow for training and retraining of American workers. "We're going to invest in American workers because if we're going to compete - and win - in the world, we've got to have a world-class work force."

Concluding the speech, Dukakis said hard work was needed to achieve these goals.

"My friends, there are no shortcuts to the American dream. The best America doesn't hide, we compete. The best America doesn't waste, we invest. The best America doesn't leave anybody behind, we bring all of our citizens along. The best America isn't behind us, the best America is yet to come."

Dukakis was introduced by UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey. Also appearing at the dedication were UMass Provost Richard O'Brien, President David Knapp, and Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy.

Lester switches

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Professor Julius Lester has settled into the Judaic and Near Eastern Studies department after a turbulent departure this summer from the Department of Afro-American Studies.

"I like my new home a lot," Lester, 49, said of his recent move to Herter Hall. "That includes physically and emotionally. I feel good in every respect."

Lester's reassignment, approved in May by the dean of Humanities and Fine Arts, culminated what the tenured professor described as years of bitter relations between he and colleagues in the Afro-Am department, where he taught for 17 years.

"I like my new home a lot. That includes physically and emotionally. I feel good in every respect."
—Professor Julius Lester

The post-semester transfer was followed by allegations that Lester, a well-known black writer who converted to Judiasm six years ago, was pressured by the department to leave because of his unpopular criticisms of a lecture given by the late James Baldwin in 1984.

In Lester's autobiography published earlier this year, Lovesong: Becoming a Jew, he charged that Baldwin's remarks to a UMass classroom were anti-semitic. The lecture focused on Rev. Jesse Jackson's characterization of Jews a "Hymies" and New York City as "Hymietown."

The faculty Senate Rules Committee, asked by Chancellor Joseph Duffey on June 9 to investigate allegations that Lester was ousted, determined that while Lester did not formally request a transfer, he was not expelled from the department.

In addition, the six-member committee reported that there was no "overt threat" to Lester's academic freedom by members of the department.

Members of the Afro-Am, who maintain that the media has sided with Lester, wrote to letter early last semester to Murray Schwartz, dean of Fine Arts and Humanities, saying they would wholly support Lester's transfer.

The memo, dated March 23, said the Baldwin criticism "serves only to further underline the extent of Professor Lester's complete and long-standing estrangement from the department."

As part of his full commitment to the Judaic Studies department, Lester plans to teach two courses this semester: Blacks and Jews: a comparison in oppression and Biblical interpretations of Aggabic Midrashim.

Alcohol ban reaches tailgate season

Trustees extend Duffey's original plan

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

Saturday the University of Massachusetts football team will kick off its 1988 season hosting the University of Maine.

NEWS ANALYSIS

So what's the story? This will be the first time tailgaters outside the stadium will not be allowed to drink alcohol.

The Board of Trustees on August 3 agreed to extend the alcohol ban imposed by Chancellor Joseph Duffey last April. The ban, which prohibits the consumption of alcohol at all outdoor events held in areas under University jurisdiction, was modified by the trustees to prohibit possession, sale, or use of alcohol at those events.

After the ban was announced, the school's administration was met with multiple demonstrations and one of the largest marches and rallies in the school's history.

After the rally Duffey told the Collegian, "I did it because I felt it was the right thing to do. It obviously wasn't the popular thing to do."

Despite all the student opposition the administration held firm, not altering the policy in any way.

The Campus Chronicle reported, "According to Duffey, reviews of the ban by the Student Affairs and University Life Council of the Faculty Senate and the Chancellor's Committee on Alcohol and Drug Prevention said the policy was effective, with the Chancellor's Committee recommending a one-year extension of the ban to fully evaluate its effects.

Now the fall semester is here, and the ban, initially aimed at curbing disruptive behavior at spring concerts and lacrosse games, will affect a different breed — the football fan.

The concert and lacrosse audiences are mostly composed of students, but the football crowd is a mixture of students, staff, faculty, local residents, alumni, and God only knows who else.

Keeping these people from drinking is a whole new ball game. At the concerts and lacrosse games last spring the Collegian estimates about half the students were drinking alcohol by disguising it or had drank before the events.

At the spring concerts, there weren't middle-aged alumni coming to UMass with their families to reminisce about their college days, while feasting on barbecued hamburgers and hot dogs and quenching their thirst with gin-and-tonic. Will the law enforcers be expected to wrench the cocktails from the hands of these people?

Are these the alumni who are most active in University activities, and who are most likely to give generously and regularly?

Whether this is an accurate assumption or not remains to be seen. The answers will probably be found in the next couple of years wherever contributions are received.

This report is not advocating a repeal of the alcohol ban nor is it advocating the existence of the ban, but it is merely attempting to shed a different light on the situation.

UMass grad finds role in Dukakis camp

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

In the fall of 1984, Andrew Paven, then a UMass senior, wrote several columns for the Collegian that criticized Reagan Administration policies, yet predicted "Reagan will be elected by a landslide."

Four years later, Paven has moved beyond mere words. The former Journalism/English major is now a full-time member of the National Advance Staff for the Michael Dukakis campaign.

His duties include arriving at a scheduled campaign stops several days prior to the candidate and making arrangements for a smooth media event. Paven arrived at the University two days prior to Dukakis' August 30 dedication of the Silvio Conte Polymer Research Center.

"My job is to create a picture on TV that doesn't interfere with (Dukakis') message. For instance, the trees behind him have to be arranged properly; if there appears to be a tree coming out of his head, his message isn't going to come across properly," Paven said.

Paven's columns for the Collegian covered a wide range of topics, including famine in Ethiopia, ocean pollution and capitol punishment. He showed particular enthusiasm for the election as it drew near, writing seven columns about the candidates and their platforms. He strongly supported the Democrats, yet even before the election, Paven wrote what he considered a "political obituary" for Walter Mondale's campaign.

Paven, a 28-year-old Quincy native, said the greatest difference between the 1984 and 1988 Democratic presidential candidates is "the public had preconceived notions of Walter Mondale, which may or may not have been accurate, as a New Dealer and a big spender. The Dukakis campaign has been, essentially, a year of introducing the candidate to the voters."

July 29, 1988
San Salvador

Esteemed Madam,

The University of El Salvador sends its best wishes and sincerest condolences for the irreparable loss of your son Vic Gozbekian.

Vic's desire to come to this University to contribute his knowledge toward the academic development of our Alma Mater carries an incalculable value for our community. People like Vic are the ones who make us believe in humanity and in their support of our brothers who are struggling for a better world.

Thus, in sorrow we empathize with you and the other members of your family.

With respect and consideration,
Sincerely yours,
"TOWARD FREEDOM THROUGH CULTURE"
Jose Luis Argueta Antillon, Rector
University of El Salvador

On July 23rd of this year a tragic accident took the life of our dear friend and colleague Vic Gozbekian. Vic drowned while swimming in the Pacific Ocean during a trip to El Salvador organized by the UMass Biological Scientists for Social Responsibility. Vic planned to offer lectures in water purification methods and other aspects in Chemistry as part of a conference hosted by the University of El Salvador on "Ecological Studies of Lake Ilopango," a potable water source contaminated by volcanic emmissions and poor hygiene. Although his participation was frustrated by his untimely death, the UMass delegation and the University of El Salvador jointly dedicated the conference to Vic's memory.

Contributions to defer the economic burden placed on the Gozbekian family are greatly appreciated. Send tax-deductible donations to the VIC GOZBEKIAN FUND, 9 Prescott St., Watertown, MA 02172. Excess donations will be used as a College Scholarship Fund.

University of Massachusetts students grapple with '60s spirit of protests against oppression

By PEDRO PEREIRA

For those who survived through the 1960s, the decade's turmoil is but a set of vivid television memories of marches, protests, riots and war. Most of today's University of Massachusetts students were too young or still in their mamas' wombs then, so images left by television and photographs are to us a legacy with which we must grapple.

Scores of UMass students have grappled with that legacy in the past few years by taking to the streets, chanting in unison and sporting picket signs protesting what they call oppression by other students, administrators, and the nation's leaders.

"If someone accuses you of not knowing anything about the '60s because you weren't born then, tell them you live in Amherst, where the '60s haven't ended," Pullizer Prize winner Madeleine Blais, a journalism associate professor, told about 4,000 new students in the Curry Hicks Cage Sunday.

If anything, the '60s taught UMass' student activists that bad guys don't always wear black hats. The so-called oppressors may come across as saviors to some, hence the need to protest and try to sway opinions.

Beginning with the anti-Apartheid protests in 1985, groups of left-wing UMass students launched a series of sit-ins, marches, and demonstrations that have claimed occasional prominence in headlines across the nation. The anti-CIA protests that rocked the campus in the fall of '86 and the spring of '87 began with a small sparkle that ignited a full-blown story in the national media.

Anti-CIA protesters march past Herter Hall on their way to Whitmore in the fall of '86, as conservative students counter-protest.

To the protesters, the media attention was a fireworks display that illuminated the minds of citizens ignorant of the CIA's so-called illegal actions in Central America and other Third World nations.

"The whole world is watching," indignant protesters chanted, as state troopers wearing riot gear handcuffed and hauled 60 demonstrators from inside Munson Hall on the night of Nov. 25, 1986. For many that year, Thanksgiving wasn't only about turkey, but also about recurring mental images of handcuffed long-haired youths challenging with cries of "Pigs" the riot gear and the stares of intimidating police dogs.

Among those arrested and later tried in Northampton District Court were Abbie Hoffman, one of the "Chicago 7" convicted in the '60s of transporting people across state lines to incite violence, and Amy Carter, daughter of President Jimmy Carter. (Only 15 of those arrested were tried in April and found not guilty.)

Carter paid a brief visit to UMass last semester during the New Africa House takeover, but she shunned reporters, claiming she wanted no publicity. The occupation by black and minority students, prompted by an alleged racial incident in the Sylvan Residential Area, lasted six days.

The spirit of Martin Luther King captured the occupiers, who spent most of the six-day stretch in strategy meetings. Occasionally, they would appear at the windows and at the entrance to join in song students who had crusaded from other parts of campus and surrounding towns to lend their sympathy. "Hey, hey, ho, ho, racism has got to go," they chanted. "I have a dream," their chants seemed to translate into in the confines of on-lookers minds. "I have a dream," their chants still echo in the memories of many.

If anything, the '60s taught UMass' student activists that bad guys don't always wear black hats. The so-called oppressors may come across as saviors to some, hence the need to protest and try to sway opinions.

Dr. King's spirit also ruled in the Spring of '87, when hundreds of students of different colors, shapes and sizes lined up outside the Student Union and paraded through part of campus. The march was partly a reaction to the administration's response to a racial brawl in the Southwest Residential Area that left one black student seriously injured in October of '86.

Top administrators were slow in acknowledging that the incident had racial overtones, which infuriated leaders of the campus' black community. About 200 black students gathered outside the Whitmore Administration Building several days after the brawl and demanded that administrators meet with them to discuss the safety of minority students.

The safety issue last semester compelled Chancellor Joseph Duffey to institute a no-alcohol policy at outdoors events, such as concerts and games. Again, students came together with picket signs, this time to fight for their right to get drunk, this time giving a new twist to the '60s theme of fighting oppression.

Whatever the cause, the '60s spirit lingers; whatever the cause, UMass students still grapple with the legacy.

Pedro Pereira is editor in chief of the Collegian. He has covered UMass protests as a Collegian staff reporter and an Associated Press correspondent.

Some demands met, others are up to you

On Feb. 7 of this year, tragedy struck UMass when five white students and the brother of one assaulted two black male students and a white female.

Racism had reared its ugly head again and further disrupted an already polarized community; Afrikan-Americans had again found themselves reacting to racial and cultural bigotry.

The incident, called 'clearly violent and racial" by Chancellor Joseph Duffey, sparked campus-wide protests and a two-day moratorium on classes to remind the University of its commitment to fighting racism.

The most publicized demonstration came four days later during a raging snow fall, when students began a six-day occupation of the New Africa House. The occupation itself generated much needed publicity to the seemingly annual occurrences of racism. But more importantly, it allowed the students to create a list of concerns on which a community committed to a civil environment would act aggressively.

Joseph Hill

A 13-member monitoring committee was established during the occupation to engage in on-going mediation with the administration on the students' concerns.

This summer, the committee gained headway on two paramount concerns: a revision of the Student Code of Conduct, and increased funding for Third World programming. Although the administration has not yet met all the demands presented to it, the University has taken positive action in such areas as:

- A revision of the Student Code of Conduct, which makes it clear that a student who commits an act of racial violence or harassment, either verbal or physical, will be subject to removal from the campus.
- Removal of asbestos from the New Africa House.
- Additional furnished office space for student organizations, located on the fourth floor of the New Africa House.
- Renovation of the Banneker computer facility in the New Africa House, complete with air conditioning and furnishings.

Recent racial encounters, both verbal and physical, have strained human tolerance on this campus to the limit. While the administration has pledged to work aggressively with the student body to undermine racism at UMass, its ultimate elimination rests with the students themselves.

All students must make conscious, deliberate efforts to denounce all forms of racial aggression. Perhaps the prevailing mood on campus this fall is best phrased by Rick Townes, asssistant dean of students, who said, "the expectation is to continue to look at the set of concerns and follow them through."

In that light, the University of Massachusetts can pursue an environment where all students may enjoy personal freedom regardless of the minuscule classifications created by man.

Joseph Hill is a UMass student of chemistry and participant in the New Africa House take-over.

Third World group has political voice

The Third World Caucus, a 15-seat segment of the Undergraduate Senate, represents minorities on campus. According to Traci Davis, internal coordinator, the Caucus is he "only official voice minorities have in the senate."

To become a member of the Third World Caucus, students must attend three consecutive meetings. Membership does not necessarily entitle students to position as senator, but it diversifies the voice of he political oraganization, Davis said.

If you are interesed in becomming a member, come to the Campus Center today at 5:30 p.m. for the first meeting, or contact Traci Davis or Joseph Alfonso.

Hearing system installed in FAC

A new listening system has been installed in the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center Concert Hall to aid those with hearing problems.

Noel Sporny, publicist for the FAC, said the new, infrared system, will allow anyone who visits the theater to better hear what is going on from any seat in the hall.

The device, valued at more than $15,000, includes 20 sets of headphones, and was donated by T. Richard Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald, whose daughter Raissa attends UMass, is president of the company that designed it.

Sporny said the system is used on Broadway and theaters around the country. Fitzgerald was awarded a special Tony award for designing the system.

A $3 rental fee and a form of positive identification is required of anyone wishing to use the headphones, Sporny said. "This money will be kept for the upkeep of the system," she said.

The system was finished in late spring and will be available for all events in the Concert Hall, she said. Rentals can be made from a booth in the lobby of the hall.

Report claims minorities need support

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Minority students do not receive adequate academic support services, despite the efforts of several support programs, a special report issued over the summer states.

The Minority Student Services Review Commission, known as the Tillis Commission, spent the past year studying the quality of life for minority students on campus. The 22 page final report was issued in July.

Programs like the Bilingual Collegiate Program, and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students offer needed services, but not enough academic support, and are not coordinated in the University, according to the report.

"We do not believe that those minority students needing academic support services are adequately served despite the fact that these support programs devote a considerable proportion of their resources to academic advising and tutorial services," the report reads.

The commission was chaired by Frederick Tillis, associate provost for faculty, and had five student members. Other commission members included Arthur Hilson, police chief and executive director of public safety, Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development Deirdre Ling, and Zaida Giraldo, associate vice chancellor for affirmative action and equal opportunity.

Recommendations of the commission included the following:

- That the Division of Educational Access and Outreach, which includes both BCP and CCEBMS, report directly to the Dean of Academic Support Services.
- That the position of EAO director be renamed associate dean, to emphasize the academic nature of the programs.
- That the dean of academic support services work closely with the provost's office to recruit, keep and counsel minority students in need of academic support.
- That immediate steps be taken to establish a data collection system for minority students. The report calls the present data system "inconsistent and very inadequate."
- That cultural centers in the residential areas on campus for Asian and Asian-American, black, Hispanic and Native American students be established.
- That more faculty involvement be encouraged on an institutional basis in order to succeed in the recruitment and retention of minority students.
- That tutorial services now offered by BCP and CCEBMS be centralized under the direction of a coordinator to insure that services are not duplicated.
- That a task force be established to advise the University administration regarding stronger coordination and involvement of the provost's office in the implementation of programs for minority students at the University.
- That Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson consider an administrative realignment of Everywoman's Center with the University (related story, this page). The report states the center's programs are mostly community outreach, and so does not fit in with the other EAO programs, which mostly concern recruitment and retention.

Budget cuts and Tillis Report plague center

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Outrage and confusion are emanating from the Everywoman's Center in response to budget cuts and a recently published report on minority student services, which recommends realignment of the center.

EWC, which is forced to undergo position cuts this year because of recent state budget turmoil, called recommendations made in the Tillis Commission report a threat to the future of the center's services.

The report, released in July to Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, called for an administrative overhaul in EWC because its services stretched beyond the University level to the community.

The student-faculty-staff commission, which began its research in August of 1987, said its main criticism of EWC was it was mainly devoted to community outreach, and did not coincide with the goals of the University's Division of Educational Access and Outreach.

But EWC Director Carol Wallace said, "Our mission is specifically to promote educational access and equity for women in higher education. In reality, the majority of women that we serve are UMass students, that's very different from the perception that we are a community outreach," she said.

EWC has written a formal response to Madson, contending that its goals "could not be closer" to those of the DEAO, Wallace said.

"I'm concerned about the way the commission arrived arrived at a decision. I met for 15 minutes with them and had limited opportunity to present information about EWC," she said. "What concerns me about this is that 50 percent of the students of color on this campus are women."

Madson said he has received a copy of EWC's response to the Tillis report and said he believes there has been some misunderstanding.

"When I charged the committee I did not specifically include the Everywoman's Center. It was centered around how to best organize our minority support services," he said.

"I think the center does very important things for not only the university but also for the local community. I've incurred that an in depth review of EWC be conducted this semester," he said.

Madson said he is meeting with several groups and individuals to field input and reactions regarding the report. "I will not rush into making a decision," he said.

Wallace said during a recent meeting with Madson regarding the budget, she was told to freeze one full time position for this year and that EWC is expected to save $33,000 in professional staff money, which is equivalent to approximately 1.5 full time positions.

Wallace said the cutbacks total approximately 50 percent of what is being asked of DEAO.

"It's a very serious problem," said Wallace. "This places an unfair burden on EWC and suggests to me that our services are not valued or perceived as critical by the administration."

"I have problems cutting already underfunded programs and taking away from our division while there are other divisions that could better absorb the cuts," she said.

Wallace said she plans to inform the community of the cutbacks and tell the administration of the impact the changes will have on women.

"Right now we're turning away crisis calls. It's one thing to refer services to someone who seems to be managing but its another to refer someone in a crisis who needs to see someone immediately," she said.

Wallace said she has not yet decided which positions or programs will be cut in order to save the $33,000 requested by student affairs.

"I don't know if counseling will be able to be part of the plan, or if it will be possible," she said.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

UHS offers birth control

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

If you are concerned about pregnancy, birth control devices, or sexually transmitted disease, University Health Services can help.

Located near the Central Residential Area, Health Services is staffed by professional physicians, nurse practitioners, and counselors. Health Services offers some free services to students.

Students seeking birth control from Health Services may be required to attend a Contraceptive Educational Session before any services are rendered.

The sessions are offered to educate students on various methods of birth control available and to help individuals decide what method is best for them.

Gretchen Krull, Health Educator of the Peer Sex Education Program, said education sessions are mandatory because nurse practitioners do not have the time to explain every form of birth control available to every individual seeking protection.

It can take four to six weeks to get an appointment with a nurse practitioner, and that time is better spent when patients have already considered the choices available to them and arrive with more specific questions, she said.

Contraceptive Education Sessions take place every Monday and Thursday at 3 p.m. and every Tuesday and Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Health Services Room 302.

If you are concerned that you are already pregnant, you can get an appointment for a free pregnancy test at Health Services within three days. All services are completely confidential and counselors are available to answer questions and make any necessary referrals.

Introducing the Ed/Op page

My name is David R. Mark, and I'm the editorial editor of the Collegian.

So what, you ask?

Well, regardless, I thought I'd write this to let everyone at UMass, new students and anyone else who cares, know how this page works.

This is not an everyday column, so please appreciate the frankness.

David R. Mark

Above and beyond everything else, note two points when reading the editorial pages: The opinions expressed are those of the individual writer (there's no conspiracy in the making) and if you don't like what you're reading on the pages, don't be frustrated — write your thoughts and turn them in.

Mind you, it isn't necessary to be a journalism major. Fact is, you don't have to know a thing about journalism to write for the Collegian, in this section or any other.

Nor is it necessary to have an opinion on politics. If you don't want to write about politics, but about how little sleep you're getting, how you hate getting an carded when you're 23, or how you wish the Red Sox would get better starting pitching, that's all right.

One of the columns we started last semester, "Odds and Ends," is solely about the unusual and the subtle that is UMass and UMass students. We want to see columns about that walk you took by the pond at 4 a.m., to contemplate your future, only to stop and feed the ducks, and realize the future lies in electrical engineering.

"Odds and Ends," is also the place to tell us about your summer trip to Mexico, your fear of European literature circa 1400, and why you like "chicken pucks" at the D.C.

Lets face it, there's more to life than the contras, the Democrats, and the SGA.

But, like I said, this is not an everyday column, so let me take the opportunity to preview what it is you'll likely be reading this semester and for the rest of your days at UMass.

We have a dozen or so columnists, whose opinions range from liberal to conservative, whose ideas range from foreign policy to the lack of pencil sharpeners on campus. To become a columnist, a person needs to have five columns printed in the Collegian during a semester.

We also run columns regularly from the Student Government President and Trustee, as well as pieces written by other students with interesting, original points of view. Occasionally a professor will write something for us, though we're not holding our breath waiting.

Letters — rather than columns, are also an outlet for students. Letters are shorter, usually less than a page, typed and double-spaced, while columns are about twice that length. Letters can refer to columns, but columns can't refer to other columns.

No exceptions, no matter how good your reason.

Now, as for submitting columns or letters, some guidelines:

1) Don't jump on the bandwagon. Unless you have something original to say on a subject, don't repeat an idea previously revealed on the editorial page. We won't print it.

2) Don't threaten us in the newsroom. Too often last semester, somebody would tell us we had to run their column. We don't have to do anything, and we're less likely to do it if you yell at us.

If you turn something in, however, and haven't seen it in the paper, it may be worth your while to call us up and ask what's up. Sometimes we save a column for one reason or another, or we have a reason for not printing a column. We're nice people, and no one else calls us, so don't be afraid to give us a ring.

3) Don't be afraid to tell us what you think of what you read. Let us know what you like and don't like. If you really thought I wrote a piece of, as Vice President George Bush would say, "doo-doo," then let me know. Maybe get your friends to let me know as well. Similarly, if I get too much hate mail I may stop wanting to write columns, so if you like my stuff, let me know — and I won't think you're pandering, even if you are.

The same holds true for comments about everyone else who writes for the paper, in this section or any other.

As a post-script to all these points, if I'm not here to answer your questions, feel free to ask my associate, Pam McCarthy.

Hope everyone has a great semester, and makes every effort to communicate with the rest of the world. Thanks for reading.

David R. Mark is the editorial editor of the Collegian. "A pen, a pen, my kingdom for a pen" runs Tuesdays. A second column, "Some Advice for Mike and George" will run Fridays until the week after the presidential election.

Editor's notebook

There are problems in black affairs

You would think on a campus like this the student newspaper wouldn't have a difficult time finding people to staff its black affairs desk. After all, the campus has several minority student organizations and academic departments.

I can remember the Massachusetts Daily Collegian having problems staffing the black affairs desk as far back as the spring of 1986, when I joined the paper as a correspondent. Now I'm editor in chief and the problems remain the same. Indeed, they may have worsened.

Pedro Pereira

Once in a great while a black student walks in through the newsroom door and says he or she wants to write. We jump on the chance and encourage him or her to write for black affairs or any of our other departments. Lately, we ask them if they have any editing experience because we don't have a black affairs editor.

I can't pinpoint why, but the Collegian can't keep its black writers for very long. Because we have this deficiency, it becomes increasingly difficult to recruit other black writers because they figure if we don't have black writers we don't want any. This is an unfortunate misconception bordering on ludicrous.

If we didn't want black writers, we would eliminate the black affairs desk.

Right now, we're keeping the desk open, though its top spot remains unfilled. Were we to close it because it simply doesn't produce, as any other organization would eliminate an unused department, the move would appear racist to the black community.

Although the desk is in a coma, getting rid of it is not an option, even if the suggestion slips out in moments of frustration.

About a year and a half ago, our editors debated turning the black affairs desk into a minority/multicultural affairs desk. We figured since the desk is actually a minority issues desk, that it would make sense to re-christen it accordingly.

Black community leaders would have none of it.

We were told that should we re-christen the desk, the Collegian would never again see a black person walk in the newsroom wanting to write; never again would a black person on campus collaborate with us as a source for a story. Not getting black writers wouldn't make much of a difference since we have that problem now. But sources refusing to collaborate could mean a lot of trouble, especially on stories where the black point of view is crucial.

Needless to say, the editors dismissed the idea quickly. We decided to play it safe, although I find it hard to believe the black community would waive the right to express its point of view in our paper.

If we continue to encounter the same types of problems with staffing the black affairs desk, re-christening it could make it to the top of our agenda again. If we rename it "multicultural affairs" or "minority affairs," the desk might just sound more inviting to writers of other minority groups, hence turning the recruitment of minority writers into the easy task it should be.

This semester, I have already been approached by the Latino community through a third party to set up a meeting for discussing better coverage of the community. So far, no one from the black community has approached me. Perhaps it's apathy.

And if it's not apathy, by all means prove me wrong. Nothing can convince me this campus doesn't have the five or six skilled black writers needed to staff the desk. If the black community reacts to my comments with indignation, it will simply prove everything I've written in this column is true. If the reaction is "let's do something about it," I'll eat my words.

Odds and ends

At times, you have to type $?*!

Here's a riddle: What makes mild mannered students get turned into crazed tyrants, who resort to talking to themselves and cursing? You've guessed it. The typewriters at Goodell.

Janet Rubinstein

It seems like a noble idea for UMass to supply typewriters to its poor downtrodden students who don't have connections to a typewriter. But these manual machines have a mind of their own.

It's beyond me how we're expected to type on these things. One needs the strength of Godzilla to press down on a key. Besides which, even if you are strong enough to register a letter, the ribbon is probably worn out so the letter won't show.

Plus, let's not forget that it can't get more annoying than when the typing is finally going well — and suddenly a letter drops down lower than all the other letters.

The most entertaining part of this is seeing and hearing people curse out loud at their typewriters.

By the time I got to the typewriters one day, I found an older-looking, well dressed student sitting on the edge of his seat typing one letter at a time. After each letter, he reacted accordingly — if it was successful, he giggled a little — if it was not up to his expectations, he would hold his hands up in the air and mumbled profanities.

Now, I reacted as most people would. I thought it was a little strange, but I dismissed any further thought of it, figuring this man must not be normal. But when I saw this performance repeated several time, I knew I was not alone in my frustrations.

I don't know why UMass hasn't modernized its typewriting room. Maybe it's because all complaints have to be typed.

A parade of assumptions

Politics, pollution, and other fun summer things

As this long, hot summer of our discontent draws to a close, our memories of the past season will soon wash away, along with the odd dirty syringe, AIDS-contaminated blood vial and toxic sludge. But before they fade completely, let's take a glance at some events of the summer that will influence us this semester.

Obviously, the topic that emerges as today's main issue is this year's presidential campaign. Do you get the feeling people from both ends of the political spectrum are grumpy about their particular standard-bearer for the fall?

Democratic nominee Gov. Michael Dukakis is despised by any self-respecting card-carrying left-wing radical. You call that a convention? The Democratic party platform is so vague and platitudinous that the Republicans would be proud to run on it. The Democrats are so fearful of being "liberal, liberal, liberal" (Reagan's words) they will sacrifice everything the party represents in the hearts and minds of supporters. Dukakis is wrong. This election is about competence and ideology. "Good jobs at good wages" doesn't cut it.

Across the street, the Republicans were a scary bunch. Any political gathering that makes Barry Goldwater a moderate should be locked in the Bronx Zoo. The GOP delegates were eerily silent when Republican nominee George Bush called for a "kinder and gentler nation" but erupted into ecstatic applause when he promised to get rid of gun control. The final act of the convention, a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance led by Bush, effectively claiming patriotism as a solely Republican virtue, was the finest display of fascism in this country in a long time.

Stephen Bayer

Still in a campaign mindset, few people have yet to see Bush's entire grand strategy of choosing Dan Quayle as his running mate unfold. Sure, Quayle's pretty-boy looks may help swoon the women's vote, where Bush has a marked disadvantage. Personally, I think Bush is going for the gay vote. Gay men would "come out" in droves to vote for this good-looking man and Bush would be helped enormously by this large bloc of voters. And why not? That strategy is just as insulting and moronic as Bush himself is.

And now, politics a little closer to home: Over the summer, the mysterious and clandestine Student Government Association "Coordinating Committee" used its constitutionally granted powers to confirm the co-presidency of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz. This raises questions. Who composes the Coordinating Commitee? Who appoints or elects its members? If they are only a committee, do the decisions they make need to be approved by the SGA as a whole?

Something is wrong here. Yes, Silkoff and Rabinowitz won the SGA presidential election. They should legally be co-presidents. Nonetheless, a decision of this importance, involving people who shall be the students' leader and representative to the administration, must be approved by a fully attended Senate, representing students. Otherwise, the process is something considerably less than participatory democracy.

As an afterthought, this situation contains echoes from last year's decision by the University Trustees to end the Legal Services Office's power of prosecution against the University. That decision, too, was made during the summer when students were not around to voice their opinions. Doubtless, many of the folks on the Coordinating Committee protested that action as unfair. Smacks a bit of hypocrisy, eh?

From your Student Trustee

While you were gone

Each summer, as students are working and relaxing on the Cape or in Boston, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees is notoriously busy.

This summer was no exception. No sooner was I sworn in July 1 than a crisis arose.

Stephanie Orefice

Chancellor Duffey proposed a $230 curriculum fee to be voted on July 14. According to the chancellor, we will experience a $3 million plus downfall for this year alone.

I'm still trying to figure out how the Chancellor-proposed $230 one-year fee will cover the expenses not funded by the State even if we did not have the shortfall. These included an increase in T.A. stipends, more General Education course and sections (and an increase in hiring of TAs to carry the load), lab equipment for Gen ED/required science classes and a very expensive, very elaborate computer registration system that will hopefully alleviate "15 percent" of the oversubscribed class problem.

Here's the part I can't figure out — if the state wouldn't pick up these costs before the shortfall, are we expecting the state to pick up these costs after the shortfall — next year when the financial picture looks just as bleak?

This was sold as a one-year fee. I go on record now, and I dare the Chancellor and my colleagues on the Board to prove me wrong — this is not a one year fee: it's here to stay.

The Student Government Association did extensive research into the fee and met repeatedly with the Chancellor regarding it. He was upfront, and agreed to certain stipulations — small but valuable concessions.

Also this summer the Board awarded the contract to start the major telecommunications project that will catapult the campus into the 21st century.

Obnoxious jargon, but that's how it's being sold. You can hook your personal computer into your telephone which is then hooked into a jack and you can get a whole bunch of nifty things: computer hook-ups to the library, registrar, etc.; a more direct hookup to the Boston and Worcester campus, and improved telephone service. As long as they dig up the campus, cable wires will be thrown in so your 8-inch black and white T.V. will get cable with "educational" channels free.

All for the measly cost of $170 per dorm student per year.

If you have questions about any Board action, stop by the Student Trustee's office at 406E Student Union. The office is also hiring an assistant, so if you wish to learn the inner workings of the governance structure of the University, apply for the job.

It should be an exciting semester.

Stephanie Orefice is Student Trustee for UMass-Amherst

My observations

Farewell my fair broom closet — er, dorm

It's over.

I can't take it anymore. I've tried to make this relationship work. Yet, you appeared distant, as if you no longer cared about me. I've swallowed my pride for these long years. I strayed only once from you, but I was a coward and returned after only three months of separation. It was a tough fight to get you back in my life. I fought so hard I lost sight of what I was fighting for. When I came back to you things were fine for awhile.

Unfortunately, the old problems came between us once again. You kept me awake at all hours of the night without so much as a thought to my feelings. You kept the halls and bathrooms a mess after you and your friends were finished partying. You insisted on cooking, yet the food was inedible. I was never permitted to study, and was forced to flee from you numerous evenings just to maintain my sanity. I begged you to change, to save our relationship but you turned your back on me and laughed. I hated when you did that.

God I hate the dorm.

I have to admit that the beginning of this seems a little melodramatic, but those of you who have had the esteemed honor to dwell in these scum-infected cubby holes can totally relate to my, shall we say "fond" memories of campus living. "What kind of memories?" you may ask. Allow me to share some of them with you. These are just rando n tidbits that have caught my eye the last three years.

Did you ever notice that every neighbor you have mysteriously becomes deaf and is forced to crank their stereo and television simultaneously on '10'? The more you need sleep, the deafer they become.

Sometimes I think my floormates take naps from 7-12 a.m., then get up to party just when my face is freshly scrubbed, teddy bear in hand and 'jamm ies' on.

Nancy Cohen

After my oh so wonderful night of rest, I miss my 9:05 class (due to pure exhaustion of course). I stumble through the shower, blow dry my hair and put my make-up on (all with my eyes shut — impressed?). I am then forced to face my ultimate fear and torture. . .THE DINING COMMONS.

AAAAHHH!!!

Okay folks, I'm all right, I faded for a minute there, but now I'm ready to talk about. . .IT. I can picture it now, the memory still lingers in the shape of horrible nightmares. There it is: THE RAMP. My heart is pounding but I won't turn my back, I must fact my fears head on. I'm an adult, I can handle it. Yeah, the same way a diabetic can handle sugar. I turn to run, but for some ungodly reason I am unable to move my lower limbs. I bravely advance forward, holding my I.D. card high. I feel like the Statue of Liberty inspiring hope in all who would dare to enter the forbidden domain.

I nonchalantly hand my card to the gatekeeper of muck. She hands back my key and while smirking, bids me welcome. I thank her enthusiastically (I love to taunt them that way). I grab my tray (shield), hold my breath and suddenly, somehow, its 5 p.m. and I'm merging onto the Mass Pike. Oh my God! Did you ever wish they had traffic cops to direct these crazed Bostonians/DC drivers? I know I do.

After my sumptuous feast, I slowly stand up and massage my sore wrists (it's tough to cut linoleum food). Feeling light-headed with God only knows what type of gastric disorder in my future, I find my way back to my room. I ease myself on my vibrating bed — compliments of my two deaf neighbors. Staring at the ceiling, I feel the nausea slowly beginning to set in and think to myself, Why me?

This time, it's over for good. I am now ready to stand on my own. Farewell fair campus life, I bid you adieu. I'm onto bigger rooms, considerate housemates, cleaner bathrooms and better food.

They said it. . .

For parents wondering why college tuition bills keep rising so much above the inflation rate, I have long urged that they take a good look at the costs of academic administration. One factor is university presidents who are increasingly demanding that they be surrounded with the trappings we have previously associated with monarchs. For example, the new mansion of the president of the University of Colorado is costing $1.5 million.

UMass to get $142 million for projects

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

A bill that will provide the University of Massachusetts with millions of dollars in state aid for construction and renovations was signed into law in July.

According to a Boston State House report, the Higher Education Capital Outlay bill, which took effect immediately, is to provide $371.2 million for new construction at state colleges and universities.

UMass will receive more than $142 million for the incorporation of capital projects, according to state Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, and state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst.

The University's package includes $32 million for a polymer science and computer research center, $23 million for a new classroom building, $25 million for a multipurpose convocation center, and $31.5 million for the design and construction of a new engineering building.

"This is the best thing that's happened to state colleges and universities in years," Rosenberg said. "Massachusetts is getting serious about building a top-notch public higher education system."

"I think it was a big surprise that we were able to go all the way. The engineering building wasn't on the original bill but Sen. Olver and I proposed it and worked together to make sure the building will be built," Rosenberg said.

UMass will also receive $30 million in additional state budget funds to pay for the construction of an animal care lab, renovations for utilities and landscaping, and the purchase of telecommunications equipment. The bill is also funding research for the planning and design of child care centers.

The package also includes a maintenance plan that directs the Board of Regents to develop a plan to ensure campus buildings are maintained in as-built condition.

Rosenberg said he estimates it will take about five to seven years before the buildings are constructed and functioning

The administration claimed the center interfered with the smooth running of the University, because administrators were afraid to do their jobs in fear of lawsuits, according to DiMare. He said this claim was totally unfounded.

"Suing the University has always been our last resort," he said. "Out of approximately 4,000 cases in which the students claimed they were wronged by the University, only 13 were filed. That's less than one percent."

Ellis said the University made an offer to help the students set up their own voluntary funded legal representation office, but said the students refused the offer.

"If the students hired an attorney and payed his or her fees directly, they'd be free to do so," Ellis said. "They [the students] said that is not acceptable, we want every student to pay for it."

When the LSC had the power to represent students in the courtroom, the representation was free. The center's attorneys were University employees, were state-paid, and were considered part of the administration.

UConn staffer set to replace Benedict

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

A University of Connecticut staff member has been named as the new Dean of Academic Support Services at the University of Massachusetts.

The position was vacated when Larry Benedict retired last spring.

Ann Quinley, current director of admissions and orientation services at UConn, will assume her new position December 1, and comes to UMass highly praised by her present colleagues and by administrators here.

"You are very lucky to get her," said Robert McGann, assistant director of admissions at UConn, who has worked closely with Quinley in her three years there.

"I've enjoyed working with her tremendously and am very sorry to see her go," he said.

Dennis Madson, vice-chancellor for student affairs, here at UMass, said the University is "very fortunate to have hired a dean who is not only experienced and energetic, but also a strong leader and manager with close ties to both student services and academic affairs."

One of the things Quinley is noted for is her ability to work well with students.

"She constantly has students in her office," McGann said. "She works extremely well with them. She enjoys it very much."

Quinley said she likes hearing student input, and has developed close personal ties with many of the students she has worked closely with in the past three years. "I hope I will be able to have the same kind of contact with the students at UMass," she said.

Quinley said she is looking forward to coming to such a diverse and politically aware campus.

"UMass is a thrilling and exciting place to be," she said. "As somebody in the office pointed out the other day, I'm really psyched to start."

Quinley is responsible for a range of different programs at UConn, the most celebrated being the Huskie Ambassador program. It is staffed and run by student volunteers and is designed to personalize the admission process. The volunteers phone applicants and explain the university from the students' points of view and answer any questions about the school.

Co-presidents-elect assume office

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The Coordinating Committee, which takes on the responsibility of the Undergraduate Student Senate during the summer, voted on June 8 to allow co-presidents-elect Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff to hold the office of Student Government Association president.

Academic Affairs Committee Chairman Mark Wilkinson, a member of Coordinating Committee, made the proposal to recognize them as presidents.

The proposal stipulates the co-presidents-elect are to receive no pay, abstain from all Coordinating Committee and senatorial votes, and to have no signature power on financial accounts.

"There's true frustration on the part of coordinating committee members."
— Senate Speaker Robert Fadel

The co-presidents-elect will not officially hold the office until the senate approves the minutes of the Coordinating Committee, wherein the above proposal lies.

Public Policy Committee Chairman Michael Greiner said the structure of the Coordinating Committee's proposal allows the co-presidents-elect to take a leadership role in the SGA without bucking the senate's role of approving election results.

Speaker of the Senate Robert Fadel said the delays in the judicial system led to the decision to recognize the co-presidents-elect as the SGA presidents.

"There's true frustration on the part of Coordinating Committee members," Fadel said. Waiting to have a president has placed a burden on the treasurer, the speaker, and on the system, he said. "It's not working to its potential."

Last spring, former Attorney General Bill Collins had given his advisory opinion that the SGA constitution prohibited two people from holding the president's office. Nevertheless, the Governmental Affairs Committee placed Rabinowitz's and Silkoff's names on the ballot.

Rabinowitz and Silkoff won the election and Collins then requested an injunction to bar the co-presidents-elect from holding office.

The Student Judiciary held three hearings to determine the constitution's meaning. The first hearing, in which the injunction was upheld, was appealed and in the second hearing the justices decided a to have a de novo hearing, a third hearing held as if the case had never been heard.

In the third hearing, defendants Rabinowitz and Silkoff did not provide representation and called the court biased and unprofessional. The justices held the defendants in contempt and placed a restraining order against the senate to prevent the senate from approving the election results until the court could reconvene.

Greiner said the committee was forced into approving the motion because the students need leadership. He noted that many seats on University committees have remained empty because of lack of leadership.

Fadel said controversy may spark this fall because Chapter 1 in the SGA bylaws is vague. He noted the motion sparked debate in the committee. Coordinating Committee minutes report that five members abstained, none voted opposed, and six voted in favor of the motion. The committee hasn't yet approved their minutes.

The bylaws give the committee power to take on the senate's duties during the summer and intercession, although some exceptions exist.

Opponents of the Rabinowitz/Silkoff ticket say the committee has no power to approve elections. But Greiner said the committee's action does not defy the bylaws.

By placing restrictions on the power of the co-presidents-elect, Fadel said, "They made it a more responsible motion."

However, former SGA Senator Bob McDevitt said, "This is nothing short of a political coup. It's so dangerous for democracy. I'm not saying they don't have a valid argument but we have a process."

When the senate reconvenes Sept. 28, it will face the task of clarifying the cloudiness surrounding this on-going battle.

SGA presidential candidate Aram Hamparian and Collins could not be reached for comment.

Graffiti found on fraternity fence

Delta Upsilon fraternity was vandalized last week, infuriating members who speculate the job was done by feminists.

The graffiti, which reads "Dismember the Boys Club," was discovered on a fence last Tuesday by fraternity President Michael Acker.

Acker said the slogan was identical to one used last April by protesters of DU's failed bikini contest. The contest, a fundraiser for the Jimmy Fund, was cancelled when the sponsor, Miller Lite Corp., pulled its support after protesters vowed to boycott the club where it was held.

Objectors to the contest said it gave public sanction to "oogling and girl watching." The contest received further publicity when sexologist Roger Libby, who was let go from the UMass faculty because of his liberal views on sex, agreed to host the event. Libby later said that feminists protesting the contest "could not distinguish between that which is sexist and that which is sexy."

"We're kind of shocked and disgusted," Acker said of the graffiti, which he reported to the campus police and the Everywoman's Center. "It's incredible that people feel they have to cram their ideology down your throat with vandalism."

Acker said the fraternity will eventually paint over the message. He added that it is receiving full cooperation of the Everywomen's Center in tracking down the vandals.

Linkage bill is pending state senate approval

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts child care advocates have conquered another obstacle, but legislators warn there are many more to come.

The Child Care Linkage Bill has passed through the House Ways and Means Committee but is saddled with several new amendments that may defeat the bill's purpose, said Kate Mehr, an aide to State Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst.

"We think the amendments added by House Ways and Means shouldn't be on the linkage bill," Mehr said. "We've never sold the bill as an end-all to the job crisis."

One amendment allows a rental deduction to employers providing child care facilities, because they are unable to use the space for offices.

A Dependent Care Assistant Program (DECAP) amendment was also added. It allots a 100-percent tax deduction plus 10 percent tax credit to anyone providing child care assistance to children under eleven years old. Additional technical changes were also included in the amendments.

"Employers can already deduct operational expenses for the facilities," Mehr said. He added that tax incentives are unnecessary.

If passed into law, the bill would require all businesses and industries that construct buildings more than 50,000 square feet to provide child care facilities inside or in a nearby facility other than the place of business. The funding for the facilities is entirely the responsibility of the employer.

"One of the bill's strong points is that it's not going to cost the state a lot of money. The amendments should be on another piece of legislature," she said.

The bill is pending review by the Senate Ways and Means Committee. "It's very exciting. Senator Olver is on the Senate Ways and Means and is Chair of Taxation. We hope he can help get rid of the tax incentives," Mehr said.

"There is not enough child care in Massachusetts and we're hoping to push the bill through," she said.

Mehr said the bill is expected to be reviewed by Senate Ways and Means early this fall.

New campaign issue: day care

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

First in a two-part series

Child care has became a major issue in the presidential campaign, with both George Bush and Michael Dukakis presenting child-care proposals that may swing votes in November.

In a press conference at the University of Massachusetts last week, Dukakis reinforced his stand on national child care.

Dukakis said if elected president he would support the federal Act for Better Child Care Services (ABC bill) to bring improved child care to American families.

"We need a national day care partnership," Dukakis said.

According to a Massachusetts State House release, the ABC bill will provide $2.5 billion in federal aid to expand and improve state child care systems.

If the bill is enacted, Massachusetts stands to gain $33.3 million in federal assistance, paving the way for a 30 percent increase in state child care spending.

States receiving federal child care monies must comply with guidelines incorporated by the federal government regarding regulatory enforcement and training.

If passed into law, the act will be administered by two federal offices. A Child Care Administrator will supervise, coordinate federal funds, declare regulations and cite approval of state child care plans.

A National Advisory Committee on Child Care Standards will design the minimum standards for all centers and family day care homes, whether or not they receive federal aid funds. The committee will exist only in the Act's first year and enforcement of the standards will be left to the administrator, aided by participating states.

Dukakis criticized Republican party nominee Vice President George Bush's child care proposal, which would allow families to deduct $1,000 per year in taxes for every child under four years old involved in a day care program.

Dukakis called the plan a kind of "financial kukoo." He said the plan lacked guidelines and standards and that only wealthy families will be able to benefit from it.

The ABC bill was introduced in November of 1987 and is currently pending in Congress.

LBGA offers friends, community and a safe haven

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

"Sneak up and take a peak," said Amarin Falk, president of the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance, "somebody from your dorm, dinning commons or one of your classes is going to be there."

"It can be intimidating just to walk into the office," she said, "but once you are there you open yourself to a great community."

"You're not alone," said Falk, "people just have to step foot in the office to find that there are thousands of us."

"There are people there who can answer your questions," said Adam, a UMass sophomore who asked that his last name not be used. "When I came in September of my freshman year I went to the Student Union and walked into the office. I just sat down and talked to the people there. Now they are all my friends," he said.

"I was always pretty sure of my sexuality and happy with myself," he said "but for other people who aren't sure of themselves the LBGA provides a place for help."

The LBGA, located on the second floor of the Student Union is "open to anyone in the University community who expresses good will towards lesbians, bisexuals, and gays," according to its brochure.

The purposes of the orgnization, according to its brochure, include:

- To provide an opportunity for lesbians, bisexuals, and gays to develop a positive self-concept;
- To establish good fellowship among members;
- To dispel the myths concerning homosexuality and bisexuality within the area community;
- To help establish respect for the lesbian, bisexual, and gay community within the area community;
- To provide an opportunity for discussion of current issues and interests of the lesbian, bisexual, and gay community;
- To advocate and lobby for passage of a national gay rights bill;
- To advocate and lobby for passage of the Massachusetts Gay Rights bill currently pending in the Legislature;
- To advocate and lobby for appropriate funding levels for AIDS research, education, and health care;
- To combat discrimination on the bases of sex, sexual orientation, race, age, creed or physical ability wherever it is are perceived to exist.

In addition to support offered during scheduled hours in the LBGA office, the alliance offers dances, weekly workshops and rap groups, intercollegiate weekend exchanges between lesbian, bisexual, and gay student organizations; movies, and weekly coffee socials.

The coffee socials offer "time for anyone who wants to chat, have a good time, and meet with friends," Adam said. "We also have some of the best dances on campus."

"Most of the people there (in the LBGA) are gays, lesbians, or bisexuals, but there are heterosexual people in the LBGA as friends and allies, and anyone is welcome," he said.

"For me, (the LBGA) really provides a safe place that I can go and just not worry about who I am. It's also a place to find friends to talk to," he said.

Eating disorders, a road toward recovery

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

"I gained fifteen pounds my first semester," said a University of Massachusetts sophomore, "I guess that's not unusual, but I really felt out of control. All I thought about was food and how fat I was getting."

"Susan", who asked that her real name not be used, said she often felt helpless and unsure about where to turn for help.

"I kept telling myself I didn't really have a problem and that I could handle this on my own," she said.

According to national statistics, the number of college students with eating disorders ranges from 2 to 20 percent. Of approximately 26,000 students on campus, 500 to 5000 UMass students may have some kind of eating disorder.

Campus services have risen to support students with eating disorders, providing medical help, individual and group counseling, referrals, workshops, books and brochures.

UMass Health Services, located near the Central Residential area, offers several choices to students concerned about eating habits, weight, or physical symptoms.

"You don't have to be 100 percent sure you have a problem to ask for help," said Robin Levine, a nutritionist at the University Health Center. "You don't have to wait till it's terrible," she said.

An eating disorder "is something that can be helped," Levine said, "you don't have to figure it out alone."

Where you go first depends on how you are feeling and what your specific concerns are, Levine said.

"If someone is experiencing medical problems, they might want to see a physician. If they're feeling depressed or helpless or isolated, then a counselor is a good place to start," she said.

If students are not experiencing any physical symptoms, and are unable to identify what might be wrong emotionally, but feel caught in a bad eating pattern, they might consider seeing a nutritionist, Levine said. "Ultimately, you should go to the place you feel most comfortable," she said.

Levine, who is a member of the Eating Disorders Network developed to assess problems on campus, has helped to establish a drop-in group session at Health Services.

Each session is introduced by one of two movies available; "Why Diets Don't Work," or "Fear of Fat," and will be followed by a discussion. The group is facilitated by a nutritionist and a therapist.

The drop-in group is offered to all students and is open to people who have concerns about their own eating habits as well as others'.

Beginning Sept. 15, the drop-in group will be offered on the third Thursday of every month, from 4 to 5 p.m. in Room 302 at Health Services.

In addition, Health Services offers individual appointments with physicians, nutritionists, and counselors through Mental Health Services. All services are confidential and free to UMass students.

Other services offered on campus include: the Center for Counseling and Academic Development (CCAD), which offers free general counseling to all students and often works in conjunction with Health Education; and the Psychological Services Center at Tobin, which offers counseling services to students on a sliding scale basis.

The Everywoman's Center in Wilder Hall also offers a variety of services including a Resource Referral Program, a lending library with a specific bibliography on eating disorders, a resource file of articles and brochures, and in the past has offered individual and group therapy.

The Counseling Program at the Everywoman's Center is not currently offering any therapy in-house, but hopes to reinstate the program when budget issues are resolved.

The center's Resource and Referral Program offers an extensive list of private practice therapists in the area as well as a listing of groups and organizations that offer help specifically to people with eating disorders.

The following is a list of some of those organizations:

The Massachusetts Nutritional Resource Center, which offers a Nutrition Hotline, 1-800-322-7302 and a 24-hour hotline 1-800-762-3334.

The Bulimia/Anorexia self-help Hotline is 1-800-227-4785.

Overeater's Anonymous, locally based in Springfield can be reached at (413) 783-4198 and offers a weekly meeting on Sundays at 7:30 p.m. at the First Congregational Church on Main Street in Amherst.

The Anorexia/Bulimia Care Organization in Boston emphasizes quick response and is staffed by people recovering from eating disorders.

Circle of Friends, in East Hampton, offers ongoing group and individual therapy. Contact: Judy Somer-Doyle at (413) 527-7458.

Suit against university officials clears first hurdle

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

A suit filed by three student groups against University of Massachusetts officials cleared its first hurdle this July when a Hampshire Probate Court judge denied an attempt to have the case dismissed.

The defendants asked the court to dismiss the case on the principle of "sovereign immunity," arguing the state cannot be sued unless it consents to the action. Because the attempt failed, the case can now proceed.

The complaint against the officials was filed Oct. 10, last year by the Student Government Association, the Graduate Student Senate, and the Board of Governors against The Board of Trustees, UMass President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Treasurer Robert Brand, and up to 100 unidentified individuals.

The complaint accuses the defendants of creating a "slush fund" with money received from interest earned on three student trust funds, and using it "to pay unauthorized perquisite expenses such as travel, non-budgeted staff salaries and other items."

Some of the other items include tickets for the Boston Red Sox and memberships at private luncheon clubs.

The trust funds involved in the suit are the Student Activities Trust Fund, the Graduate Student Trust Fund, and the Campus Center Trust Fund.

According to state law, all interest from a trust fund must be returned to its beneficiary. The students are contending that has not been happening with these trust funds, the only three that list students as beneficiaries of the 122 at the three UMass campuses.

The students are asking all past, present and future interest collected from the funds, starting at their inception, be returned to the students, and that a person be appointed to administer the funds. As it stands now, the president's office is in charge of all the trust funds.

Interest from the 122 trust funds is funnelled back into two or three bank accounts, from which the president's office assigns the chancellor's office a lump of the money.

That money is supposed to be used at the chancellor's discretion within guidelines established by the trustees. The guidelines say the money is to be used for entertaining dignitaries and staff recognition, Duffey said.

"That interest should be available for a variety of uses that state funds aren't appropriated for," Duffey said. Some of those uses are staff recognition, funding for student activities, and student travel, he said.

The problem with this case is to separate the three trust funds in question from the other 119 in the pot, Duffey said.

Harry Miles, an attorney for the students, said the most tedious part of the case is the separation of documents. "This is a massive, massive document case. That is going to be the most time consuming," he said.

Peter Ellis, an attorney for the defendants, said the case is very clear cut.

"The way in which the money has been used is proper and has been publicly disclosed for many years," he said.

Duffey said, "There isn't a right or a wrong side to this. It is a good thing for the courts to decide."

Th address and phone number in the note were found to be non-existent. Brosky declined comment on the suit, and Marshall could not be reached.

The suit alleges Brosky handed Marshall this note during a class and told her to read it after class, and then come to his office. Brosky was not instructing the class but had instructed Marshall in two previous classes.

Marshall was so affected by the note, according to the suit, that for the following week "she attended classes only sporadically, due to her fear of seeing, or being seen by, Mr. Brosky."

Marshall filed a complaint with the Affirmative Action Office at UMass Feb. 26 and received a hearing April 7. The hearing panel determined campus sexual harassment policies had been violated, and sent Brosky a "letter of concern."

Zaida Giraldo, associate vice chancellor for Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity, said Chancellor Joseph Duffey also sent a letter of reprimand to Brosky.

When asked how many letters he had received, Brosky said "I don't remember."

Giraldo said, "The involvement of this office was that Wendy completed the hearing process up to the appeal."

Booth, however, speaking for Marshall said this was "not sufficient redress for her.

"Wendy seeks an action that reflects an attitude of taking this kind of complaint seriously," Booth said. "This case is based on the relationship of trust that may have been violated."

Booth, who is with the firm of Burres, Fidnick and Sheppard, could offer no speculation on when the case would come to trial.

Attorney Sarah Gibson, of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, is representing Brosky. "We're trying to talk to the attorney for Wendy Marshall and settle the case. We're taking the position that what occurred is not sexual harassment and that will be the essence of my defense," Gibson said.

She said Brosky and the University have separate lawyers so that the interest of each is better represented.

Sid Myers, attorney for the University, was on vacation at press time and could not be reached for comment.

New kids on block hear lecture

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Jumping river-like puddles, new students poured into Curry Hicks Cage Monday night to hear administrators and professors boost spirits and promote cultural diversity.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson told students at the New Students' Convocation that they had the decade's highest average SAT scores at the University of Massachusetts.

Associate Journalism Professor Madeleine Blais said, "I'm impressed. By you. I hope that in the next few weeks if any of your upperclassmen condescend to you because you are mere freshmen you immediately inform them of your superiority."

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said there is no way to prepare students for what they are going to experience at UMass.

Applause roared when Duffey said, "You may feel like Quayle when he was about to be questioned by Sam Donaldson."

In a such a large and diverse community, he said, students have to make the University work for them; they don't get pampered. With opportunity comes responsibility, he said.

The energy at UMass in the Amherst rural setting gets a lot of attention because as a public university tax payers feel they should monitor what happens, Duffey said.

"Here you're going to find that your reputation and the reputation of this University are intertwined," Duffey said.

Lori Edmonds, a representative of the Third World Caucus in the Undergraduate Student Senate said, "We begin to understand ourselves by understanding those around us."

Blais, a Pulitzer Prize winner for feature writing, said she could not determine what each student will gain from UMass but offered a few ways to enhance the new students' experience. Her speech was filled with colorful anecdotes drawn from her experience at college, UMass, and the Pioneer Valley.

While in college, "I screwed up my courage and walked across campus and offered to write an article or two for the campus weekly," Blais said. "At the time I fancied myself a future poet, though all my poems seemed to have the same beginning 'Oh bittersweet honeysuckle,' for which no rhyme readily suggested itself, except the clunker 'brushing against my belt buckle.'"

Sweedish Co. gets UMass phone contract

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts will pay a Swedish company $29.5 million for a new telecommunications system, if all goes according to plan.

The contract with Ericsson Information Systems is scheduled to be signed next Wednesday. The Swedish firm was the low bidder in a competitive contract process that sparked some controversy.

A student fee will help pay for the system, according to student trustee Stephanie Orefice, who voted in favor of awarding the contract to Ericsson after some initial opposition.

Orefice said she decided to support the bill when other trustees agreed to a cap any fee at $170 a year.

"I guess they were really concerned that the student support was going to be lacking," Orefice said. "From now on, the student trustee or their representative will be right there at all the negotiations for us."

Orefice said some trustees were upset because a foreign company won the contract. Nynex Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary of Wang Laboratories Inc. was another low bidder, as was Northern Telecom of Ontario, Canada.

Northern Telecom was represented during the bidding by Thomas O'Neill 3rd, former lieutenant governor of Massachusetts.

Trustee Lawrence S. DiCara was quoted in the Boston Globe as saying he voted against the contract because "as a matter of policy I don't like to see contracts go to out-of-state firms."

DiCara said, "There has been a lot of controversy around the contract but [Chancellor Joseph] Duffey needs it."

Orefice said the University had no choice but to take Ericsson's bid.

"Legally we were bound to the lowest bidder," she said. "I don't think everyone was comfortable with that."

But while the contract came under some dispute, no one argued any system was needed.

Shari Silkoff, who was elected to the co-presidency of the Student Government Association last spring, said the number of outside lines from campus has decreased even more recently.

Silkoff said construction workers digging up old lines on campus have been removing them.

"People were in favor of the upgrade because our system now is so antiquated it's ridiculous," she said. She attributed the present faulty system to the boom in student population and building during the 1950s and 60s.

"They did whatever they had to do to accommodate the people," she said. "Now we're having to pay the difference."

The new system should introduce push-button phones, modem hook-ups for personal computers from dorm rooms, and the eventual possibility for students to register for classes, as well as add and drop, by phone.

Board finds time for work during summer

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

While most students were home during the summer, members of the Board of Governors were on campus working on projects like improving the Hatch bar, making the complex more handicap-accessible, and evaluating board and administration policies and plans.

Eric Nakajima, chairperson of the BOG, said although the entire summer board, which is paid for their efforts, met only three times, individually they accomplished quite a lot.

Nakajima said of the renovations to the Hatch bar, "This is something Dan Collins [former BOG treasurer] initiated and Theresa Rodrigues [UMass student] designed and which the summer board followed through on."

Said Nakajima: "The latticework divider has been removed and will be replaced by something more tasteful."

A new, 12 X 24 moveable stage was purchased. "The one before was becoming decrepit to the point where it was dangerous," Nakajima said of the old stage.

He also said 300 new chairs had been added, and the room had been painted light gray and cranberry. "It looks very nice," Nakajima said.

"Sharon Dittmar worked very hard on getting the Campus Center to follow through on the problems with handicap accessibility in the complex," Nakajima said.

Nakajima said stairs in the Student Union were painted a bright yellow to aid the visually impaired, and some bathroom and door fixtures which did not conform with the needs of the handicapped were replaced.

Nakajima also said the complex had also purchased a TTY, or Teletypewriter. This device will be placed in the Campus Center Informaton Booth on the concourse. It allows persons with hearing problems to receive a readout of what someone at the other end of the line is saying.

Nakajima said the TTY would be installed as soon as a plexiglass security case was installed at the information desk so the device would not be stolen.

In addition, a closed-caption decipherer would be installed in one of the TVs in the Campus Center, also to aid those with hearing problems, Nakajima said.

He added there was also a problem with the steep grade of the handicap ramp on the west entrance to the Campus Center.

"We believe, and have gotten some positive feedback from Campus Center administration in terms of improving the gradation," Nakajima said.

"Sharon Dittmar was instrumental, she's done an outstanding job," Nakajima said.

Nakajima said some problems still remained, however, such as the lack of handles and braille type on elevators in the complex.

Another project, to compile and evaluate the renovation projects to be done by the Campus Center, was

SAO director dies

Randy Donant, Student Activities Office director at the University of Massachusetts, died on Sunday, August 28 at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Donant, who was pressured by Student Government Association members to resign last year, had headed student activities for about 10 years. He had taken a leave of absence, and his resignation would only be effective this semester.

"He was an expert in student development, and he brought us that," said Judy Gagnon, SAO's activties coordinator, last week.

Although Donant engaged in many scuffles with student leaders, he truly cared for the students, Gagnon said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey commended Donant last week for what the chancellor called a professional job while with student activities.

"He did his job well; it was not an easy job," Duffey said.

Donant had been a graduate intern in housing and activities and a program conselor in student development at the California Polytechnical Institute in San Luis Obispo, Calif. He taught in the Los Angeles County School district.

He earned his bachelor's degree and teaching credentials at the University of California and his master's degree from the Polytechnical Institute.

Born in Oklahoma City, Okla., Donant was the coordinator of the Valley Gay Alliance. He lived in Shutesbury since 1981 and was a member of the Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst.

Donant survives by a friend, Greg Siebert of Shutesbury; his parents, Franklyn and Elizabeth Donant of Pasadena, Calif.; and a sister, Lisa Blecker of Temple City, Calif.

"To see death of a relatively young professional, especially someone you know, is kind of a shock," said Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs.

Said Duffey: "His friends will miss him, and the institution as well."

UMass music professor to receive fellowship

Max Roach, jazz percussionist and professor in the University of Massachusetts Music Department, has been awarded a $372,000 fellowship by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation of Chicago.

Roach, 64, a well-known composer, will receive the money over the next five years. He is one of 31 recipients around the country.

Roach is credited with helping to pionneer the beebop style of jazz in the 1940s.

Officer quits and criticizes department

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

The University assistant police chief quit recently, leveling harsh criticism at Arthur Hilson, police chief and executive director of public safety.

Joyce, who spent 22 years on the UMass police force, was chief of police from 1974 until last year, when Hilson took on the title.

Joyce's resignation is effective Saturday. When he announced he was leaving late last month, he issued a letter blasting recent upheavals in the police department.

When long-time Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil stepped down early in 1987, Hilson, then director of placement services, took on the job on an interim basis, and was later appointed permanent director.

Joyce said "terrible" changes had been made to the department since Hilson took over.

Officers have been "the subject of unfair and unjustifiable allegations, offices moved, offices shared with junior officers, promises made and then never acted upon, shuffled, reshuffled, and I could go on and one," Joyce wrote.

Joyce also said that Hilson, who had little law enforcement experience, was not qualified to run the department.

"The men and women of the department of Public Safety need an experienced police professional to call the shots," he wrote.

At the time Joyce's letter was released, Hilson said it was "unfortunate" Joyce was quitting, and his resignation was "our loss."

"He has given a lot of service to this department, to the campus community and the community at large," Hilson said.

undertaken by Jon Levine.

Levine looked at the upcoming building projects the complex administration plans to undertake, for the purpose of evaluating them in terms of student need.

"There are areas that are of higher priority to students than to the administration, such as the Student Union ballroom," Nakajima said. "These are things that we need to work on."

Other projects included board member Christina Bolton working on a recycling program with Roger Cherewatti of the Physical Plant and Dudley Bridges of the Campus Center; and Caroline Miraglia composing a history of the board and reorganizing board files.

One of the projects intended to make things run smoother this semester is a comprehensive revision and update of by-laws and policies passed in board meetings that may not have been used because no one knew they existed.

"My philosophy is that for the board to be effective we must be able to marshal evidence to specific needs that the students have and present them to the Campus Center administration that is both responsible to both the needs of a large and diverse community and a business," Nakijima said.

As for plans for the BOG for the upcoming semester, Nakajima said he would like to reinvolve the board in the budgets process of the complex, something he said they have neglected in the past few years.

More importantly, Nakajima would like to rededicate the Campus Center administration to some of the programs the board feels are important, such as "seeing the student perspective in a clearer light. I don't mean it in a malicious way, but they don't always have time to sit down and think about what's best for the students," Nakijima said.

Comics not just for little kids anymore

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Special to the Collegian

Because many of you are now entering college life, you may decide that this is a good time to give up the childish habits of your carefree high school years; no more watching "Who's the Boss," listening to David Lee Roth or keeping track of "Days of Our Lives".

Or you just may decide that you don't care what other people think.

And so it is with me and comics. I tried for years to curb my habit until I finally decided that I was denying myself some good fun. I mean, I like superheroes. I like words and pictures working together.

Best of all, I realized that comics didn't always require a five-year-old mentality. Over the past 20 years, comics have been aimed for a progressively older age group. Where the average comics reader used to be about twelve, he (Yeah, it's still a he; some things don't change) is now in his early twenties.

Comics now embrace a whole world of themes. Adolescent male power fantasies are still the rage (God, I love 'em), but people interested in avant-garde, science fiction, romance, sex and humor will find something in their interest if they keep looking. There are even beginning to be a number of comics aimed at women!

If you want to check out the new comics scene, though, you probably won't find it at the drugstore. As comics have become more "adult," more specialized and more expensive, they have found a new home in the comics specialty store. These are the places to go to find the really interesting stuff.

Here in the Five College area, the best place to go is Same Bat Time Comics in the Hampshire Mall. Another great place to buy comics is Main St. Records in Northampton. It's selection isn't as large as the others, but it's the best place to go for the really underground stuff.

You might find the prospect of hunting for comics a little bewildering though. Great covers often hide bad comics, and some of the best comics often look weird when seated on the shelf.

The best thing you can do is ask the advice of a friend who likes comics. If you can't do that, then ask someone at a specialty store to help you. A good idea is to come in on a slow day (Monday to Thursday) so that they'll be free to help you.

Don't be afraid to ask. These sales people are usually fans themselves and will gladly share their knowledge to you. Just be sure to have in mind what you'd like to see, and don't let their enthusiasm make you buy something you don't like. If you'd rather not ask anyone, you'll find that stores often keep a list of "recommended" titles to their shoppers.

Another thing that's good to be aware of are graphic novels, also known as "graphic albums," "illustrated novels," and other names. These are simply long comic books with paperback covers and a glued spine. Though much more expensive than comics, they are usually of higher quality paper and contain better stories. A lot of the best comic books are collected into graphic novels.

To help you get started, I've composed a personal "top ten" list of comic book writers and artists to look at. I'm featuring comics creators instead of comics on the list because while the quality and poularity of comic titles vary, the quality of top artist and writers remains more consistent. Many comics fans now look for a "Frank Miller" comic instead of a "Batman" comic.

You probably won't like all the artists listed here; I myself dont' care for a few of them. But they are all both acclaimed and popular and they represent a good variety of different styles.

Carl Barks. A lot of the most popular comics are reprints of favorite classics, especially the Donald Duck Comics of Carl Barks. Barks' adventures of Donald, his

The Blob was Big, and so were these other films

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

What would our summers be without the joy of sitting in a cement box with broken seats and stale popcorn? Pretty dismal, because there's nothing better than a good flick after a hard day at work or the beach. This summer season featured many quality offerings and surprising diversity, too. So without further ado, here's a look at ten of the best that's come out on celluloid, in alphabetical order to make it simple.

Bambi. What better film to start with than the most traumatic children's film ever made? Disney's masterpiece features that killer line, "your mother can no longer be with you." Gasp. It still gets me. It's a crime if you missed the stunning animation and memorable characters that first delighted kids in 1942.

Big. This sweet fantasy concerns a boy who wishes he were 'big' to a carnival machine and wakes up in the large form of Tom Hanks. Fleeing to the adult world of the city, he gets a job, becomes involved with Elizabeth Perkins, and almost forgets how old he really is, until his childhood pal (Jared Rushton) puts him in his place. Hanks proves himself an actor of considerable range, always revealing innocence just below the surface, and the script by Gary Ross and Anne Spielberg (Steve's sis) avoids cliches and makes this the best of the role-switching movies we've seen too much of.

The Blob. Thirty years later, this remake tops the original. If you don't know the plot, forget it. The best improvement is in our favorite ooze itself, devouring victims in more witty and grotesque ways nephews, and Uncle Scrooge (a Barks' original creation) have made Donald Duck comics perhaps the longest-running cult in comics history, as well as inspring the TV show, "Ducktales." Titles: Any quality Donald Duck or Uncle Scrooge Comic. Look for Barks' name inside.

John Byrne. Possibly the most popular artist in the field. Byrne's ability to take the concept of "heightened reality" to new heights has made him the number one superhero artist in the field. As writer and artist, he has a reputation of taking on daring new projects — and dropping them quickly.

Titles: Byrne just stopped his highly publicized work or "Superman" and is probably on to some new project. Some of his Superman work can be seen in the paperback reprint, "The Man of Steel" and in other graphic novels.

Chris Claremont. The writer of the '80's most popular comic, "The X-Men," Claremont has introduced a new kind of superhero, stressing elements of youth and adolescent isolation that many young readers can identify with. A clever plotter, he's possibly the most copied comic writer around. Titles: "X-Men," "X-Caliber" and various graphic novels and reprints.

Robert Crumb. The most famous of the "underground" cartoonists of the late '60's and early '70's, Crumb has been called a master satirist, a great illustrator, a chauvinist pig, a sexual pervert and an eternal malcontent. Actually, he's all these things. His bizarre, introspective comics have earned him both many enemies and a cult following that may last well into the next century. His work has appreared in countless titles, most notably "Zap!" and most recently "Hup."

Jaime and Gilbert Hernandez. Two brothers from southern California whose magazine "Love and Rockets" has received praise from Rolling Stone magazine and inspired the name of the band. Jaime's stories of young women rockers in LA's barrio have made him the most certifiably hip cartoonist around, while Gilbert's stories of a small South American Village have won him great praise. Aside from "L&R," the brothers' work can be seen in the books "Mechanix"(Jaime) and "Heartbreak Soup" (Gilbert).

Frank Miller. Miller set the comic book world on fire with "The Dark Knight" comic and graphic novel, depicting the desperate attempts of a 55-year old Batman to stop crime in a punk-oriented Gotham City. Miller's dramatic use of action and violence has earned him a reputation as the Sam Peckinpah of comics, but he's also one of the most intelligent artist and scripters around. Aside from "The Dark Knight," Miller's work can be seen in "Batman: Year One," "Daredevil" reprints and "Ronin."

Alan Moore. An English scriptwriter with a remarkable ear for American speech, Moore has written intricately woven tales that add a distrubing amount of depth to superhero and super natural characters. His superheroes become so real that they seem tragic. His works include "Watchmen," a landmark book on superheroes, "Swamp Thing"graphic novel, "Miracleman" and "V for Vendetta."

Art Spiegelman. The acclaimed author of "Maus: A Survivor's Tale" has had his work praised in the New York Times Review of Books, and is also the co-editor of the avant-garde comic book "Raw." He is perhaps the best known and most honored of the comic book creators. He also designs the Garbage Pail Kids! He uses a simple, but highly realistic style.

Dave Stevens. Also praised by the New York Times Review of Books, Steven's art and stories hark back to the late '30's era of pin up girls and movie serials, but are written and drawn with far more style and an eye for realism. His talent for drawing sexy "good girls" has made him a popular poster artist. Aside from the book and comic "The Rocketeer," Stevens has made many posters available in comic stores.

Harvey Pekar. A real maverick of the comics, Pekar, in his own words, holds "a steady civil service gig" in Cleveland. In his spare time, he writes an autobiographical comic book called "American Splendor," which he publishes once a year. Drawn by a variety of artists, Pekar's stories are small, low-key slices of life. He's been on the David Letterman show many times.

Folk dancers to perform

The Crescent Dancers, a seven member dance troupe, will demonstrate the transformation from religious ritual into modern "belly dancing" at the Center for the Arts in Northampton, at 8 p.m. on Saturday, September 24.

"Belidi" dancing, as it is known, has been in existence for over seven thousand years, and can be traced to ancient fertility rites. Originally used to honor the gods, and to ask for prosperity, it spread through Europe and Africa, thanks to the Gypsies. As it spread, the meaning changed: in Northern Africa, it was used to ease labor pains.

During the show, the dancers will perform interpretations of the ancient rituals, modern Turkish dances, including the birth dance, the veil dance and the goddess dance, which features a boa constrictor.

Featured in the program are Turkish folk dancers Tracy and Ahmet Leluci, and Middle Eastern storyteller Mara Capy.

Admission is $6. For more information, call the Center at 584-7327, weekdays between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Internships offered this fall semester

By JENNIFER DEMPSEY
Collegian Staff

Attention arts, communications and marketing majors — eight internship positions for arts administration and management are available this fall at UMass.

But the Arts Extension Service of the Division of Continuing Education will offer the positions to any student in the five-college area who is interested in program development, marketing and advocacy of the arts, said Vanessa Kam, resource coordinator for the program.

"The program gives you a sense of how arts organizations work," she said. "Arts management is many things."

Interns will work with one staff member to coordinate projects for arts organizations, work on arts publications and will learn how to implement art programs, she said.

The internship program has received many awards, she said, including the National University and College Extension Association for creative programming in continuining education.

And former interns, she said, have gone to jobs at the National Endowment for the Arts, Affiliate Artists of New York City, Young Audiences of Boston and the Connecticut Commission on the Arts.

"We've really established ourselves over the years," Kam said.

The interns, who will begin "as soon as they get set up" through Curry Hicks, will do the majority of their work from the Goodell Building, she said.

And the hours of the internships are flexible according to the staff members and the intern.

"One staff member will be overseeing the intern, reporting and evaluating them," Kam said. Credits for the internships are available and must be arranged through Curry Hicks, she said.

"The minimum requirement for any position is 10 hours per week," Kam said. "The maximum is 20 hours per week. We make it very flexible about when they come in."

Kam said two meetings are planned for an overview of the program on September 8th and 3th in Goodell 604. For more information, students should call 545-2360.

WMUA program has old favorites, new deejays

Old students may leave and new students may arrive, but WMUA stays on the air 365 days a year.

WMUA is the official radio station of the University of Massachusetts and can be found at 91.1 on the FM dial 24 hours a day.

Well, it's been a fun summer, but now it's time to strt preparing for the fall schedule. We have many carry-overs from last semester, a handful of new radio stars and a few veterans that are heading out to pasture.

After 10 years on WMUA, Jim McD is finally letting the "Soul Furnace" cool. It will surely be missed by a great many people around the area.

Meredith Gottesman's "Death Trip" has also reached it's final destination along with Jim Neill's "Terpsichorean Caucophony."

Other shows not returning include "Stolen Moments," "Playing Dixie" and "The Toejam."

The rookies for the fall are more than ready to become the new regulars and we have no shortage of them. Keep a listen out for Joe Ferguson and his "Psychadelicatessen," Rio Gabriel's "Rio Jam" and many others.

Speaking of regulars, "The Mal Thursday Show," "All That Jazz" and "Now's The Time" will all be back over the airwaves, as will a host of others you've come to know and love.

If you think you have what it takes to become a driving force in college radio, or even if you don't, come to the first WMUA new member meeting which will be held at 7 p.m. on September 12. The room will be announced, so keep checking the Collegian.

If you're interested in becoming a listener, that's even easier. Turn on your radio and keep an eye on your mailbox for the WMUA Fall Program Guide, which should be out before too long.

Have a great semester and if you're in the neighborhood, come by and check out the WMUA studios at 102 Campus Center and meet the 1988 Fall semester executive board: Station manager - Alan Kapilian; Chairman - Scott Lever; Engineer - Steven Svoboda; Program Director - Phil Straub

Play celebrates Linder

The story of Benjamin Linder, the American engineer killed by Contras forces in April of 1987, will be brought to the University of Massachusetts this Friday.

"Quien Vive/Who Lives" follows the life and death of the 27-year-old who was shot to death while building a hydroelectric generator in a remote Nicaraguan village.

It is brought to the stage by Antioch Theater, an experimental college theater troupe out of Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Through his letters home, interviews with his family and transcripts from a Congressional hearing, the six women players act, re-enact, sing and read poetry to tell Linder's story.

Sponsored by the New World Theater, the Hampshire College Theater Program, and the MacArthur Fund, the play will stop at Bowker Auditorium this Friday at 8 p.m. as it moves across the country on a national tour.

All proceeds from the show will be donated to Technica and Necessidades, two volunteer groups aimed at helping civilians of Nicaragua. Tickets for "Quien Vive/Who Lives" are $5 for the public, $3 for students and can be obtained at the Fine Arts Center Box Office at UMass.

Any couch potato's guide to renting videos

By THOMAS HARINGTON
Special to the Collegian

Guides to videos are easy to find. They're movie reviews with the benefit of one year or more retrospect. Guides to video rental stores are unfortunately nonexistent. This is too bad because it's the store that presents the problem for most people. Nothing in our collective upbringing could prepare us for the task of deciding which among 1000 movies we actually feel like watching. And the confusion increases geometrically with the number of people trying to reach an agreement.

Here, then, is a simple outline of your average video store.

THE BUILDING: It wasn't always like this, you know. Behind the big letters that say "Video Mart" you can still make out the faded remnants of "Pop's Variety" or "Lou's Gas." The interior, if well done, resembles a cross between a clean magazine stand and a fast food restaurant. If it is not well done, it looks like whatever store it had been before it was converted. Poor-looking stores cleverly compensate for their unsightliness by plastering themselves with posters advertising new releases by Charles Bronson and James Caan.

THE OWNERS: As often as not, they have been the owners of the failed business that the video store replaced. As such, they hold a deep resentment toward videos, which they do not like anyway. The only thing they dislike more than videos is you. They look upon customers as whining gremlins who ask difficult questions and refuse to rewind tapes. Do not ask them for recommendations. They will try to get you to rent one of their stagnating copies of "Bobo."

GENRES: Practically all video stores are divided into helpful little sections like "Action," "Comedy" and "Drama." This, of course, does not mean that the videos are divided among these categories in any kind of reasonable or coherent way, but it does give a pleasant illusion of organization.

Video stores have a unique selection of comedies that is not available in any other medium. The covers usually feature horny boys spying on girls in bikinis holding hot dogs. These are accompanied by an uncredited blurb that compares it to some teen sex comedy that you've actually heard of ("Funnier than Porky's!" "If you liked Animal House, you'll love this!").

Action video covers show pictures of big angry guys with guns.

Dramas are boring and you will not rent them.

Horror videos are identical to comedy videos except that the girl on the cover is being split in two.

Adult video covers are kept in booklets full of pictures that are guaranteed to eradicate any kind of desire you might have had when you opened it. But don't let this stop you from renting one, because they are a fascinating experience. They are the ultimate proof that television can make anything look boring.

The only thing left to understand is CHOOSING A VIDEO. This is especially hard when you're choosing with someone else. In the case of loved ones, it can be particularly shocking. A quick stroll through a Vid Mart and your lover will reveal things about his/her personality that could otherwise take years of psychotherapy to uncover.

First of all, don't try to resolve a debate by renting a video apiece, because you know that you probably won't have time to watch more than one. This not only wastes money, it leads to a whole new argument when everybody tries to get their video played first.

The proper thing to do is to let your companion do the selecting. Then you can moan and complain about everything (s)he picks up until (s)he finally breaks down and picks something that (s)he knows you like.

Rock/art world loses one of its greatest

BY JODY GABIN
Collegian Correspondent

The art/rock world lost one of its greats this summer.

Nico, the part-time singer with the Velvet Underground and Andy Warhol protege, died suddenly of a cerebral hemorrage on July 18 at the age of 49.

Best known for her brief stint with the Velvet underground, Nico was born in Cologne, Germany where she began her career as a fashion model at age 14.

It was in New York, however, as one Warhol's infamous "superstars" that Nico truly made her mark.

Captivated by her unique features and vapid singing voice, Warhol created a vocal role for her in his "exploding plastic inevitable" show, featuring the house band, The Velvet Underground.

In 1967, Nico recorded her only album with VU, entitled "The Velvet Undergourand and Nico," singing Lou Reed's "Femme Fatale" and "All Tomorrow's Parties."

Later Nico went solo, releasing an album entitled "Chelsea Girl" — a colleciton of songs written by Bob Dylan, Lou Reed and Jackson Brown — in 1967. She recorded "The Marbel Index" in 1969, "Desertshore" in 1971 and "Camera Obscura" in 1985.

Police found Nico collapsed by the bike she had been riding in the mid-July heat in Spain. Her sudden death came as a shock not only to her fans, but to those who knew of her improved health conditions after kicking a heroin habit of many years.

The impact of Nico's style and singing on the art world has yet to be determined.

Looking for a few good voices . . . the Pioneer Valley Cappella that is.

The 16-member Pioneer Valley Capella ensemble performs Renaissance and 20th century music has openings for a bass, a tenor, a counter-tenor and a soprano.

Interested singers are invited to attend open rehearsals on Sept. 8 and 15 at 7:30 p.m. at the Helen Hills Chapel.

For more information call director Stanley Charkey at 254-9193.

Book falls short of depicting real-life pain

By GAIL MOUNTAIN
Collegian Correspondent

At Risk
By Alice Hoffman
Published by G.P. Putnam's Sons
New York, 1988

At first rumor, Alice Hoffman's "At Risk" was thought to be about AIDS. But this is not a book about AIDS as we've come to know the disease through the media.

It is not about society's scapegoats, on whom many have chosen to exert their intolerance. It is not about the gays, the prostitutes or the IV-drug community. "At Risk" is about the biggest rip-off, by-product of the disease imaginable. It is about one of the indisputable innocents among mankind. It is the story of Amanda Farrel, an 11-year-old girl, who contracts AIDS from an almost forgotten blood transfusion she had when she was six years old.

Hoffman's book is also about Amanda's mom, photographer Polly; her dad, scientist Ivan; her 8-year-old dinosaur-loving brother Ivan Jr.; her friend and seance performer Laurel Smith; her grandparents, her hometown of Morrow and its ability or inability to cope with a disease that no one thought would ever arrive.

Hoffman does an effective, if organized, job laying out the dynamics of a family suddenly caught in the web of the plague of the 1980's.

She quite masterfully separates the politics of AIDS and the reality of AIDS.

Outside influences are fleshed out to include the emotional baggage each family member brings to the crisis and how they must work through it all while struggling through the quagmire of denial to the acceptance of Amanda's inevitable death.

In the midst of the emotional confusion, Laurel Smith proves to be the outsider who can talk to Amanda about what is uppermost on her mind — what she can't talk to her family about. Amanda can talk to Laurel about her fear of death.

From the time Amanda first became ill in June until her final trip to the hospital with her second case of pneumocystic pneumonia (associated with AIDS), Hoffman handles with sensitive insight the issues of denial and the desire of each immediate family member to deal with their pain alone.

She never loses her thread of continuity in bringing the family through from the beginning to the end of Amanda.

I have only one problem with the book, a point I base in having experienced the news that someone you know has AIDS.

Hoffman hardly scratches the surface of the anger, rage and powerlessness that accompanies such devastating news. I expected those feelings should have played a more prominent role when Amanda's death sentence couldn't be attributed to her own destructive choices, as is claimed to be the case with risk behavior victims.

I suspect more rage and powerlessness should have manifested itself when such an innocent child was diagnosed as having AIDS. But certainly it is no reason not to read the book. Hoffman knows her stuff when it comes to the interaction of a family in crisis, making this a valuable piece of work on that premise alone.

On a lighter note, Hoffman lives near Boston with her husband a their two sons and any reader from the Boston area will probably have as much fun as I did trying to figure out where the story is set.

"Morrow has a wicked ? the pond in the center of the common is uncertian..." Could be Danvers or some other North Shore town rich in witch history. Laurel's cottage is set out on the marsh and symbolically removed from Morrow — sounds a lot like Essex.

Read "At Risk." Hoffman's subject is a lose-lose concept. Nonetheless, her novel is a quiet breath of rationality encompassing so much, she'll touch you somewhere.

than before, and director Chuck Russell, who co-wrote the screenplay, has added more interest with a not-so selfless hero (Kevin Dillon) this time around. Even a sub-plot about nasty government types borrowed from E.T. works. Good, mindless fun.

Clean and Sober. Mr. Comedy Michael Keaton astounded me in this very honest, and very dark story of a sleazy addict who 'borrowed' money, and might be responsible for a girl's overdose. He seeks refuge from the police in a dry out clinic. The real point of the film is how long it takes him to realize he belongs there. Brilliant acting by Keaton, Kathy Baker and Morgan Freeman add to the gritty realism.

Crocodile Dundee II. Paul Hogan and Linda Kozlowski return as our favorite unlikely pair in this sequel penned by Hogan and his son, Brett. This time the plot is contrived, involving drug dealers and their pursuit of Mick and his gal all the way back to his territory down under, but there's still enough wit and wonderful characters to keep one satisfied.

Die Hard. Bruce Willis in a "Towering Inferno" rip-off? Not at all. As a New York cop trying to out-wit terrorist/bank robbers who have seized a forty story building and taken hostages, the film is a glitzy showcase of effects and style. Lampooning all officials in the tradition of 'Robocop,' and filled with suspense a la 'Aliens,' this film is a knockout on the giant screen with Dolby stereo. See it there, as it won't be the same on home video.

Midnight Run. The best 'buddy-buddy' movie in ages, with Robert Deniro as a bounty hunter and Charles Grodin as the mild-mannered criminal. The ingenious script has five different parties trying to get Grodin before he reaches the polic in L.A., and director Martin Brest (Beverly Hills Cop) gets wonderful performances from both leads. Deniro plays himself beautifully, but Grodin's low-key performance almost steals the show. One of a new trend of action films with characters we care about.

Tucker. Jeff Bridges had me smiling in his convincing portrayal of Preston Tucker, a post-WW II inventor who tried to introduce "the car of tomorrow today," but was destroyed by big auto makers as his car was a threat to them: it was too good. A great supporting cast including father Lloyd as a "bad" senator and Martin Landau (in an Oscar-worthy performance) as Tucker's financial director, brings director Francis Ford Coppola back from obscurity. Though there isn't enough family dynamics, and Tucker smiles too much, even when losing everything, I still left the theater feeling great.

Who Framed Roger Rabbit. Technically, a masterpiece. The first film to successfully combine live-action and animation to the point where one believe humans are really interracting with the "Toons," who work people in 1947 Hollywood. Bob Hoskins, as a down and out detective, must help Roger Rabbit clear his name when accused of killing his cartoon producer. Loads of cameos by your favorite cartoon stars like Daffy Duck and Betty Boop add to the fun, though the story and the human element could have been better.

Young Guns. The brat pack goes Western, and it works. I had doubts about this one, but the film, following Billy the Kid's early days with a gang of colorful youths is loads of fun since the screenwriter and director Christopher Cain didn't take themselves too seriously. Emilio Estevez, Kiefer Sutherland and Casey Siemazko lead the bunch, creating appealing and dimensional characters. The scenery and costumes are authentic to boot.

Those are my choices for the best, and yes, some big ones didn't make it. Willow, though entertaining, was forgettable. No director, not even Ron Howard, can make a great film with a nonexistent script. As for Rambo III, which bombed (my prayers were answered), I didn't even bother to see Sly's excesses. Did you?

Pee Wee still stylin' in rural romperoom

By JERRY HIGGINS
Collegian Correspondent
Big Top Pee-wee
Directed by Randal Kleiser

Who is a better romantic than Kevin Costner in Bull Durham? Who is more convincing as a childlike adult than Tom Hanks in Big? And who lives in a better fantasyland than Roger Rabbit? Pee-wee Herman, that's who.

In Big Top Pee-wee, the world's most lovable man-child moves from his Saturday morning playhouse to a farmhouse. He goes from playing with Conkey, Chairy and Randy on Saturdays to tending a huge farm with his pig pal, Vance, and a yard full of animals on the big screen.

Only in Pee-wee's world do animals sleep in pajamas on beds in a barn. Once they're awake, it's pancakes for everyone on an outdoor griddle. Then it's off to his greenhouse to perform top-secret botanical experiments to "make the world of tomorrow a better place."

His brown cows emit chocolate milk, which is "chocolately." He has a top-secret hot dog tree and sings "Pee-wee Herman has a farm."

But Pee-wee has another side. He is engaged to the town school teacher, Winnie Johnson (Penelope Ann Miller), who has lunch dates with him every day and makes him horrible egg salad sandwiches wrapped in wax paper.

He lives in a town of mostly elderly folks who don't like him very much. He has to wait behind two ladies for his daily cheese sandwich and pickle and gets verbally abused by everyone.

A big storm hits the town and when it subsides, the Cabrini Circus is spread all over his farmland. Pee-wee meets the manager/ringmaster, Mace Montana (Kris Kristofferson) and falls for the show's beautiful trapeze artist, Gina Piccalapoopala (Valeria Golino).

For Pee-wee Herman fans, seeing him mature and (gasp) kiss Gina is a shock to the system. But there are enough physical gags to get you back into the "Pee-wee" mode, so to speak.

Seeing Pee-wee attempt to find a circus act he can handle is a riot. He flies around in a harness trying to ride the horses. He tangles up the balancing ropes, and as a human cannonball he stays in the cannon after it's been fired. Even with his odd five-sizes-too-small gray suit, Pee-wee doesn't fit in with the freaks.

He does fit in with Gina, and their scenes together are both funny and touching. When they first met, Pee-wee falls on his back after glancing at Gina's upper body.

His pet lines ("That's my name, don't wear it out","Say it, don't spray it") may be lost on those who don't follow Pee-wee. But hearing Gina say in her broken English, "I know you are, but what am I?" as Pee-wee tries to tell her he loves her is priceless.

As a pure circus movie, Big Top Pee-wee will never come close to the 1952 Academy Award winner The Greatest Show on Earth or the Marx Brothers A Day at the Circus. But the performing scenes are enjoyable and the animals are well-trained.

As a comedy, it succeeds. It's not very deep. It's not intellectually stimulating. But it is funny, and the love scenes are tastefully done so that children can enjoy it, too.

It's nice to know that in these days of slice-and-dice and foul-language movies, Pee-wee Herman gives us a chance to go back to our childhoods and have some fun.

Comic Keating gives a sobering performance

By KATHY LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

If an Oscar was ever awarded for a film's frankness, then "Clean and Sober" would win hands down. It is the story of one man's attempt to recover from drug and alcohol abuse.

Daryl Poynter (Michael Keaton, in an outstanding performance) is a thriving real estate executive specializing in commercial properties. He is also an alcoholic and drug addict who resorts to embezzling $92,000 in order to support his habits and stock market losses.

He first realizes he is in trouble when a woman who sold him drugs, and who stayed in his bed, becomes comatose from an overdose, and later dies.

To escape prosecution, he takes shelter in the safest place he knows — a drug clinic. While hiding, he undergoes detoxification and begins rehabilitation with a counselor named Craig (Morgan Freeman), a former drug user.

Whereas detox was easy for Poynter (unlike other patients, as the movie shows), rehabilitation is much harder. He has to attend group therapy sessions, watch movies about the effects of substance abuse, and must participate in group calisthenics.

This proves to be too much for Poynter at first, who is still trying to get 'product' smuggled in, so Craig throws him out. When he does return, he is more determined to work at his recovery.

What makes this movie so impressive is that it does not focus exclusively on Daryl. Instead, the movie follows the progress of Charlie (Kathy Baker) and Donald (Tate Donovan).

"Clean and Sober" is also important because it show the personal support given to recovering addicts. Besides counselors like Craig, there are sponsors, who are members of Alcoholics Anonymous assigned to help newly recovered addicts adjust to outside life. M. Emmet Walsh performed masterfully as Richard, Poynter's sponsor.

"Clean and Sober" is a story about people, not a documentary. Some of the patients, such as Poynter, do well enough to earn chips for staying straight for 30 days. Others are not as lucky. This movie, remember, was not made to have a perfectly happy ending.

In general, "Clean and Sober" is an excellent movie. Well-researched situations brought out the best in the well-developed characters. I would recommend this movie to anyone interested in a good, mature drama, regardless of the subject matter.

Screaming Tribesman emerge from down under

Success in US likely for Aussie sensation

By JIM NEILL
Collegian Correspondent

With an eloquent roar, Australia's near-legendary Screaming Tribesmen have finally unleashed their first full length album on these shores.

Bones and Flowers, on Rykodisc CD, LP and cassette, stands as one of the best rock albums of the year — not surprising considering the band's heritage. The Tribesmen family tree includes Radio Birdman, The Hoodoo Gurus, The New Christs, and The Hitmen, all seminal outfits in a decade that has seen an astounding influx of talent emerge from down under.

Since their formation in 1981, The Screaming Tribesmen have consistently topped the Aussie indie charts with their effective mix of irresistible melodies, soaring vocal harmonies, and a potent guitar blitzkrieg that drives the whole thing home with a vengeance.

With the cumulative strength and top notch songwriting evident on Bones and Flowers, the Tribesmen's success in America is inevitable. It's hard to imagine that mainstream album rock stations (and even "contemporary hit" stations) won't discover the massive appeal of the single, "I've Got a Feeling," already a smash on college and alternative radio.

"Igloo," a cleaner, more polished version of their apocalyptic first single is now as outstanding as it was in 1982. The gorgeous "Girl In My Dreams" is a perfect example of the bands sweeter side, skillfully restrained without any loss of power.

The whole album moves with grace and confidence from rockers to ballads, from bones to flowers. It's a killer from track one to the finish. As an appetizer for the album, sink your teeth into the "I've Got a Feeling," a four-track EP featuring the aforementitoned single, "Igloo," "Colour Me gone" (also on the CD) and a non-LP cut "You Better Run" from an earlier import EP.

Rykodisc is an eclectic, predominantly CD label out of Salem that has recently started releasing some of their material on high quality vinyl and cassette tapes.

The Tribesmen are the label's first actual signing, an artist development project, if you will. It will be interesting to see just how adventurous Rykodisc will be with new signings in the years ahead. If the diversity and quality of the artists they have licensed up to this point is any indication, then this rapidly expanding independent label is destined to become major.

The Screaming Tribesmen have a US tour planned for late fall. Don't miss their amazing live show and be sure to give their recorded efforts a listen. As a rule, anything Rykodisc signs is, at the very least, a refreshing alternative to mainstream rock.

The latest Screaming Tribesmen LP.

WW II tales less than compelling

Reads like Gallup poll

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

The Altruistic Personality
By Samuel P. and Pearl M. Oliner.
The Free Press; 419 pages.
$24.95

When the TV movie "Wallenberg: A Hero's Story" aired in 1985, it was critically acclaimed in its portrayal of one man's efforts to rescue Jews from Nazi persecution.

In a similar vein comes "The Altruistic Personality" which on it cover asks "What led ordinary men and women to risk their lives on behalf of others?"

What follows should be a compelling tale that answers that question. Instead, "The Altruistic Personality" reads like a Gallup poll. The book is really the result of more than 700 interviews with what the authors call "rescuers" and "bystanders." It is from these interviews that the reader learns that:

- Those who intervened were distinguished by certain common characteristics, including a deep-seated, wide-ranging empathy to others developed in their childhood homes, where moral and ethical values were not only strongly held, but also acted upon by their own parents.
- Those who didn't intervene were concerned primarily with their own survival and chose not to become involved.

The chapter titled "The Acts of Heroism" should have been the highlight of the book. Here we should get the chance to meet a few individuals who helped rescue the Jews from Nazi prosecution; here, we should encounter wonderful people, telling such moving stories that we fall in love with their bravery and compassion.

What we get instead are dozens of short vignettes that are about as lifeless as the computer on which this review was written.

"I was obliged by the Germans to have some German officers in my home, but I wasn't afraid for the girls," writes one French rescuer who was keeping several Jewish youngsters in her home.

"The Germans saw the children, but their wasn't any problem because they were in a boarding school in Marnandes. The children left on Monday morning, came back on Wednesday evening, went back to school on Friday morning, and came back Saturday evening. So the Germans never suspected anything, nor did they ask me any questions concerning the girls. Girls were'nt the problem, but the boys — I was frightened for them," she concludes.

The main problem with the chapter is that their doesn't appear to be any editing. Instead of being offered a few compelling stories, the reader is bombarded by countless vignettes.

The book gets off on the wrong foot with the first chapter titled, "Why risk one's life?" which reads like a thesis, complete with an overly long definition and history of the word "altruism." It sets the mood for the entire work, complete with three appendixes — the methodology, tables and charts, and the questionnaire used for the interviews.

Wilson should stick with the Boys

By KATHY LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Brian Wilson
Sire/Reprise Records

After a long period of self-exile, Brian Wilson is back but without the Beach Boys. Unfortunately, the album sounds like Wilson could have used them.

"Love and Mercy," the first cut, seemed to have been written with good intentions. Yet, the lyrics seem a bit childish and his singing has deteriorated over the years. What used to be such a rich voice has become shallow and nasal. The background vocals are made to sound like the Beach Boys - a pattern that continues throughout the album.

"Walkin' The Line" sounds very unconvincing and the music sounds like an old Captain and Tennille song (Yes, I know they used to be back up musicians for the Beach Boys, but still . . .).

"Melt Away" sounds as if it could be on "Pet Sounds." The music and background sounds are quite nice. Lyrically, Wilson sounds self-assured, saying "I won't let you see me suffer . . . no, not me . . . " Such a lovely song, but it segues into a blatant ripoff of an obscure "Pet Sounds" song called "Caroline, No" (from a line "where did your long hair go?"). Incidentally, that song was the only other solo effort by Wilson.

An interesting bit is "One For the Boys," an a capella voice exercise that works well. It's been said that this is a tribute, even a farewell, to the Beach Boys. The latter may be farfetched, but the piece still sounds nice.

The closing song on the first side "There's So Many," sounds airy and dreamy, using positive lyrics, "I wonder if you know where you belong/planets are spinning along."

Side two begins with "Night Time," a song with funny little jungle sounds. The problem with this song, aside from being too repetitive, is its cutesy lyrics and music.

"Meet Me in My Dreams Tonight" sounds like another Ronettes song with some of the old Beach Boys organ sounds, not to mention their lyrics. The combination makes the song sound upbeat, but bland.

"Rio Grande" ends the album on a strange note. The synthesized affectation of water and the fake western sound just makes this song campy. And the lyrics don't help it all.

This should prove a lesson to aspiring musicians: Never let your psychologist sing, as Dr. Eugene Landy did here.

He's also executive producer for this album — one that would be better suited for Brian Wilson and the Beach Boys, rather than for Brian Wilson alone.

Bin cassettes are a find

By KATHY LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Everyone loves a bargain, right? Especially college students, who never have enough money for anything but bargains. It's been popular to shop for bargain clothing (just ask Cyndi Lauper) and now there's bargain shopping for records and tapes.

You know what I'm talking about. Haven't you seen the large bins of tapes at record and department stores? And haven't you fished through the pile for any decent group or record that might be buried there?

It's amazing what you can find. I have found tapes by groups that catch my interest but aren't worth the high cost of a regular recod or tape. Within a few years, however, they are sold cheaply, so that particular group is worth checking out.

There are several types of bargain tapes. One type is the used tape. These can usually be found at places such as Yesterday and Today Records and Al-Bum's (both in Amherst), rather than the chain stores. Since these stores won't accept tapes in poor condition, this is an excellent way of getting inexpensive tapes, especially if these tapes (or artists) are hard to find or are out of production (try looking for new Frank Zappa tapes at the mall). Used tapes tend to be the least expensive that are sold in the area.

Another example is the "various artist" tape. These feature songs from different artists, often for no good reason. Occasionally, you may find albums made for charities (such as a 1985 album made for Greenpeace) that fall into this category. Unfortunately for the charities, the reason these albums fall in with the various artists category is that they didn't sell well after release. If you like a particular genre of music, such as British pop, these are good to find.

Another set of bagains is in the obacure artist or album category. This is where you'll find 60's groups that don't really benefit from the nostalgia craze (the Mamas and the Papas, for example), and those albums which you might have decided not to buy years ago, because they

Jane Wiedlin sheds Go-Go image with 'Fur'

By KATHY LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Fur
Jane Wiedlin
EMI-Manhattan

It's been quite a while since the Go-Gos broke up, and with the exception of Belinda Carlisle, none of the group's former members has had a solo album come close to their past success. Now, former Go-Gos guitarist Jane Wiedlin is finding it with her latest solo album.

Let's get this straight about Wiedlin: she is not a performer who writes about social causes, but she is also not a babbling airhead who wears outrageous amounts of makeup. Her songs do not contain messages (except for the title track). Instead she plays fun, lighthearted songs, and she plays them quite well.

One song that works on this album is the opener, called "Inside A Dream." The music is snappy, reminiscent of the British sound of the '80s. The lyrics aren't as spectacular, but it shows her promising talent.

The next track, "Rush Hour," is very good (it's already moving up the charts). Not only does she sing well in this, but she has a very good guitar solo.

"One Heart, One Way" is a good mid-tempo track. The vocals are good, with some background harmony, as she sings "You and I were both looking for the same thing / Not selfish love but true love." This is a pretty song.

"The End of Love," which ends side one, is a lovely ballad with eloquently romantic lyrics, such as "What is the end of love? / Two hearts no longer meeting." Her voice, as well as the keyboard and percussion, fits right into the song.

"Fur" is an interesting indictment of fur coat wearers: "You can prove you want me / Without spilling blood." The sophisticated sound of the music and her voice keep "Fur" from being too preachy.

Not every song on Fur is a success, however. "Homeboy" is extremely weak, probably because Wiedlin sounds silly singing "you'd better get off the street homeboy."

"Song of the Factory" is a pretentious show of symbolism about "the promise calling me / Can you hear the sound of the factory?"

In general, though, the album is quite good. It could yield several hits for Wiedlin, as well as offering a boost for her fledgeling solo career. She has grown up lyrically, musically and vocally since her Go-Gos days, and with any luck, she should be around for awhile.

Tom Cruise real stiff in Cocktail

By JERRY HIGGINS
Collegian Correspondent

Cocktail
Directed by Roger Donaldson

What will Tom Cruise try to do next? Will he pretend he's a streetsweeper or a baseball player? What about a race car driver?

In his last three movies, Cruise has portrayed a fighter pilot(Top Gun), a pool player (The Color of Money) and a bartender (Cocktail). Of the three,Cocktail is the most unbelievable, and that's not taking into account the horrible storyline he must deal with.

Cruise is Brian Flanagan, who gets out of the Army and returns to Queens to tend bar at his uncle's pub. He tries to get a job on Wall Street and Madison Avenue without a college degree and decides to go to college.

Flanagan wants money, but he doesn't want to work for it. He always reads How to Get Rich books and comes up with wild ideas for success that no one will listen to.

Dejected, he walks into an Upper West Side bar and meets Doug Coughlin (Bryan Brown), a drunken bartender who loves rich women and has nothing else on his mind. He constantly comes up with his "Coughlin's Law" phrases like, "Bury the dead — they stink"and "You get the women, you get the money".

It's really deep stuff. It's so deep that it should be buried. But that's one of the movie's biggest problems. The characters are extremely shallow, and the dialogue is sophomoric.

Flanagan gets a job and learns bartending techniques that are better kept in a circus than in a bar. It may look impressive to flip bottles in the air and pour them, but in this movie, unless you were a rich woman, you were never served.

Flanagan and Coughlin have a falling out at an exclusive New Wave Yuppie bar, and Flanagan heads to Jamaica. While there, he meets up with Jordan Mooney (Elisabeth Shue), a vacationing waitress from New York.

They exchange glances. Flanagan flashes his baby blue eyes and perfect smile and Mooney falls for him. Cruise is the only actor I've seen who makes a love scene look like work. His scenes with Shue are, at best, terrible.

The rest of the movie runs along a theme that seems [illegible] in most of Cruise's movies—good vs. evil. In this case, the good is Cruise's love for Shue while the evil is his desire for success in the fast lane.

Cruise is too talented to waste himself in this type of movie, with such a lame plot. People who were watching along with me were laughing when Shue tells Cruise that she's pregnant: that's supposed to be a suspenseful point in the film.

Brown is also a waste in this film. He was so good in F/X and*The Thorn Birds*. But here he is relegated to meaningless lines and general drunkenness that is not convincing.

Cocktail is not a very good movie. You'd go thirsty if you ever went to Cruise's kind of establishment. In fact, you'd be better off sitting at home with a six-pack and watching old movies because Cocktail is like a bad hangover — it costs a lot of money but it isn't worth the suffering that goes along with it.

Also included in this category are those albums which contain one or two hits by a group and then filler. Often these are by artists who aren't accustomed to making sucessful albums, just sucessful singles (the Temptations are an example).

Bargain hunting for tapes is a gamble. You never know if you'll find a real gem of an album. I never thought I'd like my Mamas and Papas tape so much that I'd only listen to that when I ride home on weekends. I bought a Greenpeace tape for only one song, and eventually became hooked on it. If anything, shopping around is a lot of fun.

Lester frank in 'Lovesong'

Lovesong, Becoming a Jew
By Julius Lester
Henry Holt; 248 pages

Have you ever read a book and loved it so much - the subject, the style, the wit - that after you're done, you want to talk to the author for a few hours to reach into that person's mind and grab a few more thoughts to further brighten your day?

Julius Lester's Lovesong, Becoming a Jew is such a book. It is the autobiography of a 49-year-old black man, an educator and convert to Judaism, who has gone to great lengths to be himself. But it is also the history of the civil rights movement and its aftermath through one man's eyes. Still, it is much more.

"From 1961 to 1964 I resisted the siren call of history. I married and wrote short stories and novels which no one would publish and eked out a living as a folk singer and guitar and banjo teacher. A part of me wanted to be in the South, though, and on the backroads of Mississippi and Georgia where friends were organizing blacks to register to vote. . .

"I still wanted to be a mystic in the world, but that fall a church was blown up in Birmingham, Alabama, and four black girls were killed. Wanting to be a mystic seemed selfish and small. History claimed me for itself, I became a revolutionary."

He writes about black-Jewish relations: "And surely we've forgotten that at the memorial services and rallies after the bombing, it was Jews, more so than other Americans, who stood beside and shared our pain. Black leadership insults this very part of black history, not to mention insulting Jews, when it says that Jewish support for the Black struggle was given when it was 'in their (the Jews) best interest to do so.' No, that is not true. . ."

One theme throughout Lovesong is that Lester is a man who feels he was born to be Jewish, and longed to convert to Judaism, which he did six years ago.

"I am in love! What an odd thing to say about a religion, but it is true. I am in love with Judaism, with being a Jew. But this passion is not that blindness which transforms a woman of mere flesh into a goddess with the power of life and death. I am having a love affair with my soul."

In the late 1970's, Lester took a controversial stand by calling for the resignation of Andrew Young, then the US ambassador to the United Nations. And in 1984, he was one of only a few prominent blacks to criticize the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Yet it is the University of Massachusetts professor's latest stance that has drawn the most attention. The controversy that resulted from his statement that the late black novelist James Baldwin made anti-semitic remarks in a lecture four years ago at the university led to his departure from the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies.

In the section dealing with the incident, which took place during the charged atmosphere following Jackson's 'Hymietown' remarks in 1984, Lester writes, "I was shocked when Jimmy referred to Jews as being nothing more than white Christians who go to something called a synagogue on Saturday rather than a church on Sunday."

Lester writes that Baldwin was not anti-semitic, but that his remarks were.

In their letter to the dean of humanities and fine arts, the 15 professors from the Afro-American Department said, "While Professor Lester certainly has the right to publicly characterize James Baldwin in any way that he might desire, the actual results can only be depicted as capricious, irresponsible and damaging in a most pernicious way."

So for now Lester is a Judaic studies professor at UMass, instead of holding a joint professorship between the two departments. Worse fates could be dealt to a man who is not afraid to speak his mind, and who fascinates when he does.

"Lovesong, Becoming a Jew" is must reading for anyone interested in the civil rights movement, religion, social issues and a number of other topics. It can be both funny and sad, personal and compelling.

There's only one problem with religions that have all the answers. They don't allow questions.

Amherst in summer: life in a small

For the 26,000 of us who spend eight months out of the year at the university, Amherst is the epitome of American college towns. The energy and din of youth makes it unique. But when the last station wagon full of desk lamps and dirty laundry pulls out, things start to quiet down . . .

HATCH

Bar gets facelift during summer

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The Hatch Bar, located in the center of campus, is usually the center of attention on weeknights.

The bar features live bands and variety shows and offers an extensive wine and beer list and several eateries in recently renovated space.

Entertainment is scheduled every Friday night and up to four times per week. Hatch Bar Manager Larry Jeffers said the entertainment consists mostly of jazz, folk and rock bands.

The Hatch Bar, open from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., coordinates maroon and light and dark grey colors and offers ample room for students to sit and socialize. The bar holds 400 to 450 people.

Board of Governors Chairperson Eric Nakajima said, "I think it offers a more intimate setting than the Campus Center or SUB (Student Union Ballroom.)"

The board allocates space and funds to groups in the Campus Center and the Student Union.

Renovations during the summer brought about 250 plastic cranberry chairs, Jeffers said. A waist-high partition will replace the former lattice divider near the bar, he added. Recessed lighting and oak benches have already been installed.

Anyone is allowed into the Hatch Bar, but customers must show I.D. to be served alcohol.

The Hatch Bar used to be a full bar, but Jeffers said when the drinking age was raised business slacked. He said the bar's size was then reduced and they began serving only beer and wine.

However, talking and drinkng is still fashionable at the Hatch Bar, Manager Larry Jeffers said. 'I think the energy is still here. It's just the drinking is not as prevalent as it once was. It's one of the few bars you can get a real good pizza at.'

However, talking and drinking is still fashionable at the Hatch Bar, Jeffers said. "I think the energy is still here. It's just the drinking is not as prevalent as it once was. It's one of the few bars you can get a real good pizza at."

The Hatch Bar does not have a cover charge for entertainment.

Attractions this fall will include Regency, a five-man acappella band, scheduled for Oct. 19. The Barber and Civil, a ventriloquist act scheduled for Nov. 17, has a twist: The dummy is holding the human. The band In The Flesh, the opening band for Belinda Carlysle, is scheduled for Oct. 2.

When the Hatch Bar does not have scheduled entertainment the television and the jukebox linger in the corners.

Good Grief. Good News.

NORTHAMPTON

LIVE ON STAGE

By SYLVIA GAUDETTE
Collegian Staff

The catch phrase for Northampton nitelife is live, and three musical hot spots to check out are Sheehan's Cafe, the Iron Horse and L'Oasis. Each provide a variety of live shows as well as ambiences to please the crowds.

Downstairs at Sheehan's is the perfect basement party with a bar, neon art, tables, a dance floor and what General Manager Steve Rothenberg called, "bands who sweat."

"It's not a concert where you sit down and watch a show," he said, "You go down there and it's a party."

Sheehan's features blues groups every Monday night. According to Rothenberg, when many bands find themselves between Boston and New York on Mondays they will play cheap.

The rest of the week Sheehan's offers what Rothenberg called "good, fun bar bands' who play it all from rock to blues to rhythm and blues and new wave.

This fall, rock 'n' roll fans can expect the Young Fresh Fellows, Live Skull, and the Liars, while the blues and rockabilly crowd can watch for Sleepy LaBeef, Barrance Whitfield and the Savages, and Johnny Copeland.

Upstairs at Sheehan's is a traditional bar with sports on the tube and a live acoustic folk and blues show every Friday afternoon for free.

The upstairs is open every day of the year between 4 p.m. and 1 a.m. and the basement showtimes are five to seven times a week at 8:30 p.m.

Cover charges vary with the featured band but average about $4 and identification is always required.

The Iron Horse is what Manager Alan Dorman called, "very much a listening club."

With seating for 85, the Iron Horse offers a smaller, more musically oriented atmosphere.

Although it has a full bar and offers an extensive list of top-notch night time acts, it also has a full breakfast, lunch, and dinner menu.

Because the Iron Horse does not present itself as a bar, Dorman said that it provides a "non-threatening atmosphere where women can come alone."

The Iron Horse features an open-stage folk night on the first Wednesday night and an open-microphone "Comedy Crunch" on the last night of each month.

Regular shows cover folk, jazz, blues, new wave and listenable rock 'n' roll. Some upcoming September attractions are Dumptruck on Sept. 8, Lonnie Mack's blues guitar on Sept. 11, garage rock from Scruffy the Cat on Sept. 14, poetry reading by Jim Carroll on Sept. 19 and the Bill Barron Quartet for jazz fans on Sept. 17.

Customers relish conversation and music at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton.

L'Oasis offers a dance club as a third live alternative in Northampton. Cocktail tables focusing on the stage in addition to those tucked in what owner Michel Biard called 'a lot of nooks and crannies,' provide for about 100.

Showtimes vary by the act, and identification is required only to buy alcohol.

L'Oasis offers a dance club as a third live alternative in Northampton. Cocktail tables focusing on the stage in addition to those tucked away in what owner Michel Biard called "a lot of nooks and crannies," provide seating for about 100.

Biard said L'Oasis has the longest bar in the valley, at about 106 feet, and television monitors show either music videos or a closed caption of the band performing to provide better visibility from the bar.

There is no cover charge for the open stage Tuesday night Blues Jam, hosted by Blue Bill of WMUA, or the Wednesday night Band Showcase, featuring two or three new bands looking for a name. L'Oasis provides the instruments for these hopeful stars but it's B.Y.O.Amp.

Sunday night at L'Oasis is "alternative night," which according to Baird, is attractive not only to the lesbian, bisexual and gay population but also to all dance lovers looking to liven up their Sundays.

Otherwise L'Oasis features a variety of music including a lot of ska and reggae, which Baird called enjoyable dance music.

Cover charges are generally $5 and positive identification is required at the door except for the "All Ages Show" at 6 p.m. every Saturday.

Katina's nitelife crowd gets big names and snake

By SYLVIA GAUDETTE

Katina's
Route 9 across from Mountain Farms Mall
Hadley

Katina's offers entertainment for many different tastes. Nightly music shows are guaranteed. And, the club's management has found a way to accommodate those who can't decide whether to visit the zoo or go dancing.

But those easily frightened by snakes might want to give the place a second thought. There's a boa constrictor, called "Tony," dwelling near the dance floor.

Not to worry, however, the boa goes unnoticed by many club frequenters, whose dancing frenzy gives them no chance to think about or notice anything else, except maybe their partners.

However, it might be possible that a bigger attraction for most people who go to Katina's is the club's reputation as, according to Manager John Myers, 'the place for the big-name acts."

He highlighted the Fools; "Eliminator," a ZZ Top show; and Farenheit from the list of shows scheduled for September.

Rock 'n' roll groups Bad Company and Blushing Bride are scheduled for October.

"We're not a hip college bar," Myers said. "We're more of a showcase nightclub that caters to everyone.

Katina's has theme nights, such as "Reggae Night" on Wednesdays and "Heavy Metal Night" on Sundays. Thursday through Saturday, the club features regional and national dance bands. Shows generally kick off at 9:30 p.m.

If the boa and the music selection still don't do the trick for you, consider this: Katina's is also an entertainment option for those aged 18 to 21, but they have to pay an additional $2 cover charge. A separate non-alcohol hand stamp is required.

Katina's has five full bars around the room, a juice and soda bar, two fireplaces, a dance floor, a VIP Loft for private rental by groups of about 25.

Myers said he remembered there being two boas but could not recall when and why Tony's pal departed or where it went. Myers was sure, however, that the plexiglass section of the floor under which the cage is housed was secure and not at fault.

Myers also said the club has "little cubby holes to get away" (for people, not snakes), seating by the fireplaces, and a light fare menu.

Cover charges vary with the night's act.

University movies give cheap thrills

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Most first-year students who come to the University of Massachusetts like movies. How could they not? However, most first year students are in dire money straits and can't afford to go to the movies in town.

That's where the campus comes in.

Each semester, different Registered Student Organizations, residential areas, area governments, and greek organizations at UMass sponsor movies. They are shown in the Campus Center, Student Union Ballroom, residence halls, Mahar Auditorium, and Bowker Auditorium, to name a few locations.

The movies are less expensive to go to than the movies off-campus and anyone who prefers going out to the movies rather than renting a VCR will enjoy the semi-theater atmosphere.

Ginny Wesoloski, scheduling director for Student Activities Office, said, "There aren't as many films shown as there used to be because of video ... there are less movie dates booked this semester than in previous years."

When it comes to attendance, "a lot depends upon the films," said Wesoloski.

In other words, a movie like "Platoon" would have a whopping crowd and perhaps an extended viewing. A film like "Zapped" (remember that one?) probably would not fare so well.

The prices range from free to $2 or $3 — perfect for the terminally broke, movie-loving student.

Another reason students may like this social option is the movies are shown on campus, with the last show usually ending at 11 p.m. This means students can have some fun close to home and get some sleep.

The student groups that show movies will put out posters and flyers with the times, and price of the movie.

FLAT STREET

Under-age students use grandfather clause to kick up their heels over state line

By PAMELA McCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Students who like to party but aren't 21 yet will love Flat Street, an over-18 nightclub in Brattleboro, Vt.

From the outside, Flat Street looks like a warehouse. On the inside, it is a festive and flashy nightclub, complete with theater-like videoscreens, a dance floor, lounge, juice bar, alcohol bar, food and games.

Those under the legal drinking age can still get in. A special space is reserved for them on the dance floor with a deli and juice bar. It holds 75 to 100 people, and on any given weekend night, at least 50 people hang out there.

"It's pretty quiet in that we don't have many fights," said Raymond Amidon, who works in maintenance. "It's a neat place to come."

For those who are wondering about the grandfather clause in Vermont, this is the story: Anyone who was born before July 1, 1968, can step up to the bar.

According to Manager Steve Cassell, the building itself has capacity for 600 people, which makes it the largest club in the area. This also makes it very comfortable, because it's never overcrowded or stuffy, Cassell said.

Don't worry about the crowd. It is "definitely a college-age" group, Cassell said. There are always new attractions strolling through Flat Street. Cassell said new video games are on the way. Pool tables are already featured. He said there will be new special drink nights, and Wednesday nights are half-price drink nights.

Bands are a feature at Flat Street. Some of the names scheduled to appear this year are the Next, Sidewalk Romeo, Picture This, Breakdown, Rokken, and KGB.

Even if there is no band on a particular night, there is a disk jockey playing plenty of dance music and videos to keep the party cranking until the place closes.

Flat Street is open 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Wednesday through Thursday, 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Fridays, and 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. on Saturdays.

Because the club is in Vermont, most students don't know how to get there or don't want to drive the distance. Thus, Flat Street has been trying to get University of Massachusetts students to start a bus service to the club. Cassell said it could be very inexpensive.

"It could cost about $5 or $6 a head" including bus, admission, and food, Cassell said.

However, the cost of the trip depends on the amount of people who go. The more who go, the less they have to spend.

Anyone who wants information on starting the service, or the club in general, can call Flat Street at (802) 254-8257.

Club Soda gives new twist to nightclub action

Club Soda
Peoples' Institute of Northampton Building
Gothic Street
Northampton

Being under 21 is often an annoying stumbling block when planning what to do for Nitelife but a new club in Northampton can help iron out some bumps.

Club Soda is an upscale, non-alcoholic dance nightclub with a $40,000 sound and dance floor light system and 15 video games.

The club is located in the Peoples' Institute of Northampton Building and run by the non-profit organization.

Jack Grace, head of the Institute, said, "Our lights are better than Pearl Street," and is looking to attract the under 21 crowd this fall.

The club features an extensive list of frozen mocktails, including an Island Oasis and the steady favorite, according to Grace, strawberry margueritas, as well as a snack bar with nachos, popcorn, and ice cream to keep the dancers going.

Every Saturday is 15 and over night. The party begins at 7 p.m. and the beat goes on until 11 p.m.

Club Soda opened three weeks ago, Grace said, after being constructed entirely by volunteers from local unions during the summer's tropical heat wave.

Some of the biggest support for the club since its opening, he said, has come from the Mayor's office.

"The mayor said, 'Let's get them off the street and on the dance floor' and that's what I've done," said Grace.

Grace said the Peoples' Institute was given to Northampton 100 years ago by Andrew Carnegie to provide a place for education, socializing, and recreation. It was called the Home Culture Club until it incorporated in 1904 and changed its name.

The Institute offers many services to the Northampton community, and due to what Graves said is "an incredible need for child care"in the city, Club Soda doubles as a kindergarten by day.

Rendezvous woos those under 21

Under-age drinkers who try to slither and sneak their way into local bars to boogey along with other club-goers can now stand tall and look the doorman in the eye at the Rendezvous.

Under-age drinkers who try to slither and sneak their way into local bars to boogey along with other club-goers can now stand tall and look the doorman in the eye at the Rendezvous, an under-21 club opening soon in Southwest.

The night club will be opening in the Southwest Residential Area and is geared toward University of Massachusetts students under age 21.

Southwest Area Government co-President Jonathan Grant said, "It's going to have the atmosphere of a night club."

The club, sponsored by SWAG, is scheduled to open from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Sept. 10. Grant said the Rendezvous will be open only every other Saturday, except for those Saturdays during vacation weekends.

The Rendezvous will be set up in the Hampden Dining Commons lobby and its Southside Room. The lobby is furnished with chairs and tables, which will have red or blue tablecloths.

The Southside room is where all the action will be. Disc jockey Robert Moffet, a UMass alumnus of Pub fame, will spin the vinyl. Large screens will supplement the music with rock videos.

The Rendezvous will have two dance floors, one of which is an elevated platform.

The lighting will be dimmed to create a night-club ambiance and will also include special-effect lighting.

"It's going to be the spot because the students are going to make it the spot," Grant said.

He said he has noticed that parties at UMass have been closing earlier and are also harder to get into for those under 21. "We're trying to provide an alternative activity that's going to be of the same nature."

Identification is not required to get in, but Grant said should the Rendezvous become heavily frequented by non-Umass students they may begin to ask for identification.

The club will feature non-alcoholic Island Oasis mix drinks in six exotic choices: strawberry daquari, Oreo ice cream shake, peach daquari, pina coloda, fuzzy navel, and banana daquari.

Coke, diet Coke and Sprite will also be available. The Hampden Snack Bar will be open until midnight. Grant said the Rendezvous may offer popcorn in the future, and he did not rule out the possibility of opening a snack bar that would be part of the club.

"What's going to make it great is its students working for students," Grant said.

Area cinemas a feast to the movie-goers eyes

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

It's Friday night and you find yourself within four concrete walls that you call your dorm room. Amplified party sounds sneak in from down the hall. You consider joining the party, but remind yourself that you're not in the mood.

You're in the mood for something that doesn't include being stepped on by wavering bodies reeking of alcohol.

A movie sounds good.

Pick up the yellow pages, and you will find several movie theaters in the area — Amherst Cinema; Academy of Music, Pleasant Street Cinema, and Calvin Theatre in Northampton; and the Hampshire Mall Six Theaters and Mountain Farms Four Theaters in Hadley.

Attending a movie at The Academy [of Music], which runs critically-acclaimed foreign and domestic films, creates a time-traveling sense generated by the building's 19th-century atmosphere.

The Amherst Cinema, the only movie house in town, is located on Amity Street across from the Jones Library and Shawmut Bank in Amherst center.

Until recently, Amherst Cinema ran classics such as "A Hard Day's Night" and "Casablanca." Last year, the cinema began showing more recently-produced movies, such as "Bagdad Cafe" and "Married to the Mob."

According to Manager Donald Chokuette, the cinema began running newer movies, including some foreign ones, because management figured these films would attract larger audiences.

"I think it's going to work out better this year," he said.

Chokuette said the cinema begins showing a new film every Friday, but if one does exceptionally well it will run for a second week.

Amherst Cinema charges $3.50 for admission, $2 for children and senior citizens, and offers $25 discount cards for 10 admissions.

Downtown Northampton, which you may reach by Pioneer Valley Transit Authority buses that leave from outside the Fine Arts Center, has three cinemas.

The Academy of Music, on Main Street near Smith College, is the sixth oldest movie house in the United States. Built in 1891, it has balconies, side boxes, curtains, Victorian paintings, and a waiting salon.

An Amherst Cinema employee sets up shop for the movie-going crowd. The cinema begins running a new movie every Friday.

Attending a movie at the academy, which runs critically-acclaimed foreign and domestic films, creates a time-traveling sense generated by the building's 19th-century atmosphere.

A few blocks down Main Street from the Academy, you can see the Pleasant Street Cinema once you take a right turn. The cinema, which has operated as a movie house since 1971, has two showrooms.

Richard Pini, manager, said the cinema shows "things that you'd never see anywhere else around here." These "things" include first-run American arts films, foreign and revival American films, documentaries and animation films.

The cinema charges $4.50 admission, and $3.50 to senior citizens and children under 12.

The third movie theater in downtown Northampton, the Calvin Theatre, runs current movies, such as "Bull Durham," and offers $.99 admission specials once a week. Regular admission is $2.50. The Calvin Theatre is located at 19 King St.

For current movies, you can also go to the Hampshire Mall and the Mountain Farms Mall cinemas, both located on Route 9 and serviced by the Amherst/Northampton/Williamsburg bus routes.

LAUNDRY CLUB is clean fun

By SYLVIA GAUDETTE
Collegian staff

There's a new club in Amherst under the sign of the neon palm tree. No club membership is required. People can come alone or with friends, watch three or four first-run movies shown daily on a wide screen, munch on hot buffalo wings, or other snacks, and wash it all down with a frosty, frozen Oreo cookie or strawberry daquari mocktail.

The only requirement for enjoying the luxury of this club is that you do some laundry.

Wait a minute, what was that?

You heard it, laundry.

The Laundry Club has a "key west neon" art deco motif, food, drinks, movies and, yes, washing machines and dryers.

One might expect all this to come with a heavy price tag but surprise! It's $1 to wash and $.75 for a half hour in the dryer.

And wait, there's more! No more hunting for quarters. The Laundry Club is fully attended and computerized. After stuffing the key-west-pink machines, simply hand the machine numbers to the desk, give them the cash and enjoy yourself until it's dryer time.

A computer printout of the time remaining on either machine allows planning orders from the kitchen and a TV monitor in the dryer section avoids missing any good parts of the movies.

The Laundry Club is located on University drive by Louis' Foods, about a half a mile from the Southwest Residential Area, and is open from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. every day.

The mastermind of what he calls the "wave of the future" is 1986 Umass/Boston graduate Warren Luster. Having attended Umass/Amherst for his first three years, Luster said he knew first hand the frustration students experience on this campus when trying to do their laundry.

He said he later uncovered the statistics that prove the students' struggles on this campus. He found the optimum ratio of student to machines is 38:1, while the worst case scenario is 300:1. This has translated to students for years as the "Sunday night crunch."

Luster said it was his haunting memories of scrounging for quarters, trekking to the basement or the nearest laundromat, standing in the heat, waiting for the only working machine and hoping his clothes weren't stolen or thrown across the filthy room that motivated him to establish this pilot club in Amherst.

His trick for keeping his prices low is David Letterman's "Volume, volume, volume" method. Luster said his angle to get this volume is to, first, provide clean, dependable facilities that are close to the campus. Next, he said, the atmosphere will "make more hours and days more desirable" for doing laundry.

In addition to the obvious Nitelife attraction of the club, Luster used daytime soap opera hours as an example of a time when, he said, people would enjoy watching their soaps on a big screen in stereo, while sipping a mocktail and "knocking off some laundry at the same time."

Luster said discount membership cards and at-home or dormitory pick-up and delivery services are upcoming club attractions.

The Laundry Club also offers full service dry cleaning.

IN TOWN

Compiled by Sylvia Gaudette and Erin Abbey

Twisters
30 Boltwood Walk
Off of Amherst Commons

Twisters is living up to its name offering a new twist this fall to in town entertainment and certainly to its familiar location, formerly Plumbley's.

Co-owner Mark Forsythe said Twisters is expected to open at the end of this week and will cater to the professional market.

Lunch and dinner will be served between 11 a.m. and 10 p.m. in the main dining room and on the patio with separate bar and raw bar. Between 5 and 9 p.m., live jazz and blues are featured in the dining room for the after-work crowd.

At about 9 p.m. the dance floor opens with a disc jockey and identification is required at the door when food is no longer being served.

Twisters also offers pool tables, television sports and a small banquet room.

Forsythe said the main dining room has an art deco theme and billed Twisters as a nice new place to bring a date.

Amherst Center

Amherst Center has a 55-year piece of heritage in a bar named Barsie's, the oldest in Amherst.

According to Manager Sean Eagan, Barsie's was opened as Barselotti's in 1933 and has since acquired several ownerships, the nick-name Barsie's, and an adoring college crowd of the past and present.

"Anyone who has gone to school here from about 1940 on knows about this place," he said. "We get a lot of alumni from UMass and Amherst [College]."

Barsie's is open seven days a week from noon to 1 a.m. and Eagan describes it as a smaller bar attracting a very social crowd that "comes here to watch a ball game and meet some friends."

Barsie's offers three televisions, video games, a juke box, and for the discriminating palate: junk food.

Charlie's
One Prey Street
Amherst Center

Charlie's is celebrating its 10th anniversary as Amherst's friendly neighborhood tavern, said Owner Richard Slobody.

Special attractions include a menu featuring homemade pizza, a kitchen open until 12 every night, frosty mugs, a game and pool room, and an oval bar that seats 27, making it the largest in Amherst according to Slobody.

Beck's, Bass and Molson are on tap in addition to Miller Light and Coors, and three TV monitors allow a sideline view of any sporting event from all 360 degrees of the bar.

Open seven days a week from 11 a.m. to 1 a.m., Slobody said Charlie's is the type of place where friends can meet and hang out leisurely, not a bar with a "packed-in-like-sardines crowd."

Mike's Westview Cafe
163 Old Sunderland Road
North Amherst

If a brand new jukebox, cheap pitchers of beer, pool tables and sports on TV sounds like just the ticket, Mike's West View Cafe is the right place.

Open every day from 11:30 a.m. to 1 a.m., this family-run establishment, according to co-owner Steve Duca, has been serving Amherst for 50 years. He gave it the down-home description of "an inexpensive place to drink."

Mike's also serves a buffet on Fridays between 4 and 8 p.m. featuring something for all tastes from barbeque to Italian to homestyle for $2. A buffet with a lighter fare is served Monday through Thursday between 4 and 6 p.m.

He added, by the way, that it's a great place to watch the sunset. Mike's West View Cafe really does face west.

Time Out Inc.
37 N. Pleasant Street
Amherst Center

Manager Michael Fusia cut right to the nitty gritty when he billed Time Out Inc. as a "sneaker and blue jeans kind of place."

He said Time Out offers six beers on draft, 25 bottled varieties, weekly drink or pitcher specials, free popcorn for everyone, and "sports all the time."

A luncheon sandwich menu is served Monday through Saturday between 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. and on Sundays between noon and 1 p.m. Hot dogs are served for the ball game fans.

Hours are 11:30 to 1 a.m. daily and Fusia added Steve, the bartender, is "the cutest bartender in town."

The Pub
15 East Pleasant Street
Amherst Center

With a full restaurant and bar, a pool table, video games, basketball machines, sports on TV, a disc jockey and dance floor, The Pub could probably safely boast that it has something for almost everyone.

The Pub serves breakfast, lunch and dinner Monday through Saturday between 11:30 a.m. and 9:30 p.m. as well as an a-la-carte brunch on Sundays between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. and daily dinner entree specials.

Every night at 9:30, part of the restaurant gives way to a disco-lit dance floor and a DJ spins popular music until 1:30 a.m.

Chef and Assistant Manager Keith Fowler said, "The Pub was very much just a bar in the middle and late '70s, but in the '80s the food has come in strong."

He also said heightened alcohol awareness has prompted them to serve free appetizers after 10:30 p.m. offered automatically by waitresses to the tables.

Fowler noted The Pub's variety appeals to families as well as the nighttime college crowd.

Delano's
57 North Pleasant
Amherst Center

On the beaten path of Amherst's strip, Delano's offers "not an overly fancy menu" with the best burger in the valley, according to owner Chick Delano.

The bar has catered to students for 12 years.

"I wish they would stay year-round. They make the whole town vibrant," Delano said.

Delano's is a fun place with great ambiance, Delano said. Wood interior and a copper-top bar add to the decor.

A lunch and dinner menu is offered, but at 9 p.m. Delano said the place really becomes a college bar that he characterized as really popular.

"We enjoy the kids and the kids enjoy us," Delano said.

Delano said he talks and listens to his customers and as result has installed a new laser disc jukebox. "It'll probably be one of the best sound systems."

New to the menu are potato skins with broccoli and cheese or bacon and cheese.

From 4 to 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. to midnight Delano's serves free munchies. Delano's highlights the afternoon by showing Cheers on the bar television from 5 to 6 p.m.

The bar has an Island Oasis blender in which drinks such as frozen mudslides are featured. In early September Delano's will offer vodka tonics as their drink special.

Delano's also has an import beer of the month special and features 16 ounce draft beers in pint glasses

Recreation

Fitness Club adds class

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Recreational clubs have sprung up in the Southwest Residential Area as alternatives to nights of elbowing crowds and cotton-mouth mornings .

Larry Moneta, associate director of Housing Services said, "I think the students are bored for a campus this size. Unfortunately people are still learning how to party without alcohol."

The increase in numbers at the University of Massachusetts has echoed growing pains and the administrators are now recognizing what needs to be provided for student night life, Moneta said.

Although Hamlin House in the Northeast Residential Area was the first to house a recreational center, it has remained unrecognized, according to Carol McGrath, a former advisor for the center.

Southwest has exposed the secret, though, with three recreational clubs scheduled to open in John Quincy Adams, Coolidge, and Washingon towers.

Maura Cullen, coordinator for the JQA club, said, "Our club takes it a step further."

The JQA club is more than just a socializing place; it offers state-of-the-art weights, exercise bikes, a rower, a mirrored room for aerobics classes, in addition to a 60-inch color television, a VCR, board games and a pool and pingpong room.

The idea for these clubs developed separately from Club Hamlin. The idea was generated one and a half years ago when the residents wanted a weight room.

Cullen said she suggested adding much more than just weights.

The club, located on the tower's 19th floor, will have a cafe in the lounge. Organizers intend to also use the club for dances and other social functions.

Special furniture has been ordered to modernize the club, which will be strictly open for those who purchase a $28 membership fee per semester. Only those residents of the tower housing the club will be eligible for membership.

Cullen said the intent of the club is to build a community in JQA. "At least it'll get people to meet people when they're not drinking."

The club will be open from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.

Special events will be planned, some of which will be open to non-club members, such as a Sunday night film series, a "Casino Night" and a "Prince Spaghetti Day" on Wednesday nights, in which 30 residents will be able to have a spaghetti dinner for $1.

"It'll be a place for people to come, and hopefully we'll have activities going on all the time so people can have something else to do besides drink," Cullen said.

A recreational club in Coolidge is also scheduled to open this fall, and another club to be set up in the Washington Tower is still in the planning stage, according to Moneta.

Organizers of the Southwest clubs hope they will be successful, or at least better known than the one in Hamlin.

Still, according to McGrath, the Hamlin club is "better than a recreation center and not as glamorous as a club."

Malcom X Center offers alternative fun

The Malcolm X Center serves many different purposes and hosts a variety of activities but always stands as a symbol of the ultimate goal of promoting intercultural exchange, understanding, and fun.

Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs, described the center as a meeting place for friends, as well as a perfect place for making new ones while playing pool or watching one of the free movies sometimes offered.

The Malcolm X Center is student-run and can be found on the ground floor of the Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest. It is conveniently located only a short walk across the quad from the Hamden snack bar and Munchies store.

Eat your way to bed after hours

By PETER LEON
Collegian Staff

After midnight, when you've been out on the town and just don't feel like going home, you can find several places to go for burgers, coffee, or an early breakfast.

The Red Lion. Situated down the street from Pearl Street Club in Northanmpton, the diner features affordable food, and the coffee is palatable. The food may taste greasy to some, but the place only closes for Christmas. A burger, fries and coffee costs about $2.70 without a tip. The diner, a typical all-American eatery, has booths and counterspace.

McManus. Located in the Stop & Shop plaza on Route 9 in Hadley, McManus serves good coffee and large platters of food. A burger, fries and coffee can run about $6 without a tip. The dining room's booths offer a sense of intimacy. The restaurant also offers an extensive ice cream menu.

Filling Station Diner. It stands off Route 91 at the South Deerfield/Sunderland exit. Decorated on the outside with powder blue and pink neon, the diner strikes the first-time goer as a semi-expensive yuppie place, but it has good food cheap. A burger, fries, and coffee is $3.26 without a tip. The portions are the right size for one craving a light meal. The jukeboxes at every table add just the right touch to the atmosphere.

Convenience stores. For quick munchies, Grampy's in Northampton and Sunderland and Seven-Eleven in Sunderland are open all week 24 hours a day. Stop & Shop on Route 9 is open 24 hours a day during the week and has limited hours on weekends.

Huddles nestle into rap

By ERIN ABBEY
and SYLVIA GAUDETTE
Collegian Staff

Night life cannot and does not always focus on parties, bars, or entertainment requiring a ticket. Nighttime can be the right time for rap. It provides a quiet time, after hours, to talk with people who share a common interest or goal and an opportunity to grow as an individual or heighten group awareness.

Listed below are just a few groups now scheduled to meet this fall. Watch the For Your Information section of the Collegian for future groups, and never be afraid to start one. Odds are if one person is concerned about or interested in something, then so are others.

●Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance will have a rap session at 8 p.m. every Wednesday in the LBGA office, upstairs in the Student Union Building. According to Commuter Area Government President Jay Festa it will be a collective workshop focused on open discussion.

●The Office of Third World Affairs will sponsor a series of intercultural discussions at 7 p.m. every other Tuesday night. Discussions will feature a student guest speaker and perhaps a film to explore how other cultures think and live. Locations will be announced on the Campus Center's daily schedule and available at the OTWA.

●Campus Crusade hosts Thank God It's Friday from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Fridays in the Campus Center. About 40 to 60 students of interdenominational Christian faith gather together for a time of encouragement, fun, and learning God's word. Campus director of Campus Crusade at the University of Massachusetts Wayne Okamoto said the meeting is open to anyone and that many who attend have not been affiliated with churches and are just curious about Christ and knowing Him better.

"It's an environment that those curious about God can feel comfortable in," he said.

●Inter Varsity is a group of 40 to 70 students who meet at 7 p.m. Friday nights in the Campus Center for Bible teaching, music, and fellowship. The group also has Bible studies that meet in the evenings throughout the week.

Alyson Beecher, a staff worker for Inter Varsity, said, "The Bible studies are good to get know people and build a small support group."

●The Southwest Area Government is sponsoring the Seven O'clock Tuesday Night Series to provide a relaxed lecture/forum time for students. The workshop seminars will touch on such topics as managing money and dealing with roommates. The first in the Tuesday night meetings will be Sept. 13 regarding the opportunities at the UMass.

Party

All are welcome to roam in Greek parties

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Fraternities and sororities may be greek to you but on Friday and Saturday nights everybody speaks the same language. Even if you can't decipher their names or understand their organization, you can still come and party with the greeks.

Interfraternity Council Vice President of Activities and Leadership Scott Princer said, "The parties are the kickers."

Sponsored every weekend by the Greek area and hosted at varying Greek houses, the parties allow for people to interact and meet new friends, Princer said.

"At Pike [Pi Kappa Alpha] it's like being at a dance club," he said, noting the lights reminiscent of a disco.

The parties may have a band or disk jockey and sometimes have themes like togas or Halloween. "We try to have a good mix of themes," he said.

The parties are open to campus students on an invitational basis but sometimes are not limited only to the invited guests, Princer said.

"Our intention is not to make those on the outside of the organization feel alienated," he said. "We share the same interests."

The only difference is that the greeks are part of one more organization, he said. "We share just about everything," even the same hometowns.

Besides parties that are open to the public the Greeks also plan parties strickly for their members.

If you see a group traipsing from one Greek house to another this could be the Greek's exchange night. Thursdays are reserved for members of one fraternity and one sorority to have a get-together. Usually these take on themes such as a wedding, funeral or nerd get-together.

The greeks also plan date parties and formals throughout the semester.

RUSH, about a two-week period where the members familiarize students with their houses, will be coming up this fall for those who wish to become members of the Greek system.

Carleen Riccelli, Greek Area coordinator, said, "There's much more you get out of it if you become a member."

The Top of the Campus lounge becomes a place for relaxation as customers rest from a day's worth of worries.

Cable television to reach the TOC lounge

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The apex of all local bars is on the Campus Center's 10th floor. The Top of the Campus lounge jams on the aerial view of the campus pond and Fine Arts Center.

The new upbeat feature this fall will be cable television to catch the ever-important sports games, TOC Beverage Manager Mary Bourret said.

"I think its going to help us a lot and we'll get some extra televisions up here," she said.

The TOC offers a more relaxed atmosphere with swivel padded chairs and carpeting.

If you're not sure you want to go out, bring your own cassette and you'll never know you left when they play it on their sound system.

This is the place to bring a date for frozen drinks, conversation, and gazing out the window.

Bourret said, "This isn't the kind of bar where you come and get really cocked. The atmosphere is laid back and casual."

But beware! She said sometimes it gets rowdy depending on the crowd. "A lot of people warm up here."

The munchies menu at the TOC is popular. TOC Beverage Manager Randy Krutzler said, "Since we put that in three years ago its really become a hot item."

Krutzler said Monday through Thursday is when the students frequent the TOC. "You get out of class and its easy to come up here."

During special sports games such as Monday night football, Bourret said the TOC plans to have free food such as hotdogs.

From 4 to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday the bar serves free hors d'oeuvres such as crackers and vegetables and dip. Hot hors d'oeuvres are served from 9 to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

A complete munchies menu runs from 4 to 9 p.m. every day and features chicken wings, stuffed potatoe skins, and onion soup.

The bar features drink specials every week.

Minutemen look for answers as season nears

The UMass Minutemen have fought through their preseason drills and are ready to kick off the season Saturday against Maine.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Aside from the physical drills and grueling exercises, football training camp is a time for a team to address problems and questions about the upcoming season.

There will be no shortage of questions for the University of Massachusetts football team this season as it tries to improve on last year's disappointing 3-8 record.

Jim Reid took over as head coach in 1986, and promptly led the team to an 8-3 record and a three-way share of the Yankee Conference title.

But the momentum didn't carry into 1987, and a slow start by the Minutemen dictated their fate for the season. UMass lost its first three games and five of its first six.

But Reid feels he has identified one of the biggest problems the team faced.

"We didn't have any leaders," Reid said. "In 1986 we had a lot of fifth-year seniors but last year, no one stepped forward."

That hurt the Minutemen off the field as well, when the team's character was called into question following a racially motivated brawl in 1987.

Judge Frederick Hurst issued a report that essentially blamed the team. In the end, only one player was implicated, a fact that was not given nearly as much publicity.

"[The Hurst report] caused trauma on this team," Reid said. "We were hung out to dry and never brought back in."

But there were problems on the field which the Minutemen brought on themselves — namely turnovers.

"We turned the ball over 48 times last year and that's too many mistakes," Reid said. "When you see an incomplete pass, it's easy to blame the quarterback, but it could have been caused by a wrong pass route or a missed block.

"We want everyone to be accountable for their actions on any given play, and we've set goals to reduce our turnovers."

The UMass quarterback could be either Dave Palazzi or Tim Bryant, depending on which game you watch.

Reid used both last year, including a game in which he rotated them on consecutive series, and was hesitant to name a starter last week.

Palazzi passed for 1868 yards and 10 touchdowns but threw 18 interceptions last season. Bryant threw for 243 yards, one TD, and six interceptions.

Several of Palazzi's and Bryant's passes may find their way to Lamar Newsome, a freshman who has made a name for himself in camp.

Tailback Kevin Smellie, who led the team in rushing with 587 yards, will be back this season.

"Smellie looked awesome in preseason and [sophomore] David Mitchell really flew out at us," Reid said. "And Newsome will add a lot of speed at receiver."

Ted Barrett, who came back from three operations for colitis last season, pulled a hamstring and is expected to miss the team's opener Saturday against the University of Maine.

Barrett's absence won't be the only thing different about the UMass running game.

"If there was a book about tragedies, Ted Barrett would be the author and star player," Reid said. "He gives us a lift just by his presence."

Chip Mitchell, who was a tailback last year, will move to wide receiver and fullback Kevin Murphy, who suffers from a chronic pinched nerve, will switch to defensive tackle.

UMass also suffered a loss when Dave Turzak, a transfer from the University of West Virginia, walked out of camp for personal reasons.

But perhaps the biggest injury the Minutemen have to contend with is to Mike Barrette, who may miss the first eight games of the season while recovering from a foot operation. Barrette was an All-Yankee Conference selection at offensive tackle last year.

"Barrette is a key loss," Reid said. "The offensive line is going to have some work to do."

"We're going to have a real problem with depth on the offensive and defensive lines," Reid said.

On the defensive side, the Minutemen lost four of last year's leading tacklers.

Parity could rule in YanCon

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

There is a short period at the beginning of each season when every team has an identical record and there is no way of being quite sure which team is best.

University of Massachusetts head football coach Jim Reid feels people may see that kind of equality throughout this season in the Yankee Conference.

"It will be absolute parity," Reid said. "Anyone could challenge."

There has been parity in the conference in this decade, as more than one team has shared the title in six of the last seven seasons.

Last year, the University of Richmond and the University of Maine tied for the YanCon title with 6-1 records.

UMass finished with a 2-5 conference record and tied for fifth place.

In this season's preseason poll, Richmond was picked to win the division and UMass was picked to finish seventh.

But the main reason Reid feels any team could end up on top is that each team has an impact player.

"Every team has at least one standout player that could take control and that can make the difference," Reid said.

The following is a look at the top players and an outlook for each team:

Boston University — The person who could have the biggest impact on the Terriers is first-year head coach Chris Palmer.

Palmer inherits 10 returning starters on defense from last year's 2-5 (3-8 overall) team. The strength should lie in the secondary, led by defensive back Mark Seals, a first team All-America selection last year.

John McKeown, a second-team All-Conference and third-team All-New England selection last year, is the only one remaining.

McKeown, who finished second on the team in tackles with 117, missed part of camp due to class commitments and is still affected by a foot injury suffered last season against Villanova.

Nevertheless, he is listed as the starting linebacker and should be ready for the season opener.

Another returning starter, defensive tackle Dan Charron, has a severe groin injury and will be out for one to three weeks.

Murphy is expected to take over at left tackle.

Noseguard Joe Cullen and tackle Steve Brothers are the other linemen, and Drew Comeau, George Karelas, McKeown and Matt Tulley should start at linebacker.

The secondary will feature Garrick Amos and Jerome Bledsoe at cornerback, and Scott Alia and Pat Doran at safety.

"The defense is tough as nails," Reid said. "They run around like scalded hounds."

On special teams, senior Silvio Bonvini is the kicker and Dimitri Yavis, also a senior, will handle the punting. Yavis will also start at tight end.

Everyone is going to have to work together for the Minutemen this season, a fact that is painfully clear to the team.

"I've never worked harder and neither have [the players]," Reid said. "We've had our toughest preseason and they have responded well."

Physically and mentally, the players have given Reid all he could ask for. Now if they can only provide answers to all the questions.

Connecticut — Junior quarterback Matt DeGennaro will be the leader for the Huskies. The YanCon Rookie-of-the-Year last season, DeGennaro threw for over 2000 yards as UConn won its last four games to finish third in the conference with a 5-2 record and 7-4 overall.

All-conference tailback Jeff Gallaher, who gained 715 yards and was an All-American honorable mention last season, will be back to lead the running attack.

Delaware — The Fightin' Blue Hens will be led by All-America wide receiver James Anderson, who hauled in 54 passes for 1067 yards and 11 touchdowns last year as Delaware went 2-5 (tied for fifth) in the YanCon and 5-6 overall.

The running game should also be strong with the return of fullback Tim Healy and halfbacks Gil Knight and Randy Holmes, and head coach Tubby Raymond will rely on the strength of the defensive line.

Maine — The Black Bears possess one of the best quarterbacks in the conference in junior Mike Buck. As the conference Player-of-the-Year last season, Buck threw for 2987 yards and 23 touchdowns.

The Black Bears, who were 8-4 overall last season, should be in good shape. The only key losses for the co-YanCon champions were wide receiver Sergio Hebra and strong safety Rob Sterling, an All-America selection.

New Hampshire — Senior quarterback Bob Jean will lead a potent passing attack for the UNH, which finished fourth in the conference last year with 4-3 record. The Wildcats were 7-3 overall.

Jean will throw to wide receivers Curtis Olds (807 yards last season) and Chris Braune (761). Tailback Norm Ford, who averaged 109 yards and one touchdown per game in seven contests last year, will be back.

Rhode Island — The Rams fought through an injury riddled season in 1987 and finished 1-10 overall and 1-6 (last place in the conference).

On the bright side, URI has 19 starters returning (nine of offense, 10 on defense), and head coach Bob Griffin has the luxury of three quality quarterbacks in Paul Ghilani, Kevin Neville and Steve Monaco.

Richmond — Running back Erwin Matthews is the man for the Spiders.

As a junior last season, Matthews rushed for 1234 yards and 11 touchdowns while being selected first team All-Conference and honorable mention All-America.

There are 49 other players returning from last year's co-championship team, which was 6-1 in the conference and 7-5 overall.

Villanova — The Wildcats are eligible for the conference championship for the first time this season.

The aerial connection of quarterback Kurt Schultz (2338 yards and 23 touchdowns in 1987) to split end Rob Brady (687 yards, 10 TDs) will be back.

Villanova, which was 6-4 last year, was 2-2 against Yankee Conference teams, including a 44-27 victory over UMass in Philadelphia.

UMass coaching changes continue with five over summer

Guy Van Arsdale, one of the more popular coaches at UMass, has moved on to take a head coaching position.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The coaching situation at the University of Massachusetts, which has been in perpetual motion for the past year, shuffled even more over the summer, as five coaches left UMass and two were hired.

UMass also lost the services of assistant football coaches Jay Cottone, now the head football coach at Hall High School in West Hartford, and Gary Emanuel, now an assistant at Dartmouth.

Brian Jones, formerly an assistant coach at Villanova, has been hired to replace Emanuel as outside linebacker coach. Head coach Jim Reid will coach the quarterbacks, which was Cottone's responsibility.

The summer changes bring the number of coaching moves at the University to 10 in the last year. Despite the seemingly high number, UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney doesn't see it as a major problem.

"It would be of concern to me if they weren't leaving for good reasons," McInerney said. "And I think it's a tribute to us as a university that other schools are dipping into our programs.

"Chuck Shiebler was offered an opportunity he could not refuse. We hate to lose him but I'm delighted he is making such progress as a coach.

"Guy Van Arsdale was offered a position as head coach at a school with a very respectable lacrosse program. You can't blame him.

"But good people are sought after," McInerney continued. "I'd rather have a good coach for two or three years than have a mediocre one forever."

Kalekeni Banda, the women's soccer coach who led UMass to five consecutive Final Four berths, left after last season to become track coach at Amherst College.

But he has been replaced by Jim Rudy, a proven coach from the University of Central Florida, which lost to UMass in the national semifinals last season.

"We're very happy to get Jim Rudy," McInerney said. "He has shown that he can be successful."

The search processes are over for the new woman's basketball and gymnastics coaches and each field has been narrowed down to two candidates.

As of last week, McInerney was planning to recommend Kathy Hewelt, who was scheduled to visit the campus over Labor Day weekend, as the new women's basketball coach.

If hired, Hewelt would take over for Allman, who had a turbulent first year as head coach last season and didn't get along with certain members of the team.

Allman was offered a contract by the University but turned it down.

Hewelt, meanwhile, has a 117-59 record, has led Indiana Tech to four seasons with 20 or more wins, and would appear to be an excellent choice.

"Kathy's record has been very impressive," McInerney said. "We're looking to bring some stability to the women's basketball program, which has had four coaches in four years."

The women's basketball program is an extreme example of turnover, but in addition to the sports already mentioned, baseball, women's track, men's basketball have also been affected by coaching changes within the past year.

Dick Bergquist retired after 21 years as head baseball coach and was replaced by Mike Stone.

Julie LaFreniere took over the women's track team when Banda left, and John Calipari, an assistant coach at University of Pittsburgh, was hired to replace men's basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen, who resigned in March.

Bill Bayno and Roger McCready have been hired to replace assistant coaches Bart Bellairs and Dennis Jackson, who both left UMass when Gerlufsen resigned.

Gerlufsen is now the head coach at Shepherd College in West Virginia.

"In Division I, it is a difficult scramble to find good coaches and it's getting more difficult all the time," McInerney said. "We're a conservative school and we go by the book. That makes it difficult.

"I don't expect this cluster of turnover to happen again soon, though."

There certainly hasn't been a shortage of coaching changes at UMass. The University can only hope they turn out to be for the better.

New faces bring new hope for women's soccer

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

On a frigid day last November, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team walked out of Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium as runners-up for the NCAA Division I national championship, a finish that clearly established the Minutewomen as a national power.

Since that time, the head coach and six highly successful seniors have departed, but their respective replacements are high on the prospects of the coming season.

First year head coach Jim Rudy has stepped in from the University of Central Florida and hopes to once again have the Minutewomen near the top of the women's collegiate soccer world. He is encouraged with what he has seen so far.

"After a week of training, everything looks solid," Rudy said. "We've got 15 or 16 solid players who are working very hard. We're in good shape at this point as far as the direction we want to go in."

But, as is the case in anything where wholesale changes are made, there are certain obstacles that have to be overcome.

First, Rudy will have to fill the gaps left by the graduated seniors. In Kristen Bowsher, Carolyn Micheel, Cathy Spence, Christine Schmitt, Monica Seta and Debbie Belkin, nearly half of the team's scoring from last year is gone. Rudy will be relying on some old stand-bys, as well as a couple of sleepers, to produce the needed offense.

Sophomore forward April Kater and senior forward Beth Roundtree are the top returning scorers. Kater was third on the team in points last year (25 on 10 goals and five assists), followed by Roundtree (0-4-24), senior midfielder Cathy Cassady (4-10-18) and sophomore forward Sue Gaudette (6-3-15).

The defense will be bolstered by returning senior Sue Montagne and junior Sarah Szetela. The strong point on the team, as it has been in recent memory, is in goal, where senior Carla DeSantis will look to once again be her usual stingy self. Last season, DeSantis allowed just eight goals in 22 games, posting 14 shutouts.

Rudy feels those players should be the dominant players in terms of decision making, but isn't leaving the responsibility strictly up to them. He had major roles in store for several other players.

Senior forward Michelle Powers will play a key part in Rudy's plans. Last year could be considered an off-year for her, with just four goals and three assists, but Rudy feels she can bounce back and once again be near the top.

Rudy brings winning ways to UM

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When Jim Rudy came to Amherst last November, leading his University of Central Florida women's soccer team into the Final Four at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, he had know idea what his future in Amherst had in store.

He had hoped the visit could bring a national championship back to the Sunshine State. But, Rudy could only look across the field as his team was being beaten, 2-1 by the University of Massachusetts, maybe thinking to himself how he would like to be the guy on the other side of the field.

Little could he have known on that Arctic-like day that he would eventually become just that. No, not the winning coach in that game, but the coach of the University of Massachusetts.

When former coach Kalekeni Banda announced his resignation in March to take a position at Amherst College, a serious vacancy was created in the forefront of one of the most powerful women's soccer teams in the nation. It would take a high-calibre coach to fill the shoes of success that Banda had worn in his days here.

At Central Florida, Rudy had tasted success. He was the right man for the job, and the UMass administration agreed.

Rudy, 38, has coached both men's and women's soccer at Central Florida. The 1972 Rollins College graduate coached the men since 1972, with a record of 129-58-16, including consecutive trips to the NCAA tournament in 1982 and 1983. In 1981, he began coaching the women's team as well, and had a record of 74-23-6 with three tournament appearances.

Men's soccer assumes underdog role

Minutemen aim for consistency with veteran team

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

Last year, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team finished the season with a 7-11-2 record but those numbers don't tell the whole story.

"We were a pretty good team," sixth-year coach Jeff Gettler said. "We just had a schedule that was more mature than our players.

"We had the toughest schedule in New England, barring no one. UConn and ourselves had the toughest rating of schedule."

The Minutemen found themselves playing ranked opponents week after week but usually came up just short. Nine of UMass' eleven losses were by only one goal.

Now the Minutemen find themselves starting the season with little respect. They were not ranked amongst the top 10 in an ISAA New England soccer poll last week but instead found themselves behind teams that they defeated last year such as Boston University and Providence College.

In fact, the Minutemen play nine of the top 10 teams in the poll, again the toughest schedule in New England. UMass will play second-ranked Dartmouth, Vermont (fourth), Yale (sixth), and Brown (seventh), all in 12 days.

"I think that is great," Gettler said. "I always felt the players are better when they start as underdogs."

The Minutemen also round out the season with 10th-ranked Boston College, 9th-ranked Providence, and Soccer America's number one ranked team in the nation, Harvard University.

At first glance, it appears the Minutemen have their work cut out for them. They lost their leading scorer, Andy Bing, who graduated and went to the Boston Bolts of the American Soccer League (see page 14), and they have only four seniors returning.

Gettler, however, said UMass should actually be stronger.

"We only lost one good goal scorer but we return 16 lettermen, that is a veteran squad," he said. "Now we have five, maybe six driving members on the team. Players that, when the going gets tough, put their stamp on the game."

"I don't think that in soccer, one person can do that."

The center of the UMass attack will be run by sophomore Peter McEvoy, last year's Atlantic 10 Freshman-of-the-Year, who had the knack of being in all the right places.

"He is going to run the midfield," Gettler said. "He's got great touch, great vision, and is by far our most fit and committed player. He should have a great season."

Joining McEvoy on the UMass offense will be junior forward Steve Cesnek and sophomore forward Carl Hanks.

Cesnek was selected to the All-New England team last year and Gettler said he will be a marked man for opposing defenses this year but that is not stopping UMass from going to him.

"We are really going to rely on him and put the pressure on him in the game," Gettler said.

That kind of respect for Cesnek could open the door wide open for Hanks to step in and have a career-type season. "Carl Hanks is going to have a great season because Cesnek's runs are going to get a lot of attention. (Hanks) can be a very explosive player," Gettler said. The more diversified offense will also mean good news for UMass fans that want to see an up-tempo game.

"We have always been a very methodical team. Now we are going to be a more exciting team to play. We have a lot of speed now. That is something we have never had before," Gettler said.

Minutemen aim for consistency with veteran team

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

In Division I soccer, very little separates a fair to good team from a very good team. The difference between the two is "consistency of performance", according to the University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach Jeff Gettler.

Consistency of performance is what Gettler's hoping will turn his team from a 7-11-2 record last season to conference contenders this year.

Although it may be early to be thinking about end-of-season tournaments, the Minutemen feel they are capable of challenging for the top spot in the conference.

"Our goal is to get into the Atlantic 10 tournament and win it so we can qualify for the (National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament)," he said.

Only six conferences in the country receive automatic bids to the NCAA Tournament for the champions of their conferences, and the A-10 just qualified.

"UMass has never been in the NCAAs in 60 years of soccer," Gettler said. "We are going to strive to be the best team we can be."

The Minutemen have quite a challenge in front of them. They lost their leading scorer for the past two years, Andy Bing, and they return only four seniors.

"All these kids went through the tough times last year, they know what's got to get done and what doesn't. They matured a lot since last year," Gettler said.

The Minutemen open their season on Sunday at Boyden Field at 1 p.m. against the eighth-ranked Black Bears of Maine. Sunday's game will be the first of four consecutive home games for UMass.

Return trip to Final Four the goal for field hockey

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It has been almost nine months since last season ended for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team, but there is still that same Final Four atmosphere in the air.

The Minutewomen are still feeling the excitement from last year's third place finish at the Final Four championships at Chapel Hill, NC, which culminated with a 3-1 win over the University of Iowa in the consolation game.

The same faces are back, though some are in different roles. Amy Robertson and Lynn Carlson, despite playing out their eligibility, have become volunteer assistants to UMass coach Pam Hixon.

"I think with the team we have returning, our goal should be to do as well as we did last season," Hixon said. "Which means getting into the tournament."

There are only two possible ways for the Minutewomen to improve upon last season. A) They can lose the national championship game. B) They can win the national championship game.

But Hixon feels no pressure on her shoulders to win. In fact, she is more confident this season than in years past.

"I've actually been a little more relaxed this season," Hixon said. "The players are still on an emotional high from last year and they came back fit and ready to play."

Last season, UMass was the 12th team in a 12-team field invited to play in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Tourney.

But the Minutewomen used that to their own advantage by gaining momentum with a big win over the University of New Hampshire. They carried it into the regional final with Providence College, where they rocked the Friars 4-1.

Six Minutewomen will be suiting up one last time for the Minutewomen this season. They are seniors Ruth Vasapolli, Julie Stuart, Pamela Bustin, Chris Gutheil, Kathleen Derwin, and Susan Desmond.

Vasapolli and Stuart are both midfielders who gelled at the end of the season to form a successful penalty corner combination. Vasapolli was the second-leading scorer for UMass last season with four goals and five

"She had a down year last year in terms of statistics and basic results, but she already looks twice as good as she did last year," Rudy said.

Rudy also will look to senior midfielder Susan Cooper and sophomore back Becky Bonzano, as well as sophomore forwards Robin Runstein and Kim Montgomery, for bigger and better things. He also feels that junior goalkeeper Mary Curtis looks stronger and is ready to be an able backup to DeSantis.

Then there are the freshmen. Despite missing the "blue-chip" recruits because of the absence of a coach for several months, Rudy has three rookies in camp, each of whom is making a strong showing.

Forward Michelle Woodside of Springfield, VA, and forward/back Tracy Arwood of Annandale, VA lead the frosh crop, along with Teresa Eastmond of Long Valley, NJ, a forward in high school who Rudy thinks will end up on defense.

"The freshmen are doing some damage. They're making a visible impact," said Rudy.

So, Rudy has the ensemble arranged. But he has an even bigger challenge ahead, that being to train his team, particularly the veterans, to his style of play.

"It seems to me that (former coach Kalekeni) Banda stressed individuality, flair and reaction. Those are all positive things, and you've got to have them," Rudy said. "I stress tactical things, meaning to look, see and make the right decisions. I like to make people think."

Rudy feels his philosophies are ones that bear long-term objectives.

"One of my goals is to educate them to be able to do something beyond college, like the Olympics or the nationals," Rudy said. "Players intelligent enough to make a decision from what they see will go far if they have the athletic ability.

"There's space on any team for thinkers. In that way, our (he and Banda's) philosophies are different, but it's not a positive or negative thing. You need individuals to raise you, but if you have all individuals, a good team can beat you."

The Minutewomen face a difficult schedule, one which has them potentially playing 12 teams ranked among the top 20 in the country. Included are stretches of four consecutive road games and four games in six days, plus matches with North Carolina, North Carolina State and Colorado College, all Top 10 calibre.

When asked if Rudy could live up to his predecessor's success with the team, he was optimistic, but didn't make any promises.

"We're gonna do it. In the outside world, there's this incredible awe about UMass. We have a terrific reputation," Rudy said. "I think we'll be aggressive, as evidenced by our uniforms, which are all red. We have a high work rate, and lots of people running for each other.

"But we're just going to take it one game at a time. Our goal is to just make the playoffs first and take it from there. As you know, anything can happen in the playoffs," Rudy said.

Rudy is in a unique situation. He has had the opportunity to view UMass from both sides of the field. Last year, Rudy's Central Florida team came here for the Final Four, and lost in the semifinals to the Minutewomen, 2-1.

"I'd much rather be with UMass than against them, I'll tell you that," Rudy said.

Former Minutewomen preparing for Olympics

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Megan Donnelly, a UMass assistant field hockey coach, will compete for the U.S. team in Seoul, South Korea this month.

When the torch is lit in Seoul, South Korea on September 17, signalling the start of the 1988 Olympic Games, at least two former athletes from the University of Massachusetts will be in attendance.

Megan Donnelly, a sweeper that played for the UMass field hockey team under Pam Hixon from 1982-86, will don the red, white, and blue for the United States team as its starting sweeper.

Patti Shea, who also was a Minutewoman for Hixon from 80'-83' will be in goal for the U.S. Olympic team

Patti Bossio, who is an assistant coach to Pam Hixon, and who played for UMass from 1977-81 played on the same team with Shea.

"She started for us in goal and was fantastic," Bossio said. "She was really good to play in front of, really vocal. We went like 17-1-1 that year and Patti Shea had like 15 shutouts.

Bossio also competed in two Olympic Festivals for a sweeper spot on the National team against Donnelly until 1985.

"They will definitely be people that if you see anything on T.V., will be names that you will hear," Bossio said. "They will be household names in field hockey."

You could say that both owe a lot to UMass for the position that they are in today. But you could also say that UMass owes alot to them for the performances that they turned in on the field and in the class room.

They are truly a credit to the University.

Donnelly was a four-time All-American in field hockey at UMass but she was also an Academic All-American for two years. In her senior year Donnelly was awarded the Broderick Trophy, given by the NCAA for outstanding achievement in field hockey.

They will definitely be people that if you see anything on TV, will be names that you will hear. They will be household names in field hockey.
— Patti Bossio, UMass assistant coach

She has been around UMass during the last few days of the summer helping out Hixon get this year's team ready for a season in which they will try to repeat last year's Final Four appearance.

Donnelly helped lead the Minutewomen to the NCAA tournament in each of the four years that she attended UMass.

In her sophomore year, she, along with Shea led the 16-3-2 Minutewomen to a third place finish in the Final Four championships at the University of Pennsylvania.

Donnelly, a Wilmington native, scored 41 goals and dished out five assists during her tenure at UMass.

With a few weeks to go before the Olympics she could have been doing anything, but she decided to come back to the place that helped her develop her skills enough to win a starting spot on the Olympic team.

"I love this school and I really wanted to give something back to the school that put me there," Donnelly said.

Hixon is a big reason why Donnelly is where she is today.

"Pam was just such a knowledgable coach," Donnelly said. "She is one of the finest coaches in the country. For me, the main part was her motivating abilities. She always challenged me to be the best player I could be."

Donnelly has been gone for two years but the one thing that sticks out in her mind about UMass field hockey is something that is so important in the world of sports.

"The thing that I remember most is the real team spirit that was always here, the real team effort," Donnelly said.

After Donnelly graduated from UMass, she took a coaching job at Stanford where she has remained the last two years while playing for the National Field Hockey team, a team she has played for since May, 1985.

And when she returns from Seoul after the games, Donnelly just might be bringing home a new gold necklace.

"I think we have a good chance," Donnelly said. "We have a very good team."

The U.S. team won the bronze medal in 1984 at the Olympic games in Los Angeles. "Our team goal is to play better than the '84 team did," Donnelly said

The U.S. team should know exactly where it stands after the first game on Sept. 21 when they play defending Olympic champion, Holland.

When Donnelly returns she will be attending UMass as a doctoral student in anthropology for the next four or five years.

And during that time she will also be helping out Hixon with the field hockey team.

And by the end of that time, the University just might be in debt to her.

Experience makes UM volleyball a top team this year

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team may have a surprise in store for the Atlantic 10 conference this year. The Minutewomen are poised, experienced, and ready to take shot at being one of the top teams in the conference.

"Penn State (the hands-down champion of the A-10 for the past seven years) is going to be tough but we look strong for second. We are shooting for number one but we look good for second," second-year coach Carol Ford said.

The Minutewomen returned to campus two weeks ago with the goal of winning the A-10 championship. They have been holding double and triple sessions and Ford said she is very impressed with how prepared the players have come into the preseason.

"The kids returned in good shape and their basics look very good. Everyone worked out (over the summer) and it's evident," Ford said. This year's team will be trying to improve upon last year's accomplishments when it went 21-9 and upset A-10 rival George Washington University in the Atlantic 10 Tournament before losing to the eventual champions, Penn State, in the second round.

Quite simply, UMass' strength this year is its experience. They lost only one senior from last year, middle-hitter Marcy Guilliotis.

Sophomore coach is hoping second season is the charm

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

Freshman year is a learning experience for everyone. There are new people, places, and situations to adjust to. UMass volleyball coach Carol Ford was no exception, her rookie year at UMass had its frustrations and trying moments. But as she now begins her sophomore year of coaching at UMass, she said she has matured from last season.

"I learned a lot last year. I learned about the conference and how to keep things in perspective," Ford said.

She came to UMass as a new face on campus last year. She was faced with a team that had already been together for awhile and a season-long adjustment took place.

"The transition season is over. Things have been so much easier (this year)," she said.

Ford said she has maintained a very disciplined approach to coaching the team and that approach hasn't changed from last year.

"I don't have any rules. They act like adults and I treat them like adults," Ford said.

Now that team and coach know what to expect from each other, Ford said she is looking for a successful yet fun season.

"It has been very fulfilling already. I'm proud of (the team) because they came back in shape both physically and mentally," she said.

"I have been much more effective with them because they know what to expect."

The challenge for Ford this season is to replace last year's team leader in blocks and kills while also preparing a team that is capable of playing with the top A-10 teams: Penn State and West Virginia.

Penn St. has dominated the conference for the past seven years and is expected to win the conference again this year.

"We still can't compete to these other programs with more scholarships and tougher schedules. But those aren't excuses. I don't think there is any team in our conference that doesn't worry about us," Ford said. "If they don't (worry) they'll be in for a surprise."

"We can (compete with the top teams) it's just a matter of training and commitment."

"We have a lot of seniors and some strong juniors, it should be a good season."

Patience pays off for DiSarcina, 4 others on Draft Day

Former UMass players join pro ranks

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

They say good things come to those who wait. Gary DiSarcina found that out this summer.

DiSarcina was one of five University of Massachusetts baseball players to be selected in this year's amatuer draft.

Lefthanded pitcher Mike Owens was taken by the Philadelphia Phillies in the seventh round, righty Ken Greer was chosen by the New York Yankees in the 10th round, catcher Dean Borrelli was drafted by the Oakland Athletics in the 20th round, and righty pitcher Steve Allen went to the Texas Rangers in the 37th round.

All five players signed and Allen reported to the Rookie League. The other four reported to Class A.

The California Angels selected DiSarcina in the sixth round on June 1, but not before testing his patience.

"I was waiting at my house on draft day," DiSarcina said in a phone interview from Bend, OR. "I had talked to Owens and Greer in the afternoon and they had already found out they were drafted.

"I was waiting and there was no call. So at about 5:30, I called a friend and we decided to go out. I was getting in the car when I heard the phone ring. I went back in and it was them.

"The Angels didn't release their picks until late in the day so that's why they hadn't called. I thought I might get drafted but the sixth round was a little higher than I thought."

California gave DiSarcina a chance in professional baseball and he has made the most of it.

The shortstop, who had been named a captain of the Minutemen for next season, didn't take long to become a leader after reporting to the Bend Bucks of the Northwest League.

DiSarcina led the team in batting average (.305), hits (90), triples (5) runs scored (40), slugging percentage (.397) and on base percentage (.363). He was second in doubles (11) and runs batted in (39).

"As of mid-July, we didn't have anyone hitting over .265, so Gary went on a good solid tear," Bend General Manager Bob Hards said.

DiSarcina led the team in errors, which is not uncommon for a shortstop, with 27, but Hards estimated two-thirds of those errors came in the first half of the season.

"I'm doing alright," DiSarcina said. "I'm not embarrassing myself. You play so many games that you really have to try and keep an even keel. It's kind of like the

"I also think we are going to be an extremely explosive team going to the net, Gettler said. "We are going to play an entirely different style and system (than last year). Defense is going to be a priority. We're going to play an unrelenting defensive game."

Gettler and assistant coach John Martin said they expect defensive aid to come from freshman backer Dan Lawrence.

Last year the Minutemen gave up 10 goals in the air, either by corner kicks or head-in shots. The coaches said Lawrence can give UMass the defensive strength to stop that.

"Lawrence is great in the air, a luxury last year's team didn't have," Martin said.

Of course, the most important part of any defense is the goalkeeper. Competition for the net job has been fierce in the preseason. UMass has been fortunate enough to have five players battling for the starting nod. Usually reserved for upperclassmen with experience, this year's starting GK job has been contested by freshmen Mike Carvalho and Jon Gruber.

The two are challenging veterans Rick King, Sam Ginzburg and Brett Shumsky and Gettler said that the position was wide open.

Regardless, the goalkeeper position is a UMass strength while depth off the bench is still a question at the other positions.

Martin called junior forward Louis Hollmeyer "a pleasant surprise" and Gettler said this year's team already has twice the depth of last year.

"(Captain) Mike McCormick has played the best soccer he has ever played" since changing positions this year, Gettler said.

"I am sure the depth is there. If we went three or four players deep last year our play dropped off," Gettler said.

UMass' goal is to reach the Atlantic 10 tournament and try to win it, thus securing an automatic NCAA Tournament bid. But to do that, the Minutemen must maintain a "consistency of performance," according to Gettler.

"I can't stress that enough. I don't need players to be brilliant one day and lousy the next. They have got to play within themselves every game, all season," Gettler said.

"If we could do that, it would be scary."

Bing continues stellar soccer career in pro ranks

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When a person loves a sport, that often means he will go out of his way to get involved.

For Andy Bing, his love for soccer meant just that.

When the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team stepped off Boyden Field after their final game last November, it could have very easily spelled the end of a stellar career for Bing. In fact, were it not for a fledgling professional league which started this season, that could very well have been the case.

The American Soccer League played its inaugural season in 1988, with eight teams throughout the East coast. Included were the Boston Bolts, who played their home games at Nickerson Field on the campus of Boston University. It was this franchise that gave Bing, among others, the chance to continue his soccer career.

Even had the chance not come along, Bing's career would have still looked good on a resume. A four-year letterman for the Minutemen under coach Jeff Gettler, the Princeton, NJ native is tied for the all-time UMass lead in assists, with 22. He was an invaluable asset for the Minutemen from his midfield position, acting as a set-up man and field general. Three times, he was named All-New England and a New England Intercollegiate Soccer League All-Star.

At the time, Bing hadn't really considered moving on. As far as he was concerned, it was probably the end of his soccer-playing days.

But when the news of the new league came last Spring, he decided to give it another shot.

"I found out about the league last spring, and I decided to try out in March," Bing said.

There was only one hitch. He was still a student at UMass, and trying out for the Bolts meant somehow budgeting his time so that he could do both. He was still committed to his classes, and found that the only way to do both was to drive back and forth from Amherst to Boston.

"It was my final semester, and I had planned it so that I was rid of most of my requirements," Bing said. "Plus, the practices were at night. I did a lot of driving, which I did mind, but the benefits outweighed everything else."

Bing made three trips to the Hub for tryouts, and then found out at the beginning of April that he had made the team. This would require even more trips to Boston, but Bing was able to tolerate it for the month or so before he graduated cum laude with a 3.22 grade point average.

Made up of mostly college players, the Bolts got off to a slow start, beginning the season with just a 1-6 record.

"We were the youngest team in the league, and we didn't have a lot of time to practice," Bing said. "Some of the southern teams were able to practice a lot earlier than we were."

Once the team began to gel, the wins came in bunches. The Bolts recovered to finish a respectable 9-11. And Bing performed much like the team did. He wasn't in outstanding shape at the beginning, but grew stronger as the season went along, and finished the year with 14 points on five goals and four assists. That tied him with former UMass teammate Kurt Manal for the team lead.

Following graduation, it didn't become a simple matter of playing soccer for a living. The league didn't pay enough for him to make a living, so Bing, like most players, had to get a day job working for a business company in Cambridge.

"During the week, we'd practice three times, and trying to hold a job, that was tough," Bing said. "But it was definitely a rewarding experience. It was great just playing on a higher level."

This is not the first outdoor league in America. There have been others before, which just couldn't cut it. Bing feels that the reason was the eagerness to shell out big bucks for high-priced stars that the

"We have a lot of the same kids with some strong freshmen," Ford said. "In comparison, the team I have this year, at this time, is way ahead of last year's team."

The Minutewomen's veteran nucleus will consist of seniors Ann Marie Larese, Barbara Meehan, Juliet Primer, and Julie Smith.

Meehan is a strong middle-hitter with awesome power on her kills and blocks. She will be a key attacker and serious front court threat.

Smith and Primer have provided UMass' pressure from either side of the net in the past but both have rounded their games enough to fill almost any position.

Larese has been extremely consistant and steady from the outside, she has also improved her hitting capacity over the summer, according to Ford. Smith said experience is the key. "The good thing is we have five of six returning players," she said. "It would be nice if we made a strong attempt at winning the Atlantic 10."

The dilemma for UMass, however, is in the middle where it must replace Guiliotis.

This summer's recruiting failed to bring in an immediate impact player that can step right in for the Minutewomen. Newcomer Kelly Ramsey will see time for UMass defensively but will be unable to solve the middle-strength woes.

"That middle will be a problem," Ford said. "I'm worried about the blocking and some offense."

Guiliotis led the Minutewomen in blocks and kills last year— two big holes UMass must fill. The new recruits lack the size and experience to fill the middle-blocker position, so Ford has been working with seniors Juliet Primer and Smith to shore up the middle.

Meehan will probably also see time in the middle because of her size and power.

"I'm having everyone practice everthing," Ford said.

A preseason standout for the Minutewomen has been sophomore back row player Nancy Sullivan, according to Ford. Sullivan saw action sparingly last season but has been tagged a "key" player for this year.

"The hard work she put in last year will pay off this year. She will be a very good player," Ford said.

If new talent blends with old and the middle-blocker position is filled, the Minutewomen should excel at the other positions because of, again, their experience.

The Minutewomen are anchored by junior setter Karen Ferguson. She has been called by some the best setter in the conference. She was selected to the A-10 All-Tournament team last November and was also named on the second team All-Conference team.

"Karen has got to call the shots and run the show," Ford said.

Ferguson finished third in the A-10 in assists last year and has been the center of the Minutewomen's offense for the past two years.

"She'll have the freedom to make her own calls from the court and to use what she thinks will work," Ford said.

Under Ford, UMass has traditionally relied on its defense more than its offense to win games and she said that probably would not change this year.

"We still have to be a good defensive team because we are not very tall. I am still very defensive oriented," Ford said. "Quick offense will be a key also."

UMass cross country teams optimistic about season

● Men looking to qualify for NCAA meet

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts mens' cross country team will be reaching for the stars this season.

The Minutemen were excluded from the National Collegiate Athletic Association polls last season, and didn't crack the top twenty, despite winning the New England Championship for the first time since 1973.

UMass also missed out on the NCAA Championship meet by one spot as it finished seventh in the IC4A meet behind Providence College, a team it had beaten at the New England Championship earlier in the season.

It was the second year in a row that P.C. has bumped off the Minutemen by one spot to gain an NCAA berth.

But in 1988 UMass coach Ken O'Brien has high expectations for the Minutemen. This year's squad is capable of finishing third at the IC4As which would clinch a berth in the NCAA meet O'Brien contends.

The Minutemen have not qualified for the NCAA meet as a team since 1978.

"I think the number one goal now is to improve on our IC4A finish," O'Brien said. "I want to finish in the top three of the IC4As. It is a fairly ambitious goal. But there is no doubt in my mind that we should have been fourth or fifth last year."

That means improvements must be made. As far as training goes there will no changes.

"I think we were physically ready to be one of the top four teams in the IC4A," O'Brien said. "We just didn't run well that day. I don't think physically that we'll make any changes from last year. We might do a little more work."

The Minutemen were a young team last fall. Both senior Kerry Boyle and junior J.J. Millette, will return to claim their spots from last year as UMass' two leading runners.

"I think we got ourselves physically and mentally ready too soon last season," O'Brien said. "We were a relatively young team last year and I think that's a natural thing for young runners."

The Minutemen were not at their best last year at the IC4As but those young runners now have had two track seasons and one summer of training to mature.

"It will be a challenge to repeat our accomplishment of last year," O'Brien said. "If we improve 15 percent this year, we could be one of the top ten teams in the country."

Two runners that could make a difference are senior John Lorenzini and junior Art Smith. Both sat out last season with injuries but O'Brien feels that if they are healthy, both could be top-five runners.

One runner that must stay healthy is senior Keith Williams. Williams ran third for the Minutemen all last season and O'Brien sees him as a key player in UMass' success.

Three runners for UMass that did not run out in front but were solid scorers throughout the year were senior Fitz Hagan and juniors Joe Livorsi and Thomas Degnan.

The freshman crop this year does not contain a runner that could step in and run in the top five like Millette did a couple of years ago.

"I think we have four or five freshman that could contribute in the future," O'Brien said. "I won't rush them because its not worth straining their training to do it."

One runner that might benefit from extra time is junior Gerry Squires. Squires transferred to UMass-Amherst from UMass-Boston last winter during the track season but O'Brien has not seen him compete on a cross country course.

When it comes down to the championship meet time O'Brien wants his top seven runners to be at a peak. That time will begin on Oct. 22 with the Atlantic 10 Championships at Van Cortland Park in New York.

The Minutemen finished second at Van Cortland last season to Penn State who eventually wound up as the No. 3 team in the nation It it is likely that Penn State

● Returning runners hope to boost women

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

When one considers the facts, it is quite amazing that the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team finished eighth in a 34-team field at the New England Championships in 1987.

Number one, the Minutewomen were a very, very young team. Included on their 15 women roster were no less than 12 freshmen which were recruited by former UMass coach Randy Thomas.

UMass also fielded two sophomores and a junior. Sophomore Shana Smith, the New England 1500-meter champion in outdoor track, had never run cross country before and neither had junior Kristen Peers.

And what's even more interesting is that the Minutewomen did not even have a coach until September 14, 1987 when former UMass coach (she served as the women's harrier coach from 1980-84) Julie LaFreniere took over.

That's when things started to take a swing for the better for the Minutewomen. For the first time since the women's cross country team had been established in 1975, the head coach was given full-time status. The post had been a part-time position in preceding years.

Scholarships were given to the women's cross country team for the first time. UMass currently has four women's cross country members on scholarships.

So to sum everything up, 1987 was a rebuilding year for the women's cross country program. However, 1988 is promising to be a very good season for the Minutewomen.

Events of the past year during the off-season give every indication that the Minutewomen are headed back near the top of the pack in the New England region.

The Minutewomen's current roster for 1988 is the largest in its history, with 25 runners for the upcoming year, 10 more than last season.

LaFreniere has recruited two of the top five high school runners from Massachusetts.

Freshman Precious Hill, from Waltham, finished second in the Massachusetts High School Cross Country meet last year. She is also the state champion in the outdoor two-mile track event.

In 1985 Hill won the National Cross Country Championship for 15 year-olds in the United States. Her coach chose not to run her in the national meets in the two following years.

Another freshman that could help out the cause is Amy St. Pierre from Beverly, who was fifth at the Massachusetts Cross Country meet last year.

Two other freshman to watch are Cheryl LeClerc from Waltham and Michelle St. Laurent from Fall River. LeClerc was second in Massachusetts in the 1000-yard run at the state indoor track meet. St. Laurent finished third in the 1000 just behind LeClerc.

The Minutewomen will return all their runners from last year but there could be one question mark. Smith, 13th at the New England Championships, is ready to return but the No. 2 runner, sophomore Dana Goldfarb is not.

Goldfarb has suffered a leg injury which could cause her to miss the entire season. She has been working out in a pool as part of her treatment.

Rounding out the top five for the Minutewomen from one year ago are sophomore Christine Hopkins, senior Kristen Peers, and sophomore Kathy Holt.

Also look for sophomores Lynn Kirchoff, Cathy Crocker, and Debbie Sue Couturier to challenge for places in the top seven.

"Those three have a chance to be in the top seven," LaFreniere said. "They've had a good year under their belts. I think they should be stepping up there."

Last year's youth movement just could be a blessing in disguise for the Minutewomen. Not many teams can afford to gamble with freshmen in their lineups in big meets. Last year UMass had to.

So UMass is one up on most of its competition. In a few years that extra year of experience just might end up paying big

In 1985, Rudy was named as the Florida Intercollegiate Soccer Association Coach-of-the-Year, and has been an assistant coach for the Olympic Sports Festival in 1978 and 1987. He also conducts his own soccer schools throughout the year.

The athletic administration has convinced me of their commitment to women's soccer. They are concerned that it be a first rate program nationally every year.

— Jim Rudy

Rudy was impressed by the commitment of the administration to the program, one of the big reasons he chose to take the job.

"The athletic administration has convinced me of their commitment to women's soccer. They are concerned that it be a first rate program nationally every year," Rudy said.

"When I came here, two keys sold me on the school," Rudy said. "First, Dean (David) Bischoff could articulate accurately the difference between two of the best players in the country (Michelle Akers, whom Rudy coached at UCF, and April Heinrichs, a former standout at North Carolina).

"Second was Frank McInerney, who I like quite a bit," Rudy said. "He told my wife that he'd be her favorite athletic director. Never in a million years would you have heard that at Central Florida."

The bottom line, though, remains that Rudy has been overwhelmed by the support for his team here, in stark contrast to the situation at Central Florida.

"The commitment at Central Florida goes as far as the coaches and players, period," Rudy said. "Here, I can see a real concern. All the sports people care. At Central Florida, you all go your own way. Here, everyone bends over backward to help out."

The team that Rudy will be working with is also different from the one that he left.

"I'm impressed with the camaraderie of the players here. It seems like everyone likes each other. They're very polite, classy people," Rudy said. "At Central Florida, they're more skillful, maybe, but I don't know if they work as hard."

Rudy hasn't been alone in his move to Massachusetts. He brought his Central Florida assistant, Lisa Gozley, with him. Gozley was a two-year at UCF for Rudy before becoming an assistant coach last year.

"She'll become a great coach in her own right some day," Rudy said.

So far, Rudy has had a lot to be encouraged about. Aside from the commitment, he has a strong core of players returning from last year's national champion runners-up. And with his philosophies on teamwork and thinking, he is hoping to keep the winning attitude alive at UMass.

And then, who knows? Maybe a return trip to the Final Four, this time with the coach being on the right side of the field.

Stuart was tied for third in team scoring with four goals and three assists. The UMass offense was not hurt much by graduation. Carlson was a goalie and Robertson was a defensive player for the Minutewomen.

Team Most Valuable Player Ronnie Coleman will be the only player missed from an offensive position. Coleman was a midfielder who only recorded two assists but who pushed the ball up the field to the forwards. She was labeled as the most consistent player on the team.

However, the Minutewomen appear to be very strong at the midfield position. Vasapolli, Bustin (0 goals, 1 assist), and sophomore Bernadette Martel (3,3) all return to the midfield after having played for the National Under-21 team over the summer.

Gutheil and Derwin both are defensive players who are returning to claim the starting positions that they held a year ago.

Two seniors that did not see action for the Minutewomen last year, but who could play key roles this season, are forward Tonia Kennedy, who Hixon seems to be very excited about, and Cindy Cox.

Kennedy sat out last season with an injury while Cox is a transfer from Purdue University who is expected to fight it out with Desmond for goalie duty.

The offense appears to be intact. Returning from last year's attack unit is junior Kathy DeAngelis, who led UMass in scoring with 19 goals and no assists. DeAngelis was selected to the All-Tournament team at the Final Four.

Sophomore Elise McDevitt (six goals, one assist, third on the team) returns to wreak havoc on opposing defenses with her blazing speed.

Junior Maura Frattassio, who missed her entire freshman year and most of last year with an injury before getting significant playing time in the playoffs, is ready for another year.

One freshman that could contribute is Dawn Trumbauer from Quaker Town, PA. Hixon labels Trumbauer as "very strong, explosive, and as a player with excellent sense around the net."

The defense is somewhat more complicated. Positions are wide open right now with seven players vying for starting jobs.

Gutheil, Derwin and Stuart started last season but do not have locks on the positions. Junior Carol Ann Smith, who started at sweeper in 1987, is also expected to battle for a spot in the backfield.

Sophomores Kim Hannigan and Lisa Berardinelli, though they did not see much time last year, are legitimate contenders for a spot on the defense.

Should the Minutewomen return to the NCAA tournament this year for the eighth straight time, it will be well-earned.

They will play a grueling 19-game schedule which includes games with Providence College (ranked third in the nation before UMass beat them), West Chester University, which was ranked No. 1 in the country at one time last season, the University of New Hampshire, and Old Dominion University, also one of the top 12 teams in the nation which was invited to the National Tournament.

The Minutewomen will play in the Atlantic 10 Conference for the first time this year. Hixon expects Rutgers, Temple and Penn State to fight with UMass for first place in the A-10.

"It really should prove to be the strongest field hockey conference in the nation should everyone participate," Hixon said.

UMass will wrap up its schedule with the A-10 Championships at Temple on Nov. 5.

The season is set to begin with a home date with local rival Springfield College on Saturday (1 p.m., Totman Field).

Gretzky trade should benefit all concerned

Now that everyone else has offered their p's and q's on the matter, and all the hub-bub has died down, it's my turn to talk about the trade of the Great Gretzky.

In case you missed it, Wayne Gretzky, arguably the greatest hockey player ever, was traded by the Edmonton Oilers to the Los Angeles Kings. Several other players and a huge amount of money were also swapped, but Gretzky remains the focal point of the whole move.

To many, it all happened so suddenly. Gretzky had just been two months removed from leading the Oilers to their fourth Stanley Cup championship in the last five years, a four-game sweep of the Boston Bruins. Everything, it seems, was just fine and dandy until July 16, a fateful Saturday which at the time seemed like a joyous occasion.

Jim Clark

That was the day that Gretzky married Janet Jones, an actress best known for her role in American Anthem, in a huge ceremony in Edmonton. The wedding was broadcast live on Canadian national television, usually an honor reserved for those of royalty. Then again, in a country that is as hockey ga-ga as Canada is, Gretzky could be considered royalty.

So it seems, the wonderful love affair between Gretzky and the people of Edmonton took a major turn for the worse. Gretzky, it is speculated, requested a trade so that he could be closer to his new bride, who would retain her permanent residency in the City of Angels. At first mention, most thought it was nothing more than an ugly rumor.

But the more it got mentioned, the more heated the rumor became. Finally, it was a rumor no more. The reality was that a legend was being traded.

Immediately, there was understandable outrage among the loyal Oiler fans. How could Peter Pocklington, the Edmonton owner, trade the one person whom his entire franchise is centered around?

Simple. It was a perfect situation. It was a good trade from the Oilers' standpoint.

There is no truth to the conclusion that the maniacal Pocklington dealt away a "washed-up" Gretzky because, in 1988 he failed for the first time since he was 18 years old to win the league's Most Valuable Player award (an award he won an unprecedented eight straight times).

The plain facts are that, despite the huge reign of success he and his teammates had enjoyed, there really was no more joy in Edmonton. Gretzky found out, as had Paul Coffey and Andy Moog beforehand, that Edmonton management was beginning to mistreat its superstar players, almost taking them for granted. Gretzky was not asking out of Edmonton to be closer to Jones, but instead to get further away from Pocklington.

Pocklington showed his true colors a few days after the deal. Gretzky had made a tearful farewell at the press conference, choking on his words when he tried to thank the Edmonton fans for their overwhelming support. Later, Pocklington claimed that Gretzky was a great actor, and had staged the whole thing.

Meanwhile, the reception from the public was equally sour. The fans were burning Jones in effigy throughout the city, comparing her to Yoko Ono, whose marriage to John Lennon was seen as the cause of the break-up of the Beatles. An outraged Canadian Parliament representative even had the gall to request that the nation's government intervene to prevent the departure of a national hero.

Come on, be real folks. I was upset when the commissioner of baseball prevented the trade of Rollie Fingers and Joe Rudi to the Red Sox back in 1976. If this type of interference had ever been allowed, well, let's just say that it would be a huge black mark on a league that already doesn't have a whole lot going for it.

Fortunately, Pocklington and Kings' owner Bruce McNall didn't bend to the pressure, and now there isn't much anyone can do about it. The trade is official, and that's that.

Edmonton people still insist that they can have the last say. Many have cancelled their season tickets (when was the last time you saw ticket requests go down for a team coming off a championship?), and some are planning to organize formal protests outside Northlands Coliseum.

I have just one thing to say about that. Those fans couldn't be more stupid.

The trade makes total sense, not only for the Oilers, but for the Kings as well. On Edmonton's side, Gretzky more than likely would have bolted town after his contract ran out (after the 1992 season), meaning that within four years, he would have been gone with nothing to show for it. The idea that they were able to get any warm bodies for him should be good enough, but it is what they got that should make this a great trade for many years to come.

The primary newcomer is center Jimmy Carson, who became only the second-youngest player ever to score 50 goals in a season, yes, Gretzky was the other, but at 19, Carson is eight years younger. Also, they got Martin Gelinas, the Kings' first round draft pick this year who many feel will be one of the best in the draft, defenseman Craig Redmond, and close to $15 million in cash.

But the clincher is that the Kings gave up their first round pick in each of the next three odd years (1989, '91 and '93). History has shown that when a team gets more than one first round pick, at least one of them turns out to be a player. With that, Edmonton should still be a top team well after Gretzky sails off into permanent retirement with Janet in Aruba.

As for the Kings, Gretzky becomes a figure head and a savior to a floundering franchise. Hockey and Los Angeles have proven to mix about as well as oil and water, and a big name like Gretzky is sure to help keep the laid-back types that have been known to leave Dodger Stadium in the seventh inning during a pennant race.

This move means big business for McNall. Ticket demands have reached amazing proportions. On top of that, it brings an instant air of notoriety to a team with which nobody is really familiar. In today's state of affairs, the publicity of hockey in America is bad, and Los Angeles is even worse. This trade will give the Kings the sense of credibility that they have never before enjoyed.

Despite what the critics say, this trade was a big jolt to the National Hockey League, and all concerned, from the players to the teams, are better for it. True, Gretzky was the ideal national symbol for Canada, but these are the times of change. If the fans of Edmonton will just give it a chance, they too will agree.

dividends but for now, LaFreniere's goal is to finish in the top five at the New England Championships at Franklin Park in October.

"We had no veterans on our team last year," LaFreniere said. "I think its very reasonable to aim for the top five. The team has a very good attitude and I think that helps a lot."

In order to break into the top five, LaFreniere feels that the Minutewomen will have to be better than Springfield College, Boston University, Holy Cross, and the University of Rhode Island

Yale University, who UMass will face in its first meet is the best team in New England. It was the No. 3 team in the nation in 1987.

With the exception of B.U., UMass will see each of those teams in dual meet competition before the New Englands roll around. LaFreniere should have good idea of where her team stands.

"I think the biggest ingredient for success is desire and that's something the women's cross country team has," LaFreniere said. They know who the competition are and they're ready to go after them."

In the meantime, the team is just finishing up an eight week summer training schedule.

Tennis team out to improve on last season

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

This year's University of Massachusetts women's tennis team enters the 1988 fall season with mixed reviews of last season's performance.

A year ago, the Minutewomen had a dismal autumn when they finished with a 1-8 record. But they improved a few months later in the spring season with a 2-2 record, not including two victories over Duquesne and West Virginia Universities in the consolation bracket of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

"The win over West Virginia was especially nice because they beat us 9-0 in the fall," UMass coach Edwin Gentzler said.

This season, the Minutewomen will be pressed to improve upon their spring achievements.

"We're going to be competitive. We certainly won't get blown out," Gentzler said. "It's going to be an exciting and fun year."

UMass will be relying on veterans Ann Marie Pelosky, Mara Foley, Michelle Brater, and Karen McShane to carry the team.

Last year's MVP, Chris Willse, has cartilage damage in her knee and may miss an early part of the season.

Pelosky, who had a 2-7 record in singles last year, will captain the Minutewomen and play any of the top three positions, according to Gentzler. Foley, Brater, and McShane will make up the middle portion of the UMass line-up card by playing the number two, three, and four singles positions.

Gentzler said he expects the incoming freshmen to get playing time and contribute to this year's team.

"The freshmen are going to fit in very well," he said. "(The players) have an opportunity to with me to uevelop their game and come together as a team."

The Minutewomen open their season on Monday at 3 p.m. on the Upper Boyden Courts against Providence College.

University of Massachusetts sports did not remain idle over the summer. Along with playoffs late last semester, there were several coaching changes and awards to be handed out.

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team qualified for the NCAA tournament and hosted a playoff game at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. The Gorillas entered the game seeded sixth in the tournament after a 10-2 regular season, to face Cornell, a team which they had beaten earlier in the year in a five-overtime thriller, 8-7.

Needless to say, the Big Red has proven itself over the years as a better playoff team. Cornell came in highly charged and upset the Gorillas, 13-11.

A host of awards rolled in for the Gorillas. Eight members of coach Dick Garber's team were named All-New England, led by junior goaltender Sal LoCascio, who was named New England Player-of-the-Year. Senior defender Glenn Stephens and freshman attackman Jim McAleavey were both named to the first team.

Sophomore attack Scott Hiller, junior defender Chris Zusi, sophomore midfielder Tim Soudan and junior defender Adam Rodell were named to the second team, while senior attack Kelley Carr was named third team.

The Minutemen broke out the bats in the tournament, pounding 19 home runs in their five tourney games. The big swingers were Drew Comeau, Steve Allen and Drew Seccafico, who each nailed four. Allen and Comeau share the UMass single season homer record with 12, while Comeau also has the career mark, with 21 in just two seasons.

The baseball team, under first-year coach Mike Stone, reached the final game of the Atlantic 10 tournament for the second straight year before falling to Rutgers, 8-5.

Comeau, along with junior shortstop Gary DiSarcina, junior pitcher Dave Telgheder and senior center fielder Matt Sheran, were named first team All-New England. Junior catcher Dean Borrelli and junior third baseman Steve Kern were tabbed for the second team.

The women's lacrosse team, which made the finals of the ECAC tournament, had several post-season honors. Four players were named first team All-Region, including senior attack Ginny Armstrong, senior defender Amy Robertson, sophomore attack Sue Murphy and junior attack Cathy Fuhrman. Murphy was also named a second-team All-American, while junior defender Lynn Hartman was named an honorable mention All-Region.

The Atlantic 10 runner-up softball team placed several players on post-season teams.

Several coaches changes were announced over the summer by the UMass athletic department. See related story.

Senior outfielder Leigh Petroski, senior first baseman Martha Jamieson, senior catcher Ilene Freeman and sophomore pitcher Traci Kennedy were named first team All-New England, while Petroski and Jamieson were both named first team All-Northeast. Freeman was second team and Paige Kopcza was an honorable mention All-Northeast. Jamieson, Kennedy and junior outfielder Barbara Meehan were each named first team All-Atlantic 10.

Also, men's basketball coach John Calipari announced the signing of his second recruit to a letter of intent.

Anton Brown, a 6-2 guard from Columbia, SC, will join Jim McCoy, a 6-3½ guard who signed earlier in the year.

Brown graduated from A.C. Flora High School, where he led his team to a 72-23 record over four years, including one state championship. He averaged 20.0 points per game as a junior and 18.2 in his final season.

Finally, Lorenzo Sutton, the all-time leading scorer in UMass basketball history, was chosen by Charleston in the seventh round of the Continental Basketball Association draft.

■ DiSarcina

Cape League. You don't get days off."

DiSarcina was consistent last season for the Minutemen, who were runners-up to Rutgers University in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

He led the regulars in hitting at .366, hits (74), runs scored (44), and triples (40).

DiSarcina, who started all 52 games for UMass, also tied for the team lead in RBI (39) and was second in stolen bases (17). But his success at the college level didn't guarantee his success in the minor leagues.

"It's different than college, tougher," DiSarcina said. "But I definitely made the right choice," he said. "The Angels are a good organization. They treat you like a person and not like a number."

Speaking of numbers, DiSarcina had the best of the UMass draftees.

As of August 29, Greer was 5-5 with a 2.45 ERA for the Oneonta (N.Y.) Yankees. He had 56 strikeouts and just 16 walks.

Allen was 2-2 with a 9.32 ERA for the Butte (Montana) Rangers. He had 30 strikeouts, 14 walks and one save.

Borrelli was splitting the catching duties for the Medford (OR) A's. He had a .197 average and five RBI in 41 games.

Owens was 1-7 with the Batavia (N.Y.) Phillies. He had a 7.00 ERA with 44 strikeouts and 42 walks.

As the season wraps up, these players will have to assess their seasons and think about the future.

viewing public couldn't relate to. He believes that people will better accept a league made up mostly of American college students.

That's not to say there aren't any great players in the league. Peter Vermes, an All-American from Rutgers, and goalkeeper Jeff Dubek, a Yale grad who was Bing's teammate in Boston, will be competing in the Summer Olympic Games later this month in Seoul, South Korea. There are also several players who have at one time played in the established Major Indoor Soccer League.

Bing could have been one of those players. He was selected to play in the Indoor Senior Bowl in Cleveland at the end of June, and, by his own admittance, "had an incredible week." The week ended with the MISL draft, and he was selected fifth overall by the Cleveland Force. Unfortunately, the Force was one of five teams that folded.

That leaves him to continue playing with the Bolts for now. He plans to assess his soccer future year by year, and is pretty sure that he will be invited back to play next year. But down the road, he admits his eye is on possibly playing in the 1992 Olympics or the World Cup in 1994.

"It's definitely a 'wait and see' situation. I'm going to play this year. It's a great opportunity for me, but if a different job were to come in a different area, I might give it up."

But now, his love for soccer just keeps him going.

Collegian to feature club sports

Beginning this fall, the Collegian will publish a weekly Club Sports roundup, where the results and goings-on of club sports will be printed when space is available.

The column will run on Thursdays when space permits. All information must be submitted by noon Tuesday with no exceptions and can sent by Campus Mail or delivered to the Collegian, attn. Club Sports writer.

No information will be taken over the telephone.

The information need not be a story, just the recent results or upcoming events of the team. A name and phone number must be included in case there are any questions or a need for further information.

The Collegian may edit when necessary, and there is no guarantee the column or information will run every week.

Many people connected with club and non-varsity sports feel they do not get enough coverage in the Collegian, so this is your chance.

Hopefully, enough people will respond to make this feature worthwhile.

Presidential nominees exchange verbal jabs

By ROBERT GREENE

George Bush addresses the American Legion.

Republican presidential nominee George Bush, talking tough on defense, received a warm reception at an American Legion convention yesterday while Democratic rival Michael Dukakis told a college audience "George was right there " when the Reagan administration fought aid programs for students.

Bush, speaking to about 7,000 at the gathering in Louisville, Ky., renewed his contention that Dukakis would weaken the nation's defense.

"I do not doubt my opponent's patriotism. But patriotism is not the issue," Bush said. "The issue is how best to deter war, to keep peace and to fulfill our country's special responsibility as leader of the free world."

"My opponent opposes the SDI (Strategic Defense Initiative). But, like you in the American Legion, I support it. We cannot leave America hostage to Soviet ballistic missiles."

Bush sent murmurs through the audience when he said: "I wonder how many Americans remember that today is Pearl Harbor Day: 47 years ago on this very day we were hit hard at Pearl Harbor. And we were not ready."

[RELATED STORY ON PAGE 14]

He later corrected himself, the Japanese air strike was on Dec. 7, 1941, one of the best known dates in US history, and the legionnaires gave him a good-natured round of applause.

Dukakis, in remarks prepared for delivery at Kean College in Union, NJ, criticized the Reagan Administration cuts in federal student aid programs and outlined his own college opportunity proposal.

The proposal would have students receive loans in return for their agreement to pay back a percentage of their income for the rest of their working lives.

As for Bush, Dukakis asked, "Where was he while his administration was doing its best to slam the door of college opportunity in the face of millions of young people across this country?"

"Where was he while his administration was denying middle-income families the hope for a future of prosperity and success for their children?"

"George was right there all the time. Not doing and not saying a thing," Dukakis said.

One day earlier, behind the scenes, Dukakis agreed to Bush's request that they meet face-to-face only twice and have running mate Lloyd Bentsen debate republican Dan Quayle once. Negotiations continued today on scheduling and format of the debates.

Dukakis criticized Bush on Tuesday, after the vice president told a shipyard worker in Portland, Ore., his wages have dropped from $13.36 an hour to $9.50 an hour under the Reagan administration because "you're going through a competitive change." Bush was referring to foreign competition.

After being met by a booing and jeering union crowd at the Northwest Marine Iron Works in Portland, Bush said during lunch, "All I need is 51 percent of the vote."

"George Bush made it clear today that he really does not understand the hopes and dreams and aspirations of millions of American workers across this country," Dukakis said in response to Bush's comments. "That's not an adequate answer to American workers."

Area crops strong, despite heat

By PETER LUCHT
Collegian Staff

While American agriculture as a whole has suffered enormously from the severe drought conditions this summer, farms in the Pioneer Valley weathered the summer quite well, said local farmers and agriculture experts.

"This area has been pretty much spared, but for a farm any stress on the economic system is too much stress," said Roberta Myers, farm manager of the Hampshire College Farm, an 800-acre school-funded farm outside Hampshire College used for research projects.

Myers said while there was quite a bit of hot and dry weather this summer, it was nothing compared to the situation in the Midwest.

"It was a good year for the hay crop, and it didn't look like it was going to be," she said. "It was hard for delicate crops. People who raise cucumbers need moderate weather, and we had extremes, some of everything."

Myers said the effects of the drought in the rest of the country will manifest in the form of higher livestock feed prices because many crops across the United States have been drastically affected.

Adequate moisture allowed for a successful crop, and the heat caused the growth of some crops to be hastened, said Stephen Herbert, an associate professor in the Plant and Soil Science Department at the University of Massachusetts.

Herbert said that crops, such as corn, mature after a certain number of heat units are accumulated. As long as there is enough moisture in the ground the crops will grow, regardless of the temperature, he added.

Herbert also cited the price of feed as the major effect the drought will have on area farmers.

"The price has gone up a lot," said Herbert.

Farmers with irrigation equipment had an excellent growing season, said Tim Nourse of Nourse Farms in Whately.

"As long as you can push enough water into the ground to keep the ground moist there's no problem," Nourse said.

Nourse said he has made a tremendous investment in irrigation equipment and crews to run the equipment. "We made a commitment to irrigation. Those without it could obviously have found themselves in trouble."

Nourse said his crop is picked in the fall and stored until spring, and that is when he will know what his profits will be.

"I'm optimistic," Nourse said.

Club remains in office space
Republicans resist BOG's order to leave

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Republican Club is defying the Board of Governors by occupying office space in the Student Union Building.

The BOG revoked the space from the Republicans at the end of last semester because of alleged harassment of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance.

Graduate student organizations, which previously had no space, were granted the area occupied by the Club.

The Republicans, sitting among "Bush for president", "VOTE GOP" signs and a crumpled Coors can in room 415 of the Student Union, said yesterday they were entitled to the space, and would not leave.

Republican Club member Jay Schoendorf said of the board's decision to remove them: "This is our office, how can they kick us out of our home? We're used to it, and we'll keep on fighting.

The BOG is just a left-leaning body."

Board Chairperson Eric Nakajima, however, said the board is not biased against the Republicans, and the club is free to reapply for the space.

Further complicating the issue is an injunction granted by the Student Judiciary at the end of last semester. The injunction gives the Republicans the space temporarily until another hearing can be held to determine if the club should lose its space. The judiciary contends the board did not give the club a fair hearing.

Tom Hutcheson, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate, said that since the Judiciary is an arm of the Student Government Association, which does not represent graduates, the injunction is not binding.

Nakajima said last semester that the board, which allocates space in the Campus Center and Student Union, is answerable to both the Graduate Student Senate and the Student Government Association.

Margaret Arsenault, Student Activiies Office advisor to the Republican Club, said she recognizes the board's ability to allocate and revoke space, but would like to see an office for the Republican Club.

"I'd like to see the Republican Club and the BOG get together and try to work something out," Arsenault said. "I hope they can find a solution that's workable on both sides."

Nakajima said he had kept members of the University administration appraised of the situation, and had received verbal support from them.

"The administration, the Division of Administration and Finance and Student Affairs, the Graduate Student Senate, the BOG and officials of the SGA all support the authority and decision of the board in revoking the space of the Republican Club," Nakajima said.

He said he had sent three letters to the Republican Club advising them to remove their possessions from the office by Friday, Sept. 9. Nakajima said Republican Club materials had been removed from the office twice during the summer.

During the Young Communists League summer convention at the University of Massachusetts, a concrete and chicken wire barricade with conservative stickers and an American flag had been removed from the Club's office by building workers, Nakajima said.

Hutcheson hopes the matter is resolved quickly.

"We look forward to a speedy resolution," Hutcheson said. "We have several graduate student organizations which could use the space."

Katina's eight-foot snake is (boa) constricted in pit
Opinions vary on cruelty issue

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Tony the Snake gets plenty of attention as one of the unique attractions to Katina's nightclub in Hadley. Some animal rights advocates, however, say Tony may not be so happy with the arrangement.

Tony, an eight-foot boa constrictor, is kept in a snakepit that is about 6 feet long by 2 feet wide and 3 feet deep. The pit is just off the dance floor in front of the stage and is covered with one-inch thick plexiglass which is nearly impossible to see through.

"I think the animal is being exploited if it is not in its natural environment," said a snake specialist for the Audobon Society's Wildlife Hotline.

A spokeswoman for the hotline, said, "They get nervous around loud noises." However, she said there are no laws concerning this, and no studies have been done

AFTER THE CUP — The New Zealand Challenge yacht leaves the dock under tow Wednesday morning on its way to face the Stars and Stripes catamaran in the first race of the America's Cup in San Diego.

Israel conducts probe of draft-dodging scheme

JERUSALEM (AP) — Authorities are investigating an Isreali general for complicity in a draft-dodging scam that has raised a furor in this country, Isreal radio reported yesterday.

Investigators were looking into the activities of the reserve general as well as two majors believed to be ringleaders in the scheme, the radio said. It did not provide their names.

The disclosure of the inquiry Monday shocked many in this country where the army is seen as a sacred institution and its soldiers as heroes for defending the tiny nation against Arab enemies.

Police also arrested a new suspect in the case, the radio said. The suspect, a Tel Aviv doctor whose name was not given, was reportedly charged with forging medical reports for draft-dodgers.

He was at least the second physician implicated in the scam.

An army official, who insisted on anonymity, said he could not confirm or deny the radio report but added "now that the investigation is no longer undercover, it is widening." So far, at least 17 people have been arrested and the army said it was pursuing dozens more.

Renaan Gissin, deputy army spokesman, said the draft-dodging scheme was uncovered Monday with the arrest of 16 people including high-ranking officers and doctors and "touches on the very essence of the Isreali Defense Forces. The sacred principle here is to do military service."

He said two lieutenant colonels, two majors and an orthopedic surgeon were among the first group arrested.

Reports said Monday that about 60 people had paid thousands of dollars to escape the draft or reserve service, but newspapers reported Tuesday that several hundred people may be involved.

"This is just the tip of the iceberg," Gissin said. "The last word has not been said."

The scheme, which investors say started in November, reportedly involved falsified medical statements and tampering with army computers to show men excused from reserve duty.

In Isreal, a nation of 4.1 million, both men and women are drafted at age 18. After their three years of duty, men do reserve service up to 62 days a year until age 55. Women serve two years and reserve duty is not obligitory.

Avoiding service has long been a social taboo, and many employers ask applicants to prove they served in the army. News of the scandal has promted scathing editorials, in many Isreali newspapers.

Meet your administration

Searching for classes, trying to get settled into a new environment, sweating over a roommate, buying expensive textbooks, and running around campus feeling lost can make new students forget easily that this campus, like the high schools they have just attended, has an administration.

Top administrators, consisting of a chancellor and five vice chancellors, are responsible for getting money for the University of Massachusetts and distributing it among the campus' components, hiring faculty members, and establish an academic curriculum, among other tasks.

Chancellor

In recent semesters, Joseph Duffey has rivaled politicians for headline attention. The chancellor, who arrived on campus in 1982, has been in newspapers all over the country, courtesy of student protests and racial tensions.

JOSEPH DUFFEY

The Boston Globe ran a profile last semester with the headline "Nobody doesn't like Joe Duffey." Although the chancellor has managed to project an image of grace under pressure, he has not been spared of criticism. Former Secretary of Education William Bennett last semester criticized Duffey for his handling of the New Africa House five-day takeover by minority students.

During the takeover, Duffey drew criticism from Bennett for sending a basket of fruit to the protesters.

'He had a lot of insight," said Dwayne Warren, a spokesman for the protesters, at the time. "He knew the gravity of the situation."

Before long, however, Duffey came under student fire for instituting a no-alcohol policy at outdoors events. Protests and accompanying headlines ensued. Duffey was back in the limelight — this time as an authoritarian parent.

A native of West Virginia, Duffey has earned graduate degrees from Yale University, Andover Newton Theological School and a Ph.D. from Hartford Seminary Foundation. He has served as secretary of state for educational and cultural affairs and as chairman for the National Endowment for Humanities.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs

Dennis L. Madson has stayed out of the limelight in the past couple of semesters, but he had his share of bad publicity during the trial of 15 CIA protesters in the spring of 1987.

It was disclosed Madson had omitted the phrase "any law abiding citizens" from a letter explaining the University of Massachusetts recruitment policy to students who had been protesting CIA recruiting on campus. He called the omission a mistake.

The passage should have read, 'The University shall be open to all law abiding citizens for the conduct of legitimate public business." The 15 protesters argued in court that the CIA should not recruit on campus because the agency has broken international laws. They eventually won their argument in court.

Madson, who earned his Ph.D. in Sociology at Ohio University, indirectly oversees educational and recreational student events, many of which are coordinated by the Student Activities Office.

He earned his undergraduate degree in chemistry at St. Olaf College in Minnesota and has a master's in counseling and student personnel administration from Springfield College.

Besides the SAO, the vice chancellor is responsible for Academic Support Services, Educational Access and Outreach, Dean of Students, Health Services, Housing Services, Department of Public Safety, and the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office.

Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development

Deirdre A. Ling, the first and only female vice chancellor in the state's university system, came to UMass in 1983. She has since earned a reputation as an efficient and conscientious administrator, who brought the University's public relations and fundraising efforts together.

Last semester, she said she couldn't imagine being in a more gratifying and challenging position.

'She is a very good boss, and that is all you look for," said James Langley in April, the assistant vice chancellor and director of public affairs. "She has excellent judgement compiled with determination and sophistication."

Ling oversees the Offices of Development and Alumni Affairs, Community Relations and State Relations offices, Design and Production Services, Editorial Services, Photographic Services, Public Information Office, and the University Magazine.

She also works with other administrators on developing information and programs for prospective students and their parents, alumni, legislators, and other people who contribute to the University's financial well-being.

Besides her administrative work, Ling serves as a role model to students who take her Women's Studies classes.

Her philosophy: "Aim high and work hard. If you perceive barriers, it makes you self-defeated from the beginning."

Acting Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance

A University of Massachusetts alumnus, Paul Page was appointed to the administration and finance post in June because John L. DeNyse is retiring.

PAUL PAGE

Page, who has served as budget and financial affairs director since October 1984, began working for his alma mater in 1980. He will keep the vice chancellor position temporarily, until he either assumes it permanently or a nationwide search finds someone else.

"We have worked very closely with Paul Page and have high respect for his professional knowledge and expertise," wrote Provost Richard Desmond O'Brien and Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey in a recent statement to the campus. "We look forward to working with him in the coming months."

Before returning to the University as an administrator, Page served as assistant vice president and controller at the University of New York at Albany.

He was responsible for accounting, payroll, student accounts, the bursar's office, and sponsored funds — the same type of work he will be doing here, only instead of serving 14,000 he will serve 25,000 students.

Page, who has a bachelor's in accounting and a master's degree in management, worked for the United States Postal Service from 1972 to 1977. While there, he served as a director of support, manager of finance, and as a management associate.

Vice Chancellor for Research and Dean of the Graduate School

The responsibility for initiating, reviewing, and implementing research at the University, as well as the overseeing of all departments in the graduate school, falls on Samuel F. Conti.

SAMUEL CONTI

Conti, who has held his position at UMass since 1980, had served as professor and director of the T.H. Morgan School of Biological Sciences at the University of Kentucky for 14 years.

As dean of the graduate school, Conti works with the graduate faculty to insure that the school runs smoothly. His office oversees several other graduate departments, including the Office of Academic Affairs, Office of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment, Office of Research Affairs, and the University of Massachusetts Press.

The Press, a member of the Association of American University Presses established in 1964, publishes scholarly and artistic books. A Faculty Senate committee is responsible for reviewing and approving manuscripts for publication.

In the academic year 1986-1987, the Press published 35 and reprinted 13 books.

The 86-87 review of Conti's office states: "It was a productive and exciting year for the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Research and Dean of the Graduate School."

The review reports that 331 degrees were granted during the academic year.

Executive Vice Chancellor and Provost

Each year, Richard Desmond O'Brien gets together with the chancellor and other administrators to draft a budget request to the state.

When the University receives the state money, O'Brien divides a portion of that money among the academic departments, which he is responsible for, along with the curriculum at the University.

In his own words, the provost provides "leadership when there are concerns, either for the overall shape of the education offered, or for specific deficits or surpluses in the offering."

O'Brien is also responsible for personnel matters. "These include implementing the procedures for promotion and the granting of tenure to faculty, overseeing the reviews of deans, contributing to the disposition of yearly merit increases, involvement to varying degrees with the appointment of deans, and supervision of the system of leaves, partial reimbursements, and numerous other personnel matters of this kind," O'Brien wrote in an "Accreditation Self-Study" in January.

O'Brien has earned a bachelor's degree in sciences in Reading, England; a bachelor's degree in arts and a Ph.D. in chemistry at the University of Western Ontario, Canada. In addition, he has also conducted extensive research on toxic chemicals.

He has also authored several books and numerous articles.

UMass targets new frontiers with planned lab

Future lab will make UMass a leader in plastics research

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

When Governor Michael S. Dukakis visited the University of Massachusetts last week to dedicate the Silvio Conte Polymer Research Center, he recognized members of the Polymer Science and Engineering Department as being worldwide leaders in the field.

In constructing the new research center, the University is taking advantage of that reputation, according to Doctor William MacKnight, acting chairman of the department. MacKnight said facilities in the center will be far better than those in the department now.

"When I say that, I mean (better) laboratory space, better equipment, better space in which to research. It will offer quite a bit of new equipment that is at the frontiers of the discipline," he said.

The tentative site for the center is between the low-and high-rise buildings of the Lederle Graduate Research Center, he said.

MacKnight said the center is expected to be completed in four years.

"We're hoping that maybe they'll be able to do it slightly more quickly than that, but by the nature of these things, there really is no telling. This has yet to be talked about," he said.

MacKnight said the center's research will cover both natural and synthetic polymers, but will concentrate more heavily on the latter.

The American Heritage Dictionary defines a polymer as "any of numerous natural and synthetic compounds of usually high molecular weight consisting of repeated linked units, each a relatively light and simple molecule."

'A natural polymer refers to a polymeric material which is synthesized in nature or capable of being synthesized in nature.'
— Doctor William MacKnight

Said MacKnight: "A natural polymer refers to a polymeric material which is synthesized in nature or capable of being synthesized in nature." The ones that we are most commonly familiar with are proteins — which form a large part of our bodies, DNA (Deoxyribonucleic Acid), RNA (Ribonucleic Acid), cellulose — which forms the main constituent of wood — and natural rubber — which comes from the rubber tree.

"Those are all polymers in the sense that they are all strung together from many, many thousands of smaller building blocks in long strings. Most plastics that are in use are synthetic polymers and mostly based on hydrocarbons or other sources."

The Higher Education Capital Outlay Bill, which Dukakis signed in July, will contribute $32 million to the construction of the center. That figure is 29 percent of the $112 million to be allotted to UMass/Amherst by the bill.

MacKnight said the Polymer Research Department is ranked number one among all universities in the United States.

"It's partly by default," MacKnight said. "There are not so many places that specialize in this kind of training. Nevertheless, among those that do, certainly we're in the first position."

MacKnight also said the center will centralize the department's facilities.

"At this moment, we (the department) are split up. Some of us are in (Goessmann Annex), which is just meant for temporary space, then Goessmann Lab and the (Graduate Research) tower. So, we're still among three or four different locations. (The center) will get rid of all those things and consolidate (us) in one new building," he said.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said he worked with corporations, such as Monsanto and General Electric, to help raise $20 million in federal funds for the center.

Although there will be few opportunities for undergraduates in the center, MacKnight said the University will gain by its construction.

"Our interest as an academic institution is in creating new knowledge . . . and, in conjunction with that, training and turning out first-rate research scientists in that discipline," he said.

Union official calls opening 'a move in the wrong direction'

Stores open Labor Day create some opposition

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Several stores in Amherst remained open during Labor Day, despite the opposition of a local union official.

Dick Courtney, of the United Food and Commercial Workers Union in Springfield, said the stores that remained open were in violation of Massachusetts Blue Laws, which prohibit stores from opening on holidays.

Attorney for Amherst Bob Ritchie said, however, if town selectmen determine there would be a "serious public inconvenience," the selectmen can vote to allow the chief of police to issue permits to some businesses to stay open.

Administrative Assistant to the Amherst selectmen Nancy Board said Police Chief Donald Maia appeared before the selectmen to request the permits. The selectmen voted unanimously to grant the permits, Board said.

"It's perfectly legal," Ritchie said.

Board said the Amherst Chamber of Commerce had initiated the movement to have stores stay open. "A specific need would be met by the stores staying open for students and parents," Board said.

Ritchie said of the decision to stay open: "For 15,000 people to descend on the area and not have a place to shop would be a serious inconvenience."

"This is a move in the wrong direction," Courtney said. "There is no reason to create another industry where people are required to work 365 days of the year."

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey also expressed concern about the stores staying open.

Duffey said he was concerned this would allow less time for families to be together. "We all ought to have some concern about the amount of time people have together," Duffey said. "That's something that I find troubling."

Duffey said, however, he was largely indifferent to stores remaining open.

Courtney said the move to stay open was anti-consumer, since staying open increases overhead and thereby increases prices.

Dick Vincent, owner of Louis' Foods, said this was not true. "Opening one day doesn't have an effect on operating expenses," Vincent said.

Jim Leconte, manager of Price Chopper, agrees. "By no means, it has no effect on pricing at all," Leconte said.

At the same time, Vincent admitted it was an inconvenience to stay open since he would have to pay some employees overtime to work the Holiday.

Vincent said he thought there had been a movement for several years to get stores to remain open. "From what I understand from town officials, for several years now the University and the town have urged some stores to stay open," he said.

Said Duffey: "To the best of my knowledge, the University has never requested them to stay open. It's a matter of indifference to the University."

Leconte said although it might be some inconvenience, he had no problem with staying open. "We're trying to provide a service to the community for the students," Leconte said.

to find out if snakes are adversely affected by loud music.

"A lot of people don't even know he's there," said John Myers, manager of Katina's. "And a lot of people think it's really cool."

"We had one lady that came in and claimed it was cruel to the animal, and we had one call from the ASPC-whatever it is," Myers said.

Marybeth Marquedat, of the Springfield chapter of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said she had received complaints before about Tony. "We're trying to get legislation passed," she said. "The problem is, how do you determine how much stress an animal is under."

'He (Tony the Snake) is pretty much a tequila drinker, Mescal, he likes the worm.'

— John Myers, Katina's manager

State laws require that an animal not be worked too hard (Tony is not worked at all, except for an occasional handling), fed adequately (Tony is on a diet of two live rats per month), and given medical care if needed (Tony has never been injured). Marquedat said that if any of these qualifications have been violated, the offender may be brought up on criminal charges.

"He seems to be pretty happy down there," Myers said. He said Tony has been there two years, since the club opened. "When we put the club together, the owner wanted to have something unique in it. He likes snakes."

William Walker, a doctor at the Robert Rotherwood Animal Clinic in Newton said, "I doubt it's any more cruel than the situation most house pets exist under. For him to be there two years later means that you're doing something right."

Said Walker, "It's probably not cruel, but the issue of whether it is an optimal condition is probably a better question. It might be better than a classroom."

Tony's pit is lined with an AstroTurf-like carpet, with a bucket of water and several rocks and scattered pieces of driftwood. There are also heat lamps which keep the pit warm, which Walker said is important because Tony comes from a tropical climate.

"We're going to try to make it more of a jungle-type atmosphere," Myers said. He said Tony used to have a pitmate, Donny, but Donny was sold to one of the former bartenders.

Although snakes cannot hear, they can sense vibrations. Myers claims boas thrive on vibrations and Tony enjoys the loud music and occasional dancing on top of his pit.

The pit, however, is lined with styrofoam to cut down on vibrations, and the spokeswoman from the Audobon Society said she is not sure whether the snake is being disturbed by the vibrations.

Marquedat said she thinks the snake is being put under stress by the vibrations, but admits there is no scientific evidence to back this.

"He does prefer dance bands over heavy-metal bands," Myers said.

And what does Tony like to drink?

"He's pretty much a tequila drinker, Mescal, he likes the worm," Myers said.

A 20-year-old man was arrested at about 2:15 a.m. yesterday on campus, and is expected to be charged with possession of a false liquor ID, police said.

- A folder with a class schedule and a check for an unknown amount was taken from the bookshelf at the Textbook Annex, a man reported around 3:45 p.m. Tuesday.
- A car radio was stolen from a 1974 Chevrolet, parked in the E Lot at Fraternity/Sorority Park, a man reported at about 3 p.m. Tuesday. The lug nuts were removed from both rear tires, which were not taken. Damage to the inside of the car was estimated at more than $200.
- A woman waiting in line at Thompson Hall lobby set her purse on the floor and then discovered it was missing, she reported the incident at about 2:15 p.m. Tuesday. Personal property and cash in the purse were valued at $180.
- A woman's purse was stolen from a booth in the Hampden Snack Bar, she reported it at about noon Tuesday. Personal property and cash in the purse were valued at $160.

Women's Studies Department grows

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

If the size of the add/drop lines in Bartlett Hall are any indication, the Women's Studies Department will celebrate the beginning of what promises to be a successful year.

"The lines are the longest they have ever been and all of our classes are full," said Karen Lederer, a departmental advisor.

The Women's Studies Department is planning a "Welcome Back Reception" scheduled for 4 p.m. on Sept. 26, in room 1009 of the Campus Center.

Department members are confident the office will be expanding its resources in the near future.

"We've changed the office around to make it a more inviting atmosphere to counsel the students. A lot of our classes this semester are oversubscribed, which is good from our point of view but not from the students'," said Lederer.

The department is currently seeking speakers and guest lecturers to visit the University of Massachusetts this semester, and is compiling a schedule of events including a Unity and Diversity conference at the Hampshire College Women's Center.

The department recently published a newsletter written and edited by Lederer, touting the accomplishments of its students, alumni, and participants in the department.

Women's Studies is looking for ideas and submissions for its next newsletter. Send submissions to Women's Studies Newsletter, 208 Bartlett Hall, UMass Amherst, MA. 01003. The next newsletter will be published in time for the Spring 1989 semester.

Bush seeks day care funds

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Second in a two-part series

When it comes to national child care, Vice President George Bush thinks parents know best.

The Republican presidential candidate has offered a $2.2 million proposal to meet the increased child care demand in America.

"He has a very well-thought out proposal," said David P. Forsberg, communications director for New England at Bush Headquarters in Boston.

If elected, Bush promises he will allot $2.2 million in tax credit intended for the betterment of child care. Families will be allowed to deduct up to $1000 in taxes for each child under the age of four.

"It is basically a children's tax credit. It is a project that will get day care dollars into the hands of parents," Forsberg said.

To accommodate children over the age of five who need child care, Bush suggests expanding the nation's "Head Start Program," a pre-school program for young children who cannot yet enter kindergarten, said Forsberg.

Forsberg said the $240 million expansion will be financed through government revenues. "The Vice-President is not proposing new taxes (to support this program)," he said.

Bush's proposal is not limited only to taxpaying families, Forsberg said. Low-income families who do not pay taxes will instead receive up to $1,000 in refunds for each child under the age of four.

"There are a number of merits to this proposal," said Forsberg. "The first one is choice."

"The Vice-President gives the choice to parents, whom he feels are best equipped to make decisions on child care," he said.

Forsberg denounced Democratic presidential candidate Gov. Michael Dukakis' child care proposal and said Bush's plan has greater scope for America.

Dukakis proposes using federal aid distributed through the Act for Better Child Care, to expand and improve state day care systems nationwide. State compliance is optional and participants must follow guidelines provided by the government.

"Bush's proposal will help significantly more families than the ABC bill," said Forsberg. "His proposal doesn't create a large bureaucracy and puts the choice into the hands of parents."

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Older women face potential poverty, report says

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Growing old in America is an economic nightmare for millions of women, many of whom will become a "poverty statistic," the Older Women's League says.

In an OWL report, titled "The Road to Poverty," the league says more than two in five older women are poor or near poor.

The league, the American Association of Retired Persons and the Villers Foundation are part of a coalition aimed at improving the agings' lot through a campaign called "Long Term Care '88."

"Long term care is critical when you look at the needs and requirements of older women," said Joan Kuriansky, executive director of OWL. "Long Term Care '88 brings together advocates to the policy arena, especially in this election year."

Kuriansky said long-term care for the elderly is not just an concern for the elderly. She said it is a civil rights matter. She added it's also a concern for younger people, whose parents and grandparents are in need of long-term care.

"It has to be everybody's issue because it affects everyone," she said, adding it's an issue OWL has worked on for years.

Some finding of the report include:

- In 1986, women aged 45 to 54 had median incomes that were 37 percent of men's; women aged 55 to 64 had incomes that were 35 percent of men's; women aged 65 and older had incomes that were 56 percent of men's.
- In 1984, the mean monthly pension income of male recipients aged 65 and older amounted to $530 while that of women amounted to only $337.
- Nearly three quarters of all poor over age 65 are women.
- Older women have 20 percent less Social Security income than men and are more likely to rely on it as their sole source of support.

"While it may be morning in America for some of the nation's elderly, the twilight years are proving to be more like the twilight zone for millions of mid-life and older women," said Lou Glasse, president of OWL.

"They are the inevitable victims of socially-sanctioned elder abuse, committed with the aid of a whole series of economic Catch 22s," she said.

"We are not reporting that an older woman here or there fell through the safety net," she added. "Instead, this is a conspiracy of circumstances that work throughout a woman's life to consign her to poverty.

"She may be lucky at critical crossroads in her life. . . But one wrong turn and the chances greatly increase that she will spend the end of her life in poverty or near poverty," she said.

OWL has called for a series of reforms to address the problems cited in their report. The list includes legislation to end spousal impoverishment; gain economic recognition for women's unpaid care-giving; ensure adequate retirement income and improve education, training and employment opportunities.

HEALTHWATCH

Gynecoligical exams safe and free at UHS

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

The American Cancer Society recommends women who are sexually active and women 18 or over should have a pelvic exam to detect early signs of cancer or other diseases.

Ann Grose, a family nurse practitioner at Health Services, suggests that rather than going home to get an appointment, students come to Health Services.

"It's a comfortable atmosphere staffed by friendly concerned people," she said. It's also paid for by student fees, so it doesn't cost anything to get an exam.

"We're non-judgemental," Grose said, "we see all kinds of women; virgins, lesbians, women who have many different partners, and women who have only one partner."

There are nurse practitioners and physicians, Grose said, and students can specifically request that you see a woman.

When you arrive for your gynecological exam, you will be given a medical history form to fill out and your weight and blood pressure will be taken. "The nurse practitioner will talk to you first," said Grose "and will explain what she is going to do and give you a chance to ask questions. She will then perform the exam and any tests that need to be done."

"A gynecological exam requires a half-hour appointment, but the exam itself only takes five or ten minutes," she said.

Appointments can be made by calling Health Services at 549-2600. You will be asked, when you call, what your appointment is for. This is "not done to embarrass you," said Grose, "just to know who to direct you to and what the appointment is for."

If you want contraception, "we require attendance in a contraceptive education session first," Grose said. Sessions are offered four times a week at the Health Center and provide "a helpful time to learn about and discuss different methods," she said.

"Try to schedule a gynecological appointment when you do not have your period, but come anyway, even if you get it unexpectedly," she said.

Grose suggested that you might want to bring a friend to sit with you in the waiting room, "many people get back to back appointments with a friend or roomate," she said.

Services are completely confidential, she said, and "nobody is going to embarrass you by saying anything out loud in the clinic."

"We do a great job for the people who come here," she said, "but many people don't know all that we have to offer."

"We can evaluate menstrual problems and often prescribe medication that can be helpful in relieving cramps," she said.

'If you have questions about whether you have vaginitis, a urinary tract infection or whether you've been exposed to venerial disease," you can be tested at Health Services, she said.

"Women who have irregular periods come up here and don't get a period and worry about pregnancy," she said. Often the stress of school or other problems is the cause and it can be a relief to know for sure.

Confidential pregnancy tests are offered every day and are free to students, she said. "We do problem pregnancy counseling every day and discuss options in a non-judgemental way and make referrals," she said, and your "student insurance will cover whatever decision you make — delivery or termination."

What's the matter with me?

I'd kill for less horrors

I enjoy movies. During a summer when I did nothing but sit around for three months and let my brain rot, and with the prices at the theaters being the rumored cause for the national debt, I learned to appreciate this fine invention known as the VCR.

Jim Clark

I've always prided myself in my taste for movies. Comedies are my favorites, even though not everyone agrees with me that Monty Python's Search for the Holy Grail is the best movie of all time. Action movies spur my enthusiasm, and I can even excuse my jealousy and watch an occasional movie with a "love" theme.

Then. . . there are horror movies. Allow me to ramble on about this topic for a bit.

Maybe I missed the boat, but I just can't figure out the reasoning behind this. Why are horror movies so popular? Who would actually enjoy watching these wastes of celluloid?

It amazes me that a movie such as Colors, one that is an actual documentary of real life gangs in Los Angeles, could be met with such resistance because, allegedly it provokes violence. But it is perfectly acceptable for a man with a goalie mask to run around and filet people. America seems to be afraid of reality in the movies nowadays.

Originally, I felt the sole purpose of horror movies was for the viewing enjoyment of criminal psychopaths and deranged mental cases. That may be true. But I have a lot of friends, normal (well, partly) people who think that horror movies are the greatest thing since Gone with the Wind.

I've always be amused by how they, especially the females, will eagerly watch these movies, and then, just as some witless clod is about to stick his head into a hole where a man with an axe is conveniently hiding, will cover their eyes and scream at the top of their lungs.

This reminds me of the old Eddie Murphy joke, where he takes his date to a movie, and then yells at her as she pulls the above act. "Hey," he said. "I paid $4, you'd better watch this movie." I can't relate to that, really, because I'd never pay to see a horror movie, and $4 would only by a medium container of quasi-cola-flavored corn syrup in this day and age.

Let me explain some of my complaints with this brand of entertainment. First of all, the main object is to kill, maim and dismember as many people as possible, using as many methods imaginable. No stone goes unturned. Neither do chain saws, knives, human-eating trees and guys with steel-plated fingernails.

Of course, this is all realistic. I believe that supernatural powers do exist, but I'm just not the type to go to the bathroom in fear that the Blob will come leaping out of my toilet to destroy me. Give me a break.

Next gripe. Who would act in these movies? No B movie is as degrading as having to make a living reading cheesy dialogue and acting out putrid nonsense.

Which leads us to the writers. I don't mind the works of Stephen King, because he tends to keep his material fresh, and it doesn't always depend on total slaughter to make it work. But the others have no imagination. They can't write. I think these are the same people who were used during the screen writers' strike. Either that or they were acquired on waivers from the Minuteman.

Surely by now you get my point. I'm not the type to get nauseous, but must be a mutant of some sort. I just don't get my kicks out of watching people getting ripped to shreds.

Give me Roger Rabbit. Give me Eddie Murphy. Hell, you can even give me Ishtar. But keep those power tools out of my sight.

What the SGA can do for you

Welcome back! We hope you had an enjoyable and interesting summer. This campus is a ghost town during the summer, so for those of us who have spent the last three months here, it's great to have everyone back. It's especially exciting to see all those new faces out there.

Silkoff/Rabinowitz

One thing we have promised to do is keep in close contact with the students. This is the first of many messages you will receive from us, to let you know what we're doing and what's on our minds. We hope, also, to hear from many of you during the year.

This is an invitation to get involved in the Student Government Association. We think the SGA offers an incredible array of opportunities for all students, no matter what their interests. Unfortunately, most students don't know what the SGA does and how it adds to our lives.

At some time during your years at UMass, you may be walking on campus and look up to see people parachuting out of the sky. You may tune your radio to 91.1 and hear a variety of quality music. You may need some legal help, and find yourself at the Legal Services Center. In one way or another, all of these things were brought to you by the SGA.

Due to the efforts of countless students over the years, the SGA at UMass has become one of the largest and most powerful student governments in the entire country. Besides overseeing the allocation of millions of dollars of student activities money, we set student policy, organize student protests on a number of issues, and represent students to the administration and public.

There are three tiers of student government on our campus. There is a house council representing each dormitory, there are seven area governments representing the residential areas, the commuters and the Greeks, and there is the SGA, which represents all UMass students.

There are also hundreds of Registered Student Organizations on campus. These groups receive some of your Student Activities Fee to provide programs and advocate student concerns.

The SGA fights for student rights — for your right to a quality, affordable education, on a safe campus free from discrimination. While you're here at UMass, you you may hear about some of the petty squabbles that go on in the Student Senate. You'll probably hear much less about the tremendous work we do.

We invite you to get involved. No matter what your interests, or whether you have a lot of spare time or just a little, there's something you can do. We urge all of you to check it out, especially women and minority students, to ensure your voice is heard. Come visit us in the Presidents' Office (406E Student Union). We're there most of the time, and we'll soon have our office hours posted. Or, drop by the Senate office (420 S.U.) or the office of your area government.

We look forward to seeing you.

Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz are SGA co-presidents-elect

Committee's actions valid

Stephen Bayer raised questions about the specifics of Coordinating Committee ("Politics, pollution and other fun summer things," Sept. 7) that warrant immediate answers.

The Senate's Coordinating Committee consists of sixteen members: the Speaker of the Senate; the SGA President; the SGA Treasurer; the chairpersons or their appointee of the Senate's six standing committees; two members (one male and one female) of the Third World Caucus; three at-large senators appointed by the Senate; the SCERA Student Coordinator, and the SGA Affirmative Action Officer.

For the Summer, the SGA President and the two at-large senate seats were not filled. All appointments to the committee are approved by the Senate; Coordinating may not add to its membership. During the summer, the Coordinating Committee takes within its charge many of the duties for which the whole senate is normally responsible. However, any action or position taken by the Committee are approved by the Senate through its minutes.

As the various actors in this continuing saga are being scrutinized, we should take a close look at one of the stars, the Student Judiciary. Who are the current justices? What is their legal background and education? Bear in mind that in past years members of the Student Judiciary were required to attend class sponsored by the Legal Services Office. I question, as do other SGA members, if the composition of the Student Judiciary has the required skill to accompany the power invested in the student court. The court's unchecked, unbalanced, and unrestrained use of this power is dangerous for democracy.

It is vital that the Student Courts and the student body take these points to heart and allow this electoral question to be decided by the most democratic means possible. The controversial issue of the co-presidents should be decided by the elected representatives of the student body. The Senate will decide.

'M' is for mouth

I'm tired of movie censors

In the beginning, there was fire. It burned books. Then one day, Tipper Gore declared: "Let there be ratings!" And lo, records were rated. If you thought it was still safe to go out to the movies, you're wrong.

Pamela McCarthy

For anyone who wants to see the Last Temptation of Christ, you may have to wait until it comes out on videoassette. This is because certain Christians have the audacity to tell us what we may and may not see. They are offended by the film — that's fine. If you think the film is blasphemous, don't go see it. Think what you want. Scream to the ends of the earth why it is an immoral, blasphemous insult. But don't keep me from seeing it simply because you don't agree with it. I'd like to see for myself. What gives these people the right to control theaters and the general population? Do they believe God does? I think not. Even God gave us freedom of choice. These petty tyrants don't.

What do they expect us to say? Oh, I can picture it, our admitting our evil can be just like being "saved" on TV. "I've seen the error of my ways. Yes, I have repented, and I'd like to thank every T.V. preacher for it. Here I was with the evil idea that I can think for myself. How silly of me! Of course I can't. Only the Pope, Archbishop, Jimmy Swaggart, and any religious institution can think for me. I must apologize for the brash assumption. Never again will I assume I may go see a movie that others find offensive."

I can already hear the cries of protest. "We feel insulted. Besides, it's an immoral film. Why can't we protest it? What about our freedom of speech?"

I have felt insulted by certain evengelical shows. I have doubted their moral purity. I have not picketed the studios, boycotted the stations, or tried to ban them in any other way. I recognized the freedom of speech and the rights of viewers. I simply didn't watch the shows. Problem solved.

While these faithful followers of Christianity claim to feel insulted, I wonder what would happen if the tables were turned. Would they be as accomadating if, say, Muslims found their programming offensive and called for it to be stopped? What if Jews wanted Jesus of Nazereth banned because they thought it was anti-Semitic? It would be a very different story.

The movie itself seems to be a huge "what-if." What if Christ had a very human side? What if he had strong human desires? What if he almost carried these out? Could Judas be a hero in a twisted way? From what I have heard about the movie, the story of Jesus is told from a new and interesting perspective. It may prove to be inspirational — certainly more so than the drivel I heard from certain self-appointed messengers of God. At any rate, it should make you think. I thought that was what films are for.

Remember we haven't been able to see it yet. When it wasn't released, they were screeching about it. Now that it has been released, they are doing their best to keep the theaters from showing it; and the theater owners, the kind souls, have bent over backward to accommodate them.

The Christians who are insulted and say why they object to the movie without infringing upon my rights have my respect. They have the right idea.

My intelligence is insulted. I am a thinking, feeling adult who is capable of deciding what is moral and what is not. I don't need or want anyone's "protection" from the supposedly evil influence of the film.

If you feel the film shows an unfair attitude, then fight the attitude, not the film. All censorship does is remove the effect, not the cause, of a problem.

No housing? How about a condo by the pond?

The UMass campus is my home.

I am a student without housing; yet the entire grounds of the University are my abode.

I sleep in my tent on the Campus Pond lawn.

My bed is a sleeping bag.

My shower is in Boyden Gym.

I shave in the first floor bathroom of Hasbrouck Laboratory.

I take care of business in the basement bathroom in Whitmore.

I keep all my books in my bookbag.

I wander aimlessly across the campus in the day because there is no place for me to go between classes.

I wash my clothes in the nearest dormitory.

I make a trip to my car in E-Lot every morning and every night to drop off my house and my bed as well as my used clothes.

I am. . .

What is written above is a continuing dream, or should I say nightmare, of mine.

You see, I am a senior who, up until this semester, lived off-campus. Because I pay my own way through college and because of the continually increasing costs of attending UMass, I can no longer afford to live off-campus.

Yet, because of the housing rules, there is no place for me to stay on campus.

By the end of last semester, I knew I could not afford to stay off-campus so I went to Housing to get a room. I was told I had to wait until this semester to apply.

This semester I was told I could not apply to get housing until Friday.

I was here last Sunday morning because I had to work the traffic detail for Student Security while people moved into the dorms.

I have been here for six days without a place to stay.

I will have attended two days of classes before I can stand in a line and hope there is something available for me.

Anthony Padovano

Up to this point I have been sleeping around, er, I mean I have been staying with friends here and there for a couple days at a time, but I will no longer impose on them.

I think it's ridiculous for the University not to give me, and others like me, housing after we have pumped untold thousands of dollars into the school by way of fees, tuition, etc.

If I do not receive housing my nightmare will come true.

But if my nightmare comes to fruition there is a way I can change it into a pleasant experience, but I will need help from the others in the same boat as me.

I say to whomever does not receive housing: COME JOIN ME ON THE POND.

Get yourself a tent and a sleeping bag and come on down because the Price is Right.

It's free of rent.

If you want to get a single room on campus you need lots of luck and a $100 fee. You can buy a one-person condo for 25 bucks and put on whatever location you want.

You can stay in a quiet atmosphere central to all academic and residential buildings. It's close to the Library, the Campus Center.

If you get bored the arcade is a three minute walk.

Because you stay on the pond lawn, you don't have to worry about elevators breaking down.

You don't have to worry about the person next to you being drunk and loud or bellowing out the sounds of passion (well, maybe not).

And because most of the people currently without housing are 21 or older, you don't have to worry about RA's giving you a hard time about having alcohol out in the open.

From what I understand, though the University has an open container policy, it is not against the law to drink on University grounds if you are of age. The police can take your name and give it to housing, but what are they going to do, kick us out of the dorms? I know I'm shaking in my shoes.

So to anybody who is interested, come on down, we'll listen to some music, drink a few cold ones and party.

I would love nothing more than to see a town of tents surrounding the Pond. We can call it Campus Condo Village.

I'll be waiting.

Oversubcription! No!!!

It was the end of August. A peaceful day. All was quiet in my house — until it came.

I opened the mailbox and cautiously took the mail out. The closer September got, the more my stomach churned with dreaded anticipation of this day. I thumbed through the letters and magazines with great reservation but my eyes still saw the University of Massachusetts return address.

Bob Bobala

"It's here," I thought. Holding the envelope to the light, I peeked through the little clear part, and saw the unmistakable green and white paper. My schedule had arrived.

As I opened it I saw the culmination of all my nightmares: OVERSUBSCRIBED, OVERSUBSCRIBED, OVER-SUBSCRIBED.

"It happened again!" My fists clenched and my face began to swell with redness. "Dad," I yelled. "They did it to me again! Only two classes this time. And worst of all, I didn't get the classes I needed in my major!" Three classes I preregistered for were oversubscribed.

"Don't worry, son," my father said. "We won't let that computer get the best of you this year. We'll take it all the way to Dukakis if we have to! I'm not going to give up!"

"Dukakis!?" I thought. "Give up, Dad. It's hopeless."

Oversubscription, oversubscription — the curse of a big university. The most frustrating thing about it is that I don't think anyone is really to blame.

Maybe I'm wrong, but I assume the biggest problem is money. If the University had more money it could hire more professors who would could teach more classes. But I can't get mad at the state legislature. The Dukakis administration has been obsessed with the budget deficit. Cuts have been made all over the state, not just here. I want to be selfish and say, "Education is the most important. Let us have more money!" But, I can't.

No, wait a minute. I can. "We need more money!!!"

I hate the thought of raising tuition. It goes up every year anyway and the problem is still not solved. For some reason that just doesn't seem to be the answer. I still think UMass is a good deal. But what's the sense of getting a good deal if you can't get the classes you want?

After getting this semester's schedule I considered transferring. But, I like UMass. I don't want to leave. I considered changing my major. Not all departments are plagued by oversubscription. I hear there are only four entomology undergraduates. No problem getting classes there.

Too bad bugs aren't my thing.

I'm sure the problem varies from major to major. I can't blame my department though. I know it's not anybody's fault in the English office. There isn't some little bald guy over there in Bartlett who wakes up every morning and says, "How can I give every English major a headache? Ahh, yes, I won't give them enough classes! Ha! Ha! Ha!"

Maybe they should create a new course— "How to Deal With the Frustration of Oversubscription." Nah. Bad idea. It would be oversubscribed.

Just my opinion

Amherst (yawn) summers

Ahh the summer. A time to have fun, get some sun, and just relax. It's also a time to make memories you'll have for life.

People our age during the fifties and sixties have the movie "The Big Chill" to remind them of the best time of their lives. The movie about my summer would be called "The Big Yawn."

Peter Leon

I decided to move to the Amherst area for the summer. Sunderland to be exact. I had great plans. My friend Tom moved from Boston so he could go to school here this semester. Tom and I have been close friends since first grade. On top of that I knew 30 to 40 people who would be up here, so I figured I would have a great time.

Oh, how wrong I can be.

First, finding a decent paying job in the 'happy' valley is a myth. There are poor paying jobs, period. So I took the best one I could find. I worked the graveyard shift at 7-11.

Across the street from the Sunderland 7-11 is a bar called Seven O's, the O's for short, last call is at 12:45. It's an OK bar frequented by the town's residents. People in Sunderland are nice, but drunks are never fun. They usually want a hot dog and coffee or some Coke. But if the hot dogs aren't cooked or there isn't any chili sauce, they can get nasty.

Also, no one going to work at 5:30 a.m. Monday is happy. The 7-11 worker is usually not overjoyed either.

Beyond the drunks and early risers there were others of interest. Most noticeable were the skinheads who live in Sunderland. No, they aren't racist Nazis, just people who don't like having hair. Brian, the leader of the pack, once had the bed spins, so he visited me — for three hours. We became good friends, as he and the others were working at Stop and Shop, where I used to work. So we swapped stories about abusing customers, and management and so on.

There were also people who came in once and left such an impression I can't forget them. Case in point: one night a woman asked to use the phone (against all store rules). I asked why because she seemed upset. She calmly replied, "I have to call the Everywoman's Center hot line. I just left my husband."

Boom, went my mind. 'I don't get paid enough for this' I thought.

I suggested she get a room at Campus Center Hotel and call from there, and she did. Though this was serious, the way the woman said this was so dead-pan, it became humorous.

I must mention my roommates. Jon, other than being a habitual slob, worked two jobs 70 hours a week, so he was rarely there. Then there was Paul. My friend Carol was going to sublet for the summer, but a week before school ended she called and said she couldn't afford it. There I am faced with no one to pay the rent when Paul calls, just two hours after Carol. Paul was a good kid I met at Stop and Shop — a bagger when I was a cashier.

Now a minor detail, Paul is a 17 year old B-town high school student. But I said, 'Hey, I can handle it.' Well, Paul is still a good kid, but Lord knows he can't say no, especially when his friends show up to party. Not a problem unless it happens every night.

It did. So as the summer drew to a close I did it for him. One day I said point blank to his friends 'You are all kindly invited to leave now.' I was trying to sleep — unsuccessfully.

Anyway things got so bad I started to plan trips into Boston, the saving grace of the summer. Rather ironic to be desperate enough to drive 2 hours to see more people in one city block than there were in Sunderland this summer, especially since my family is only 20 minutes away from there.

So here's a bit of advice: unless you're taking a class over the summer, DON'T STAY.

Classics get cut down to size

By JENNIFER DEMPSEY
Collegian Staff

Jump Off the Cliff Notes
By Gina and Annette Cascone
Bart Books, Inc. New York, 1988

Jump Off The Cliff Notes says everything an english literature student ever wanted to say about a Dickens, Melville, Hawthorne or Steinbeck novel.

"You've got a better shot at . . . running through the jungle with porkchop drawers on and tickling a hungry lion in the lips . . . than getting through the classics," write Annette and Gina Cascone in the introduction to their irreverent look at the classics of literature.

In 85 pages, the sisters Cascone slaughter some old "favorites," including Animal Farm, The Grapes of Wrath, The Old Man and the Sea, Great Expectations, and provide students with the "information you need to be able to bullshit with the best of 'em."

Each classic is whittled down to comprehensible size and divided into the chapters, "About the Author," "Moral of the Story," "Who's Who" and "What Goes Down."

"There are four, count 'em, four plots in this book," they explain about Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men. "Lenny pets a mouse to death. Lenny pets a puppy to death. Lenny pets Curley's wife to death without touching one erogenous zone. Lenny buys the farm."

Anyone who ever felt that Melville's Moby Dick was a big complicated waste of time — you're in company with the Cascone's.

"In 1851, Melville gave the world Moby Dick. Now we'd like to give it back to him."

After a three page explanation of "what goes down" with Ishmael ("the guy who tells the story"), Ahab ("the guy with one leg"), and Pip ("a little boy abandoned by Gladys Knight"), the Cascone's sum up the novel's "several hundred-gazillion pages" with the simple moral: "Never screw around with a big dick."

The plot of Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter is put to an alphabet song: "A is for Hester, the horrible whore; B is the baby she got the A for; C is for Chillingham, the husband betrayed; D is for Dimmesdale, the guy who got laid." Moral of this story, they write, "Cover your A."

Charles Dickens receives the worst beating throughout the entire book.

His Tale of Two Cities is subjected to 13 pages of ridicule, wrapped up with a simple analogy to the title of Dostoyevsky's Crime and Punishment: "Charles Dickens wrote a book. And we had to read it." To conclude the parody paperback, the Cascone's offer a dissertation on Dr. Suess's tale "One Fish, Two Fish, Red Fish, Blue Fish."

"By juxtaposing the old and the new fish," they write, "Dr. Suess evokes the quintessential image of life regenerating itself." While Jump Off the Cliff Notes offers little more than a good laugh, the Cascone's reassure students that "if you can't dazzle 'em with brilliance," it's possible to "baffle them with bullshit."

The book will sell for $4.95 in bookstores starting September 30.

See unknown bands at their best - while they are new

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

Fall is a great season to hunt out new and relatively un-famous bands without having to deal with the massive crowds at clubs that normally come with the beginning of the winter months. Regardless of the time of year, bands are always trying to make their breakthrough, and it's a good bet that you'll get the best show out of a group when they're young and hungry, doing their darndest to get signed to a record label. The bands below, while all having some kind of vinyl out, are as of yet unsigned to a major company, and for the most part, demonstrate that "hunger" with impeccable live performances. Keep an eye out.

NUZONE

This Boston group's independent EP "Ghost" is quite impressive. The title track is good, solid rock-n-roll, but the real meat here is a hot version of Count Five's "Psychotic Reaction," and the biting tounge of "Congressional Warriors." Steve Gaetz's vocals are unique, thought-provoking, and at times, disturbing. Guitarist Dale Roberson peels off plenty of steaming licks, while overall the band displays tremendous tightness and musicality. While Nuzone's gigs have been sporadically scheduled as of late, it would be a sin to miss their show if given the chance to check them out.

GREAT TRAIN ROBBERY

The Great Train Robbery's unique sound is best described as a hybrid of funk, rock, reggae, and ska influences. Based in Buffalo, and now temporarily relocated in Boston, "GTR," in just a few months, has made a noticeable impression on both the eastern and western Massachusetts music scenes. Guitarist David Watts' poignant songwriting deals with the good and bad of relationships, politics, and society in general. Their independent LP "Intensified" is an excellent piece of vinyl, well-produced and arranged, and stressing the killer horn section of Jim Burgess, Greg Horn, and Vincent Fossitt. Great Train Robberry's live show must be seen to truly appreciate the scope of the band's talent. Their onstage energy, rhythmic sense, and lighthearted approach translate into pure fun.

PLATE-O-SHRIMP

Okay, so these guys happen to be personal favorites, but there is no denying that they're one of the most exciting bands to have hit the ska scene, and they just may have the stuff to supplant favorite sons Bim Skala Bim from the top of the heap. They've appeared on Bim's hard-to-find compilation album, and their debut album "Tribal Surrealism" is now available at stores. While it's nice to be able to spin such ska masterpieces as "Mariskando" and "Immorality Act" on your turntable, Plate-O Shrimp's kick-ass live sound just doesn't fully translate to vinyl. Who cares? This crazy seven-man gang jumps around, dances, bops, blows, and laughs their way through every set. Make a mental picture of funk flavored dance rhythms juxtaposed with heavy-duty guitar riffing, smooth sax solos, latino percussion, and to top it all, deep lyrical expression — and you'll have a good idea of what this seafood platter of a band can do Cream of the crop.

George Bush declares Sept. 7 Pearl Harbor Day, reconsiders

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)– Republican presidential nominee George Bush yesterday confused the anniversary of Pearl Harbor Day as he delivered a tough defense speech to a national American Legion convention.

In his talk to about 7,000 members of the nation's largest veterans' organization, the vice president also said a Democratic administration would leave the nation "hostage to Soviet ballistic missiles."

But murmurs spread through the audience as Bush said, "I wonder how many Americans remember that today is Pearl Harbor Day: 47 years ago to this very day we were hit and hit hard at Pearl Harbor."

However, a few minutes into his speech Bush paused abruptly and said, "Did I say Sept. 7? Strike that. Dec. 7, 1941."

Bush, a World War II Navy pilot, added, "I'm glad I corrected that, I saw this guy shaking me off out here."

Bush's correction on the date of the Japanese invasion of the Hawaiian naval base that triggered the start of World War II won a good-natured round of applause and laughter from his audience.

Sheila Tate, Bush's press secretary, said: "It was 47 years ago this year and he just said today. He wasn't thinking."

The Pearl Harbor remark did not appear in a prepared text of the vice president's speech.

Federal plan relocates Boston minority families

BOSTON, (AP) — Twelve minority families will move into apartments in mostly-white housing projects under a federal plan aimed at rectifying years of discrimination in Boston's public housing, according to city officials.

The families — two black, two Hispanic and eight Asian — on Tuesday were offered Boston Housing Authority apartments in predominantly white projects across the city, including in South Boston and Charlestown, the focus of the past hostility to minorities.

The families will have five days to decide where they want to live. Most were given a choice of apartments in three locations.

City officials said they expected most of the families to accept the offer, some have been on the BHA waiting list for more than eight years.

"This administration continues to push forward . . to correct past BHA practices and to make sure that no family will be denied fair and equal access to public housing in the future," mayoral adviser Neil Sullivan said.

In recent months, several black families have been moved into South Boston housing projects without incident. Those families were on the BHA emergency list and were not a part of the description agreement.

The offers capped a nearly year-long process that had its roots in a scathing report by the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development last fall.

The report criticized the city for years of discriminatory practices at t?the waiting list for South Boston, Charlestown, and East Boston projects in favor of whites.

The city reached an agreement with HUD to end the practice. The city was then sued by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which argued that the agreement did not go far enough. The city and the NAACP 10 days ago resolved several disputes, clearing the way for the current plan to take effect.

But the NAACP still is suing the city and demanding it pay up to $5,000 to people who have been discriminated against by the BHA. The group also wants a more stringent plan to desegregate public housing.

Under the first phase of the current plan, at least 161 minorities on the BHA waiting list will receive housing offers, including the first 12.

An additional 672 minority families no longer on the waiting list but who may have been discriminated against are being encouraged to apply for apartments if they still live in Boston and meet income requirements.

Still more may be added as the BHA, under an agreement with the NAACP, looks for housing applicants who were dropped from the waiting list between 1978 and 1983.

In the second phase of the plan, a group of 467 minorities and minority families who are living in public housing but should have been given an opportunity to live in a predominantly white project will be offered a chance to transfer.

NAACP officials said some people were confused by letters sent out by the BHA to minorities eligible for transfers.

"We've gotten some phone calls from people saying they are being forced to move," said Dianne Williams, chairwoman of the NAACP's housing task force. "The language should be clearer."

Sullivan said no one is being forced to take any of the housing and the BHA has set up a telephone hotline for people with questions about their status.

Texas comic strip makes it big with hallucinations, relations and lawyers

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

When you get stuck experiencing summers such as mine, you've got to grab whatever small pleasures come your way. When I wasn't breathing toxic chemicals from my job as an exterminator, I was enjoying one of the few good aspects of the summer: Eyebeam by Sam Hurt.

Eyebeam is a surrealistic comic that got its start as a college strip in the University of Texas at Austin Daily Texan. It has since been syndicated, and appears in various papers across the U.S. If you haven't read Eyebeam - much less heard of it - get a hold of it. Now. If you can't find it in any paper, then buy one of the many compilation books available at the University Store.

You will do this right now. This strip is that good. So good, in fact, that it's tough to figure out what aspect of Eyebeam to praise first.

Start with the characters. There's Eyebeam, a young frazzled lawyer who looks as if he's completely replaced sleep with coffee. Then there's Ratliff, Eyebeam's procrastinating, underachieving friend who preaches bachelor tips such as "Don't ever cook until it's someone else's turn to clean up."

Sprinkled throughout are a myriad of skewed minor characters drawn in ways that would make Salvador Dali proud. On top of this, they get involved in some of the most bizarre situations ever conceived in a comic strip.

At one point in the Eyebeam saga, Ratliff finally finds the perfect job: manning the master

At one point in the Eyebeam saga, Ratliff finally finds the perfect job: manning the master sound control lever of all television stations across the country, making sure the volume of all commercials is ten times louder than the shows they air between.

Eyebeam has his share of excursions into the twilight zone, too. Besides being involved in cases such as a custody battle over the child of the Frankenstien monster and his bride, Eyebeam is perpetually harassed his friend Hank. The trouble with Hank is that he's a hallucination; time and time again, Eyebeam gets into arguements with Hank, only to have Hank shift the conversation to topics such as dreams and reality. Then Eyebeam wakes up, cursing Hank for foiling him again.

To write fully about Eyebeam could take reams of paper. To fully discuss it would take hours. What remains is an urgent recommendation: if people call you strange, it people call you weird, and if you live in constant fear of your hallucination's jealous girlfriend swallowing you whole, then Eyebeam is for you. It doesn't matter if you buy the small collections—mostly reprints from the Texan, which trace Eyebeam and the gang during their college years—or the recently released Eyebeam: Teetering on the Blink, which contains newer material; you can't go wrong.

Not only has Sam Hurt been praised by Bloom County cartoonist Berke Brethed as a "wonderful" cartoonist and "an affront to all who love today's mainstream family oriented funny pages," he is responsible for the strip that saved my summer.

For this, I'm grateful.

Dorms to compete for money at game

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts residence hall will receive as much as $150 for attending Saturday's football game against the University of Maine.

The UMass Touchdown Club, the boosters for the football team, and the University's Office of Community Relations are sponsoring a contest to determine which hall will have the largest percentage of its residents attend the game.

The hall with the highest percentage of its residents in attendance will receive $150, the second place prize of $100 will be awarded to the runner-up, and $50 will go to the hall coming in third place.

Gerry Grady, coordinator of community and alumni relations, came up with the idea in hope of bringing more people to the game to support the team.

"This idea appealed to me as a good way to start the school year, to get enthusiasm, and to support our team, band and cheerleaders," he said.

He said the event is not intended as an attempt to draw students who may otherwise not attend because of the alcohol ban which prohibits alcohol at events on University property.

"In no way was this intended as a diversion to the alcohol thing," he said. "It's just an idea — let's have a little fun and watch a football game."

He said this game is especially important because it is the first game of the season and UMaine is a leading contender for the Yankee Conference Championship.

Students living on campus are supposed to receive a card in the mail today with their name and residence hall printed on it. At the game, there will be tables with red and white balloons above the them inside the stadium's West and South entrances. Students may deposit their cards in the boxes on the tables, but the cards have to be in before the beginning of the second quarter.

Grady said attendance at athletic events has not been as good in the last 10 years as it was in the '60s.

"We have about 17,000 seats in the stadium and we've never filled it," he said.

I WANT THE FIRST PRIZE — Although the members of the football team are probably ineligible to win the $150 first prize for offered by the UMass touchdown club, one lucky dorm will be a little richer after Saturday's game at the stadium.

Two years later, Riccelli returns

Takes position as Greek affairs director

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts alumna was appointed as director of Greek Affairs during the summer, a position vacated when Robert White left the University after 20 years.

Carlene Riccelli took over Aug. 22, in the Office of Greek Affairs, which acts as a liaison to approximately 1,100 students who are members of the 14 fraternities and nine sororities recognized by the University.

Riccelli, who first came to UMass in 1966 as a music major, was never a member of the Greek system.

"At that time I didn't think much about it, and it never occurred to me to get involved," she said. "There was a lot of different kind of involvement in the '60s."

She was coordinator of the Alcohol and Drug Education Program at UMass from 1982 to 1986, and spent the last two years as an executive assistant to the mayor of Northampton.

"Carlene is a smart, vivacious person," said Helen Driscoll, the mayor's executive secretary. "She was always readily available for anyone who ever needed her, and worked very well with the school department."

Riccelli said she has always enjoyed working with students, one of the reasons she is so excited about her new position. Some of the jobs she's had include being the principal and guidance counselor at Amherst High School, a social work program director in the Brookline school system, and a music teacher.

"I'm really a people-oriented person," Riccelli said. "This job will allow me to form close relationships with the students."

She said she sees a bright future for the Greek Area and does not expect any major problems.

"There are so many positive things in the Greek Area that should be promoted more," she said. "Leadership, community services, scholarship, personal development."

White said he is very optimistic about the future of the Greek Area and is very optimistic about Riccelli's abilities.

"I wouldn't expect she would have experience in anything but success," he said.

Springfield single-family homes more expensive than last year

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Sale prices of existing single-family homes in Western Massachusetts rose during the second quarter of the year at a greater rate than anywhere else in the state when compared with a year earlier, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

The median price of a home in the four western counties was $120,000, or 20 percent higher than the median $100,000 price for the same period in 1987.

Armand Breault, executive director of the Greater Springfield Board of Realtors, said the statistics could be skewed by the sale of a large number of higher-priced homes in the region. "What I'm seeing is a lot of homes selling in the $300,000 category," he said.

Marybeth Bergeron, board president, said the region has historically lagged behind the rest of the state and for the past two years the home prices here have risen more quickly than the remainder of the state as the region catches up with prices in Eastern Massachusetts.

She also said a strong vacation home market in Berkshire County has contributed to the increase.

The median price of a home in the Boston area rose 1.5 percent from the second quarter of last year, but at $190,000 the median price of a home in the region was the highest reported in the state.

In Central Massachusetts, the median price of a home was $142,000, a 10.2 percent increase over the same period.

Church group invokes law to block 'Temptation'

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A church has asked a Hampden Superior Court judge to stop the showing of the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ" because it violates an 18th century Massachusetts law against blasphemy.

A hearing is scheduled Thursday before Judge William Welch in the suit filed by the Greater Springfield chapter of the American Family Association. Members of the organization were among 200 to 300 people who picketed the opening of the film at the West Springfield theater on Friday.

The Association, which includes the Rev. Curtis Rowe, pastor of Heritage Baptist Church in Springfield, the Rev. Jerry Cleveland, pastor of Pioneer Valley Church in Westfield, Garret R. Johnston, assistant pastor of First Baptist Church in East Longmeadow, and the Rev. Michael D. Tardive of the South Hadley Baptist Church, contends in its suit that the Bible's words are "twisted, changed, perverted and ridiculed" in the movie.

"We demand, in the name of decency, truth and humanity, that this travesty against Our Lord be stopped. Now. And, may our God have mercy on all those who, in ignorance, have participated in this blasphemy against Him," the Association said in its complaint.

The group also contends the film depicts Jesus Christ "as a liar, a lunatic, a bigamist, a coward, a voyeur, a hypocrite, an unfaithful friend , a homosexual and a traitor."

No end in sight to protests against Burmese leaders

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Mobs plundered government offices and warehouses yesterday, and state radio said security forces shot five looters. Diplomats said chaos was near and they prepared to evacuate their families.

Opposition leaders called for a nationwide general strike against 26 years of repressive one-party rule on Thursday. Leaders hoped for the largest of the many mass protests that have driven two governments from office in less than two months.

Looters ranged through the capital, and one Western diplomat said: "The streets are deserted. People are pretty much in fear of their property. Things have pretty much closed down. There is widespread perception that things have deteriorated."

The diplomat said the looting is "an act of desperation" by poor people who need food and other supplies in a city paralyzed by strikes and protests.

State-run Rangoon Radio reported looting in 38 areas of the capital Tuesday and Wednesday. It said security forces shot and killed five people, wounded six and arrested 88 looters.

The radio urged people to report looters to the police and said more than $43 million in state property had been plundered since the beginning of August.

An earlier broadcast said security forces would "open fire to impose control" if looting continued, but the order would not apply to peaceful anti-government demonstrations.

Soldiers fired into crowds of unarmed demonstrators last month, killing 112 people by government count and several hundred according to other reports.

Army trucks patrolled the main streets shortly after the radio announcement late yesterday morning.

In its 8 p.m. broadcast, Rangoon Radio said the government was revoking a 1987 order banning demonstrations at the Parliament building and several other sites.

Minutes later, groups of protesters could be heard shouting: "Down with the Burma Socialist Program Party government. We will go on demonstrating."

The party has ruled since a military coup by Ne Win in 1962. His socialist policies have isolated Burma and brought economic ruin on a nation rich in resources.

Party leaders plan a special meeting Monday to consider holding a referendum one-party rule, as promised by President Maung Maung, but opponents demand an interim government leading to democracy.

Because the situation is "sliding towards chaos," up to 100 dependents of US Embassy employees will be evacuated as soon as possible, said the Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Ross Petzing of the U.S. Embassy in Bangkok, Thailand, said the first group of 45 Americans would arrive in Bangkok on Thursday unless strikes grounded the flight.

Diplomats said the Italian, Israeli and several other embassies had evacuated dependents, and the Japanese and larger Western embassies were considering doing so.

Demonstrators have not threatened foreigners, and the US Embassy has been a favorite rallying point, with protestors applauding the American flag.

Turmoil began in Burma with student riots in Sep. of 1987, which led to street protests in March and June.

Ne Win resigned July 23 and was succeeded by a hard-line former general, Sein Lwin, who lasted only 17 days. Maung Maung is the first civilian leader since 1962.

SGA meeting postponed

Views differ on Sept. 28 start

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The first Undergraduate Student Senate meeting has been postponed to Sept. 28 because of the Legal Service's trial and Yom Kippur holiday.

Three judges from the First Circuit Court of Appeals are scheduled to decide on Sept. 14 whether the Legal Services Office case should go to trial.

The case rests on whether the Legal Services Office should have the authority to represent students in the courtroom. In the first trial, the justice ruled the case did not warrant a trial.

Co-president-elect Shari Silkoff said many senators and other student leaders will attend the trial.

Silkoff also said it would not be fair to students to hold the senate meeting on Yom Kippur Sept. 20 because it is a Jewish holiday. She said they considered having the first senate meeting on Tuesday but the holiday begins that evening.

Student Trustee Stefanie Orefice said, "To be fair to everyone in the senate we couldn't have it on a Jewish holiday."

"[Postponing the senate meeting] shouldn't cause a problem," Silkoff said.

However, senator elections to the Student Government Association will be postponed until the second or third week of October.

Senator Aram Hamparian said the meeting should not be postponed. "Even if you think the senate is a waste of time, it's a place where people meet to get the machinery of government going."

Senator Brian Darling said the senate meeting should be held next week because there is a lot of important business to conduct such as addressing Jason Rabinowitz's and Shari Silkoff's assuming the SGA president's office.

"I see it as a reasonable compromise to give excused absences [to those who would miss the senate meeting scheduled earlier]," Darling said.

Senator Matthew Whiting said, "I'm upset at [the meeting being postponed] because I think there's a lot of work to be done."

But Silkoff said student leaders will be busy working on their individual projects until the senate reconvenes.

"Don't let college interfere with your education."

Man convicted of paralyzing black football player is dead

BOSTON (AP)— The man convicted in the shooting that paralyzed a black high school football player in a predominantly white section of the city nine years ago has died at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Stephen McGonagle, 26, of the Charlestown section, died Monday. Hospital officials would not give the cause of death.

McGonagle had been in the hospital since July 27 when he was shot in the chest in an apartment in Charlestown.

McGonagle, then 17, and Loseph Nardone, then 18, were sentenced to 10 years in prison after pleading guilty as a result of plea-bargaining to assault and battery with a dangerous weapon in the shooting of Daryl Williams.

Williams, a 15-year-old sophomore at Jamaica Plain High School, was hit by a bullet as he stood on the sidelines at a game at the Charlestown High School's field.

The shooting created racial tension, although officials ruled it was not racially motivated.

McGonagle was found to have fired the shot that hit Williams. He said that he had not intended to but that he and other youths were on a housing project roof shooting at pigeons.

Barrett error keys Sox loss; lead now one game

BALTIMORE (AP) — Larry Sheets scored from third base as Boston failed to complete what would have been an inning-ending double play Wednesday night as the Orioles rallied for two runs to beat the Red Sox, 4-3.

Cal Ripken hit a bases-loaded grounder to shortstop Jody Reed, who flipped to second baseman Marty Barrett to force Bill Ripken. But Barrett's throw to first was dropped by Todd Benzinger, allowing Sheets to score.

The loss narrowed Boston's lead in the American League East to one game over the Detroit Tigers, who beat Toronto, 4-3.

Boston led 3-2 entering the bottom of the ninth, and was two outs away from victory after reliever Lee Smith struck out pinch-hitter Brady Anderson.

Smith gave up a single to Jim Traber, then left the game with a sore neck. Bob Stanley, 6-3, walked Larry Sheets and Pete Stanicek on nine pitches to load the bases.

The Orioles tied the game when Billy Ripken hit a single to right, scoring Rick Schu, who was running for Traber.

Reliever Mark Thurmond, 1-6, got the victory as the Orioles avoided a three-game sweep.

Baltimore pulled within 3-2 in the seventh with a two-out rally.

After starter Bruce Hurst retired Eddie Murray and Mickey Tettleton, he gave up a single to Butch Davis and walked Ken Gerhart. Traber then singled to right, scoring Davis.

Hurst got out of the jam by striking out Rene Gonzales.

After Hurst retired the first batter in the eighth, he gave up a single to Bill Ripken, and was replaced by Smith, who gave up a single to Cal Ripken.

The right-hander then struck out Eddie Murray for the second out, but walked Tettleton to load the bases. He ended the threat by getting pinch-hitter Joe Orsulak to fly out.

The Red Sox went ahead, 3-1 in the fifth. With one out, Curt Schilling hit Reed, then Wade Boggs hit an infield single. Both runners moved up when first baseman Traber tossed the ball past Schilling covering the bag.

After Barrett walked, Dwight Evans hit a bad-hop grounder that deflected off the glove of third baseman Gonzales and into left field for a double to score Reed and Boggs.

Boston tied the game in the fourth when Ellis Burks hit a 2-1 pitch from Schilling over the left field fence for his 16th homer. Schilling was making his major-league debut for the Orioles.

The Orioles took their first lead of the series with a run in the second. With one out, Hurst walked Tettleton and gave up a double to Davis. Gerhart then hit a sacrifice fly to score Tettleton.

The secret to hitting is all in the eyes, doctors say

BOSTON (AP) — Baseball sluggers see the world just slightly differently from the rest of us, and that helps explain why they can hit the ball so well, according to a new study.

The report, published as a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, attributes ballplayers' slugging skills to "crossed eye-hand dominance."

Just as people prefer to use one hand over the other, they also tend to see from one eye more than the other. If people are both right-handed and right-eyed, they are said to have uncrossed eye-hand dominance. But if the favored hand and eye don't match up, they have crossed dominance.

Drs. Jose M. Portal and Pal E. Romano of the University of Flordia College of Medicine gave eye tests to ordinary people and found that two-thirds of them had uncrossed eye-hand dominance. The rest were evenly split between those who have crossed dominance and those who used both eyes equally.

However, they found that members of the university's baseball team were twice as likely to have crossed dominance and 50 percent more likely to use their eyes equally.

"We think crossed dominance may aid the batter," the doctors wrote.

They found that players with crossed dominance had batting averages of .310, compared with .250 for those with uncrossed dominance. However, those who saw equally from both eyes had the best average at .340.

"Since left-handers more frequently have crossed dominance than right-handers," they wrote, "crossed dominance may also help to explain the relative preponderance of left-handers in professional baseball."

While players with uncrossed dominance are worse hitters, they also tend to be better pitchers.

"Uncrossed dominance may therefore be a relative handicap to hitting, forcing those who have it to become pitchers, or it may be an aid to pitching," they wrote.

The researchers cautioned that people should not try to change their dominant eye, because this can cause permanent double vision and other eye problems. And vision dominance may be inherited, anyway.

However, they said that if confirmed, their findings might be used to guide young athletes into the sports specialties that they are best suited for.

Palazzi to be starting QB against Maine

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The question everyone has been asking with regards to the University of Massachusetts football team has been answered.

Head coach Jim Reid, who has the luxury of two comparable quarterbacks in Dave Palazzi and Tim Bryant, has named Palazzi as the starter for Saturday's season opener against the University of Maine at 1:30 p.m. at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Reid waited until his team had been through its preseason drills and two scrimmages before making his decision.

David Palazzi is the starting quarterback. We have made the decision so both quarterbacks will have the security.
— head coach Jim Reid

"David Palazzi is the starting quarterback," Reid said yesterday. "We have made the decision so both quarterbacks will have some security."

And Palazzi won't have to worry about being yanked if he makes a mistake, at least not at the beginning.

"It's a new year and Dave is the quarterback," Reid said. "If he makes a critical error, he won't be pulled. We'll study the entire situation."

Last season, Palazzi threw for 1868 yards and 10 touchdowns, but threw 18 interceptions.

Bryant threw for 243 yards and one touchdown but had six passes intercepted.

"The problem last year was that neither David nor Tim played especially well," Reid said. "As competitive as Tim is, I'm sure he's extremely disappointed [that Palazzi will start].

"But he hasn't shown the disappointment. He's backing David all the way. The most important thing to both of them is that we win."

Little-known UMass Bike Club has a good year

By ROBIN BABCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Bicycle Racing club is one of the University's most successful clubs, yet one of the most unknown. Three years ago, Greg Swinand and his brother Paul established the club, which consists of approximately 30 official members.

The scores in bicycle racing are based upon points gained by individual team members, which are added up to obtain an overall team score. This past season, the team has been very successful. The UMass Orchard Hill Race, which was held in April, "is one of the most prestigious among the college races," says team member Peter Vollers. It is an extremely difficult course requiring the riders to do laps up Orchard Hill.

The race consists of four races. The A-race, which is the most difficult, is 25 laps long. The B-race is 18 laps, while the C and women's races are each 10 laps in length. This past year, Paul Swinand came in second in the A-race, while Steve Putnam was the winner of the B-race.

The club's biggest success this season was winning the Eastern Collegiate Championships at Cornell University in Ithaca, NY, making them the top team on the East Coast. The E.C.C. is the largest collegiate conference in the nation, with over 70 schools participating.

The competition is divided into three races, the first of which is a 15-mile team time trial. In this race, the women's team, made up of Tracey Brockway, Stephanie Russos and Elaine Cibotti, was victorious, while the men's team of Paul and Greg Swinand, Vollers, Jones, Alan Cote and Corky Dean, finished second. Next is a 40-mile criterium race, which was won by UMass' Burt Jones, and finally there is a 65-mile road race, in which Paul came in second.

Jones was the overall men's champion, and Russos came in second overall for the women.

This summer, the club members traveled to San Lours Obispo, CA for the College Nationals. Both teams were successful in the team time trials, with the men placing second and the women fourth, but weren't as fortunate in the road race. "It was a hot, horrible race," Paul Swinand said.

Brockway finished 20th overall in the women's race, but the combined scores of the men's and women's teams placed the club 10th in the nation.

Vollers attributed the team's success this season to hard training, and the financial support from UMass and several of the local merchants, as well as Bicycle World in Amherst.

"Without their help, it would not have been possible for us to be a well-equipped racing team, and we would not have been able to be as successful as we were," Vollers said.

Hewelt set to become hoop coach

The Collegian has learned the decision on a new women's basketball coach for the University of Massachusetts has been made and, as soon as the paperwork is completed, the announcement will be made.

The UMass athletic department has recommended Kathy Hewelt, formerly head coach at Indiana Tech, as the replacement for Ethel Allman, who resigned effective August 31 after one year as head coach of the Minutewomen.

In addition, the athletic department also recommended to the University that Mary Vail, an assistant coach under Hewelt, be hired as an assistant at UMass.

Hewelt had a 117-59 record and led Indiana Tech to four seasons of 20 or more wins.

Sports Notices

There will be a mandatory meeting for anyone interested in trying out for next spring's varsity women's lacrosse team on Monday at 5 p.m. in room 156 of Totman Gym.

Anyone with any questions can contact head coach Patti Bossio at 545-1942.

The women's soccer team will be holding open tryouts today and Monday from 3 to 5 p.m. These tryouts are open to any student. Candidates must sign up with coach Jim Rudy prior to tryouts in 222 Boyden or by calling 545-4343.

The intramural season begins next week, with entries for flag football and soccer being due on Monday. Lacrosse is due on Tuesday, while singles tennis, ultimate frisbee and field hockey entries are due Tuesday, Sept. 20.

Also, students are reminded that admission to Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium is free with a valid UMass student I.D. The first home football game is Saturday against the University of Maine, so bring your I.D. and catch the excitement.

IT'S A GREAT DAY FOR. . .OH WELL, WE'LL GO TO CLASSES ANYWAY — Two students walk under the big blue sky that covered UMass yesterday.

UMass slated to have multipurpose arena equipped for hockey

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

After a four-year appeal to the state, the University of Massachusetts has been granted $25 million to construct a multipurpose arena that will bring ice hockey to the school in an estimated five years.

Other than hockey, the 8,000 to 10,000 capacity complex will accommodate concerts, stage productions, rainy-day convocations, and Minuteman basketball games, said Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor for administration and finance.

The project will cost about $50 million including interest and inflation, and half of this will be picked up by students through an increase in the authority fee, he said. This will be a maximum of $50 per semester and will not be levied until the arena is complete, Littlefield said. This will appear on students' bills beginning in the fall of 1992, he said.

Although the school is experiencing cutbacks because of the state budget cuts, the $25 million is not transferrable to any other projects, he said.

He said it is very unusual for the state to donate this much support. "Many of these buildings they wouldn't be interested in undertaking at all," he said.

There is speculation the project was developed with the expectation that alumni would support a hockey team, something the University has not had since 1978.

Littlefield said he had heard some "alumni have promised the athletic department that they would provide funding (for a hockey team)," if an arena was built. He said there would definitely be a hockey team.

Another source close to the project said, "I have no doubt there will be a hockey team."

The University official who conducted most of the dealings with the alumni could not be reached because he is on vacation.

The Board of Trustees had been attempting to solicit state support since 1984 and finally got the money in July when the state approved the University's Capital Outlay Budget.

The building, which will be named the William D. Mullins Memorial Center after the late state representative, is expected to be completed around the late summer or early fall of 1992.

Littlefield said Mullins, who was the vice chairman for the Massachusetts House Ways and Means Committee, initiated the project.

The complex will also include a wing with a second ice skating rink that will be used for recreational skating.

The location of the arena will be in the proximate vicinity the baseball field and the animal science barns that are diagonally across the street from the Physical Plant, he said.

The barns will have to be relocated, he said, but other than that nothing will be altered including Massachusetts Ave., which runs northwest along the west side of campus.

Before construction begins, the complex will be designed and put out for public bid, Littlefield said.

He said right now is a good time for borrowing to build because the interest rates are about 7.5 percent, which is relatively low.

"Things are finally pulling together and it could be a great addition to the resources of the campus," he said.

Dukakis receives NEA's approval

Futrell looks to Duke to restore funding to public education

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1.9 million-member National Education Association yesterday endorsed presidential candidate Michael S. Dukakis, with its chief predicting the Democrat would spend more on schools and end "eight years of teacher bashing."

NEA President Mary Hatwood Futrell said she aims to "mobilize at least half-million members to be volunteers in the Dukakis campaign."

The union sent out mail ballots to the 8,479 delegates who attended its last convention, and got responses from about 6,200. Dukakis was the choice of 86 percent; the other 14 percent marked their ballots for Republican nominee George Bush.

Four years ago, 88 percent backed alter Mondale in an up-down vote on the Democratic nominee. The NEA did not show Ronald Reagan on its ballot that year.

Futrell, joined by Roseanne Bacon, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, told a news conference she looks forward to "substantial increases in federal funding for public education" in a Dukakis administration.

She said Dukakis will "work side by side with the education community to improve American Education," and expressed confidence that he will "redirect national priorities and provide substantial increases in funding for public education."

"Mike Dukakis, as president, would put an end to eight years of teacher bashing and budget cutting," she said, and "appoint a secretary who would fight for education insteadof trashing it."

"I think that Ronald Reagan and George Bush will go down as the administration with the worst educational record probably in the history of America," Futrell said.

The union has been encamped in the Democrats' corner in every presidential race since 1976.

Futrell said 30 percent, or nearly 6,00,000 of her members are registered Republicans.

But in rejecting Bush, she said, teachers were signalling that "they were tired of being beaten on the head, tired of being told to do more with less."

Bush belatedly replied to an NEA questionnaire two weeks ago, a year late and long after the ballots went."

Meanwhile, on a stop-off in Louisville, Ky. yesterday, Dukakis told war veterans he does not question George Bush's patriotism, but "I question his priorities."

He told the crowd of former servicemen that the massive federal debt threatens the nation's military strength.

"Military might can not be sustained without economic might," the governor said. "We can not build a strong national defense on a mountain of debt."

Dukakis received a polite, sometimes arm reception in an address to the annual convention of the American Legion, the nation's largest organization of war-time military service.

He later flew to Buffalo, N.Y. to tour a General Motors engine manufaturing plant. He also plans to attend a fundraiser in New York.

Dukakis steered clear of mentioning in his speech the strategic weapons system proposed by the Reagan Administration, which he opposes.

At a news conference later, Dukakis said he supports continued Star Wars research at reduced level of $1 billion a year, but believes testing and deployment of such a nuclear-shield system would violate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which he supports as in the nation's best interest.

Fake gun scares cashier in SW

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Shortly after 11 p.m. Wednesday night a man entered Hampden Snack Bar in the Southwest Residential Area and threatened the cashier there with what Public Safety termed an "plastic Uzi-type assault rifle."

When the cashier realized the gun was a facsimile of the real weapon he began to chastise the alleged assailant causing him to leave the establishment, police said.

Although no one has been charged with the incident, university safety officials are mounting evidence in preparation for a show cause hearing for the suspected individual involved.

In other incidents:

- A male student injured his hand when he broke a 4 ft. by 4 ft. window in the 3rd floor bathroom of Patterson residence hall. When the floor's resident assistant went to aid the man and tell him he would have to pay damages, the man fled the scene, striking the RA across the chest while exiting.
- Police are investigating an accident that occurred at Massachusetts and Sunset Avenues on Tuesday morning involving a 1982 Oldsmobile Cutlass. The Cutlass had stopped to allow pedestrians to cross when it was struck by a second vehicle which fled the scene.
- A Coolidge dormitory resident reported on Monday that his wallet and personal property, valued at $144, had been stolen from his desk Wednesday evening.
- A Pufton Village resident was arrested on North Pleasant St. and charged with driving under the influence and with defective equipment.

Feds bust six in massive drug raid

BOSTON (AP) — State and federal law enforcement officials said yesterday that they have arrested six men and confiscated 183 pounds of near pure heroin with a street value of up to $260 million in the one of the largest seizures of the drug in US history.

The heroin was hidden inside the airtight, stainless steel rollers of a bean sprout washing machine that was shipped from Hong Kong to Boston via Los Angeles, said John J. Coleman, special agent in charge of the US Drug Enforcement Agency in New England.

"This is a very rare event to see this much heroin concentrated in one location," he said, adding that it was probably enough to supply all the addicts in New England for more than a year.

State police and US Customs officers, acting on confidential information, were watching for the machine when it arrived by truck at a Boston warehouse August. 30. According to court documents, they replaced most of the heroin with sand and then waited for someone to claim the device.

Four men were arrested Tuesday after they allegedly picked up the machine in a rental truck, distributed parts of it to two locations in Boston and then took the remainder to a scrap metal dealer.

Undercover DEA agents later delivered some of the heroin to New York City, where they arrested two more men Wednesday night.

All six suspects have been charged with possession of heroin and conspiracy to distribute the drug, Frank L. McNamara Jr., the US attorney for Massachusetts, told reporters at a news conference.

McNamara said authorities believe the men are "important figures" in the drug trade - not merely "mules," or carriers of drugs - may have connections to Chinese organized crime groups. Police in Hong Kong have conducted several raids in recent days in connection with the case, although no arrests have been made there, he said.

Police said the four men arrested in Boston were of Vietnamese origin and gave their names as Hung Ta, 24; Dang Phu, 23; Hieu Ly, 24; and Tuong Luu, 45.

The two men arrested in New York were identified as Wai Kwok Wong, 40, and Sik-Sze Yan, 36. McNamara said they are of Chinese origin.

Five cardboard cartons of heroin, wrapped in bricks, were on display at the news conference, along with the disassembled parts of the bean sprout machine, a gleaming contraption with rollers and metal prongs that is used by Oriental restaurants and produce merchants.

"The concealment effort was outstanding," said Williams S. Simmons, acting special agent in charge of the US Customs Service for the Northeast region. "You can see by the shape of the cylinders, they don't have any seams, you don't see any way of getting into those."

Regional Customs Director Philip W. Spayd said the amount of heroin seized was one of the largest in the country and the largest ever in New England. Approximately 200 pounds was discovered in a shipment of ice buckets in Seattle in 1985, and 378 pounds was found in Miami in 1971.

Coleman told reporters at the news conference that the street value of the 183 pounds of 95 percent pure heroin was more than $1 billion, but he later said that figure was miscalculated.

He said the shipment probably cost about $1.25 million in Burma or Thailand, its suspected point of origin, and would have sold for between $8.5 million and $18 million on its arrival in the United States.

Once it was diluted to five percent purity and distributed on the street for $100 to $150 a gram, he said, its total value would have been between $200 million and $260 million.

Escort service aids night travelers

Assistant Director: Demand higher at begining of semester

By PAMELA MCCARTHY
Collegian Staff

Men and women who are wary of walking around campus alone at night will find the student escort service to be a welcome feature to campus life.

Carol Radzik, the assistant director, said student usage of the service peaks at the beginning of each semester. The service averages about thirty escorts a night, she said.

Radzik credits the early demand to the flood of new students on campus. There are "a lot of new students who are unfamiliar with the campus. By the end of September they know people they can walk with," she said.

Radzik said the service is a good safety measure for all students to take advantage of.

"UMass is no different from any city or town," she said, citing the dangers present on campus. "Just the presence of having an escort service is a prevention thing."

UMass Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson said the service is part of a plan to enhance relations between students and police.

"I want to let the students know public safety is there for them," he said.

He said the service will have new features added in October. The services will be introduced during National Crime Prevention Month.

Hilson said the service will receive a car to facilitate escort arrival to callers on campus. The car "can drop off five or six escorts to different places on campus," said Hilson. He said this will help escorts to get to more places faster.

Hilson added that the service has increased its staff substantially to become more prevalent and efficient on campus.

Also, the Southwest Residential Area will receive its own police sub-station. The station will have headquarters on the fifth floor in Washington Tower and should be installed by October, Hilson said.

The new sub-station will provide UMass residents with greater security because there will be more people on foot patrols, he added.

Hilson said Southwest was chosen as the site because it is the most active residential area with the greatest population.

The new services will be tested on campus and other options are still being explored, but further expansion plans are uncertain because of recent budget cuts at the university.

The escort service was originally a volunteer effort sponsored by the Student Government Association, but because of pre-semester staffing difficulties, the Division of Public Safety took over responsibilities in 1981.

In 1987, there were 1500 escorts, a four percent increase from the previous year. There are male and female escorts who receive extensive training before entering the field. The escorts are employed and paid by UMass. The service is free.

The escort service runs from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m., Sunday through Wednesday and from 8 p.m. to 3 a.m., Thursday through Saturday. To ask for an escort, call 545-2123.

Despite cuts, registration smoother this year

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Despite budget cuts to the University and several long lines on campus, administrators and department officials said the crush of students registering for classes wasn't as bad this year as in the past.

Acting Registrar Janet Bell said out of the 20,020 students who had handed in preregistration forms, only 4200 had been scheduled for 12 credits or fewer.

"In comparison to prior years that number is down," Bell said. She added that some of the 4200 students had requested fewer than 12 credits.

Bell attributed the easing of problems to the new $230 fee that has been added to each student's semester bill. This fee, allocated primarily to departments with oversubscribed General Education classes, has allowed some departments to hire more teaching assistants and add sections.

"It was looking pretty grim before that fee came in," Bell said. "[The fee] enabled the Provost's Office to provide money to departments that needed it. They were able to open sections and increase capacities."

Bell said pre-registration forms were in before the money was allocated. This allowed the Provost to check the forms and see what departments were most in demand. Money could then be sent to these departments.

The Communication Department, in the past one of the hardest disciplines to register for classes in, was one of the departments helped by the fee increase.

William Price, director of undergraduate studies in the Communications Department, said monies became available from emergency fees.

"We only lost two discussion sections, and that was because we didn't have anyone qualified enough to teach them," he said.

"We have substantial wait lists in most of our classes, they are somewhat less than in other years. It was not as frantic as it was in previous years," Price said.

This was not the case in the Journalism Department. Norman Sims, chairman of the department, said all journalism courses were closed, and most have 12-25 people on wait-lists.

"We've managed to move a few people off the wait-lists and into the classes, but right now it looks pretty grim.

"Journalism has been over-enrolled for a number of years," Sims said. He said there were fewer sections this fall than in any of the previous nine years he has been with the department.

The Physics and Astronomy Department is experiencing no such difficulties. Ann Cairl, spokesperson for the department, said that all classes except Astronomy 100 were open.

Russ Kidd, director of general physical education said the Physical Education Department had been able to accomodate over 2500 students who had come in during the add/drop period.

"We're in great shape, very few people were turned away. They keep coming and coming," Kidd said. He said the budget cuts had had no effect on the department.

Bell said the pre-registration process begins in April when the forms are handed in to the registrar. They are run through an eligibility check to see if the student meets certain criteria the respective department has set, such as being in the major, being a senior, etc.

The forms are held until the middle of July, after incoming students have had their orientation and filled out their forms.

When all forms are in, the registrar sends rosters to the departments. The departments are then free to cut students any way they choose.

When the rosters come back to the registrar in the second week of August they are run through the computer for a final check for scheduling conflicts and closed sections. Alternates are tried and if necessary, workers try to schedule students manually. Finally, a check is made with the bursar to see if the students' bill has been paid, and if so, the schedule is mailed out.

Three UMass students elected to USSA

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Jason Rabinowitz has once again climbed political ranks, this time by claiming a prime seat on a national student congress.

Students at the United States Student Association elected Rabinowitz over the summer to sit on its board of directors at the 41st National Student Congress held in Hartford, Connecticut.

Simone Nicholas, a delegate to the same convention and a member of the New Africa House Monitoring Committee, was also elected to be an alternate to the Board of Directors for the Students of Color seat.

"It's an invaluable experience," Nichols said. "It gives me a chance to see how other people think."

Jay Festa, another University of Massachusetts delegate and a member of the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance, said, "So many different ideas are floating around on how to structure government."

Michael Greiner, a third UMass delegate, said to the convention, said its goal is to create a national network for an effective student voice.

The students at the convention elect the officers. Greiner said UMass students drew on their experience in their own senate. "We new all the little tricks," he said. "Some people say we have one of the most powerful student governments; it's true."

USSA meets to establish a political platform which the officers, who take a year off from school, lobby for in the US Congress, Greiner said.

The platform students create tends to be liberal because the stances are student issues such as funding for higher education, Greiner said.

Rabinowitz said, "I think I learned a lot about where the student mood is nationally: at a point of of rising activity and movement."

'So many different ideas are floating around,' — Jay Festa.

Officers and a USSA legislative director watch the US Congress agenda and inform student leaders of the issues nearing votes through a legislative update newsletter and phone calls, he said. Students are then able to lobby their state representatives in a timely manner, he said.

Greiner said, "[USSA] tells the people in Washington that these are the things we want you to concentrate on. It's different when you're representing people than when a student goes in and says, 'I'm concerned about this.'"

USSA also schedules special events. "They have some good stuff planned for this fall and some stuff that will directly effect UMass."

The Greyhound bus company is donating a bus for the organization to sponsor a National Student Voter Action Bus. The bus will tour to campuses across the nation and visit UMass in October, Rabinowitz said.

Student leaders will then be able to host rallies and other events to encourage students to vote in the upcoming election.

USSA will stress the importance of education and attempt to draw specifics from the presidential candidates on their education platforms, Rabinowitz said.

In a close race, targeting key issues such as education and student rights is important, he said. "Students can really make the difference in some of these things."

Addressing issues that concern students helps students have an active voice, he said. "Because of the election, we have to make sure this is a time of intense work."

The USSA is the birthplace of politicians. "These people now play political hardball," Rabinowitz said.

The Student Government Association sent seven delegates to the USSA convention. The Coordinating Committee allocated money for the students to attend the convention as well as the chancellor's and dean of student's offices, the Board of Governors, and the Commuter Area government, Greiner said.

The SGA gives money to the USSA, which makes every student who pays activity fees at UMass a member of the organization, Rabinowitz said.

Board neglects to discuss issue of Republican Club

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors could not make quorum for last night's meeting, but discussed several topics not including the Republican Club issue, despite the presence of several club members.

BOG Chairperson Eric Nakajima ended the meeting just as Republican Club president Stephen Lutz and members Brian Darling, Greg Rothman and Bill Collins were asking about the fate of their organization.

The club was kicked out of its office space by the board at the end of last semester because of charges of harassment brought by the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Alliance.

"I came here to discuss the Republican Club issue," Darling said as members of the board were leaving the room. "Aren't you going to talk about this?" he asked.

Nakajima said he would attend a meeting today between members of the Republican Club, the board, and Student Activities Office Director Irene Carew to try to iron out their differences. The Republicans have been in their office several times since their eviction.

"The board really is cognizant of my effort to peacefully and responsibly resolve the situation," Nakajima said.

Darling was not in agreement. "We came to this meeting tonight hoping we could discuss the issue, and then he just skipped over it when the president of the Republican Club walked in. I think that's irresponsible on his part to ignore the most important issue the BOG is considering at the moment."

Nakajima has said he is forming a "reconciliation committee," to look at disputes such as the Republican Club-LBGA battle and arrange a peaceful solution.

"I've always considered the Campus Center/Student Union complex as a microcosm of student life as a whole, and I think the effort the board can make to bring conservatives and liberals and all cultural and religious backgrounds together in a forum which respects each party would be of the greatest benefit," Nakajima said.

Nakajima said the reconciliation committee could arrange events such as debates and workshops between the warring organizations to ease tensions.

Said Darling: "The Republican Club is open to negotiations, but seeing what happened tonight I don't think that Eric Nakajima is ready for anything other than what he decided over the summer. We hope that something positive can come out of this meeting."

The space the Republicans are fighting for is room 415 of the Student Union, which the BOG allocated to Graduate Student Organizations over the summer, but the GSOs have not yet begun to use the room.

Nakajima said today is the deadline for the Republicans to move out.

The board, in their abbreviated meeting, discussed what they had done over the summer and what may happen this fall.

Jeff Glassman, BOG program coordinator, said he is negotiating for Doctor Ruth Westheimer to appear this fall. Glassman said he is negotiating with Health Services and other groups to co-sponsor the event, because the BOG Program Council budget will not cover the entire cost of the event.

Glassman also said he was negotiating for a laser show and a turtle race event.

The board will meet next Thursday with a slate of new business.

Correction

The Collegian incorrectly printed the time of the Third World Caucus meetings. The first meeting is at 5:30 p.m. Sept. 21 in the Campus Center. For more information call the Office of Third World Affairs.

The Wednesday issue of the Collegian reported that Charles DiMare, the director of the Legal Services Center, said the settlement for the Yvette Henri case "was in the millions, but the actual sum was not disclosed." DiMare never made that statement, but did say the case was settled out of court for a substantial sum of money.

Also in Wednesday's paper, The Collegian idenitfied Lori Edmonds as a senator from the Third World Caucus. She is president of Afrik-Am, an Afro-American student association.

Dukakis' wife warns students about drugs

MECHANICSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Kitty Dukakis yesterday drew on her experiences as a teacher and 26-year victim of drug addiction to warn a class of high school students about drugs, disappointing the college-bound teen-agers, who had hoped she would focus on educational issues.

Stumping through Pennsylvania on behalf of her husband, Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis, Mrs. Dukakis spoke at schools in Reading and Mehanicsburg and at a luncheon rally at the Pennsylvania State Education Association in downtown Harrisburg.

Shortly before Mrs. Dukakis' noon-time lecture to the accelerated humanities class at the Cumberland Valley High School, the National Education Association announced its overwhelming endorsement of her husband in Washington, D.C. [See related story, page 1]

Mrs. Dukakis said that if her husband were elected president, 'we can bring back strength teaching to the honored profession it must be."

ARTS/LIVING

Two discs with lots to offer

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

While a load of bands made some disappointing surfaces this summer, two bands, who seemed to come out of nowhere, had something fresh to offer this summer.

Bongwater Double Bummer on Shimmy-Discs label.

Bongwater are the most impressive act this year, and their debut double long player, Double Bummer is astonishing.

Representing every musical cliche of the 80's, it dares to be labled, has a lot of nerve, and will certainly go down in history for its covers of other band's hits.

A version of a famed Led-Zeplin song, "Dazed and Chinese" is met with guitars on a short-circuited music-effects box, with the lyrics sung in Chinese. Page and Plant must've had a good laugh. "Pew" is a song for glue-sniffers, and sounds like it was written by someone with one hit too many in his system. "Love You To" proves that to cover Beatles' tunes means to give it a whole new meaning. Untuned guitars, wah-wah pedles and sampling with the lack of perfect pitch are what make Bongwater work. Singer Ann Magneson (you might have seen her get eaten by a vampire in the 1983 film The Hunger) with her voice, creates a stunning immage of the un-satisfied Lower-East-Side motor mouthed hip-bitch. Listen to songs like "Lesbians of Russia," "Rock 'n Roll pt. II," or "Dazed and Chinese," and experience what it's like to have someone sing at you.

Double Bummer is a record made with a sense of humor. Bongwater have obviously studied the musical transition of the 80's and seem to understand the scene enough to encourage musicians to try to break new ground. Magneson, Kramer and Licht have unleashed a dangerous but brilliant record.

Public Enemy It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back on the Def-Jam label.

Rap has suffered over the past two years due to lack of any new ideas and because of the egocentric rapper. Suddenly Public Enemy, (who made an album last year for Def-Jam but it got crushed by the popularity of LL Cool J) have released their second and most powerful document, It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold us Back. It's overloaded with radical black politics, mostly inspired by Malcom X, making this record singular from anything that has preceeded it. Public Enemy abandon the ego in their lyrics, trying to inform and educate the people about contemporary black historical figures, their achievements, and beliefs. They also have set rap on a different course by refusing to let black youth remain ignorant of their heritage. This is the obvious statement in "Party For Your Right To Fight!" calling attention to the "original black Asiatic man." And "Prophets of Rage" is an awesome cut that adresses Afro-Americans devaluating each other.

Public Enemy have plenty of balls and blow the Beasties, RUN DMC and LL COOL J to pieces. It's definitly the best rap album of the year, and possibly Def-Jam's finest release.

Live Wire returns

Headlining Live Wire this semester is Sleepy LaBeef playing at Sheehan's tonight (over 21 please!). The Boston Globe called him "Onomatopoeic." Regardless, I've seen this guy make guitars speak, and if I were just two months older I'd take the oporitunity to see this talent. The rockabilly man starts the set at 8:30, and cover is $6 at the door. Tomorrow at Sheehans is Big Dipper and Check, Please. Two bands, four bucks.

If rockabilly isn't your gig, then the alternative gig for you might be The New Michael Gregory Band. Michael Gregory is a recording artist for RCA who is very much like Robert Cray — a good guitarist and a gifted song-writer. Even though he resides in the area, his appearances here are rare and are worth checking out. He'll play L'Oasis from 6 to 9 p.m. for all ages.

Finally those who wish for a more mellow outing may want to consider going to the Iron Horse Cafe. Bill Morrissey with guest Bob Martin — "one of New England's best songwriters," according to the Horse — is sharing his wholesome material with fellow folk-lovers. Tickets are $6.00 at the door. Tomorrow at the Iron Horse, Eliot Murphy is celebrating the re-release of his 1973 classic album Aqua Show on CD. Tickets are $5.00.

Local Vocals: tuneful start to the semester

Welcome to the jungle. No, no, just kidding. Welcome to the initial edition of Local Vocals. This column will try to keep readers informed about local bands from the Five-College area, as well as the best shows to see, records to buy etc., in Amherst and Northampton. Readers are encouraged to submit information on their favorite bands, known or unknown, to the Arts desk in care of Jennifer or myself.

The Hatch has begun its schedule of live music accompanied by inexpensive beer and wine. Fifth Business played last night, and while there's nothing planned for this evening, you can bet the weeknight schedule will fill up soon. Don't ignore this opportunity to see good local bands at a grass-roots level.

It's a good weekend for live music. While tonight's Sleepy LaBeef show at Sheehan's seems to be the concensus favorite, L'Oasis boasts Bim Skala Bim for tomorrow, and blues legend Lonnie Mack hits the Iron Horse Sunday night. The Fools, always a big draw but never a good show, play Katina's tonight.

What has happened to all our favorite UMass bands from last spring? Velvet Jesus, for one, constantly lurks around the valley, and if we're lucky, they'll be getting shut off at the Hatch with regularity. Strong Waters, according to frontman Jon Z. Bowser, has relocated with a revitalized lineup. Look for a surprise gig from them during the semester.

Starting a semester off with news of a tragedy is never an easy task, but the University community recently lost a popular alumnus and gifted musician. David Gonzales, better known as "Gonzo," drummer for the band Nexus, was killed in an accident while returning from a concert in Boston. All those who knew him and enjoyed his good nature and musical skills will truly miss him. Hearts go out to the Gonzales family, and hats off to Gonzo.

The Screening Room will look at flicks

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

Greetings, and welcome back to the film world, and all that's in it. First of all, you old timers probably recognize the change in the name of this column. "Friday Film Follies" is now "The Screening Room." A helluva lot more pretentious, I know, but our favorite critics like Gene Siskel and Rex ("Hi there!") Reed live for pretentiousness, and I couldn't resist the temptation.

But the similarity ends there, for I'm a reviewer, not a critic. My job is to inform you of the good, the bad, and the terrible, but try not to sound like the authority, just an advisor. Besides, this was the biggest summer in Hollywood history (finally beating 1984's record), and most of the offerings were quite good, and are also still playing at the neighborhood theaters. One of the best is Married to the Mob, with Michelle (Grease II) Pfieffer finally shedding her blond beauty image in favor of a talented leading actress. A fun movie by Jonathan Demme is even better with her in the lead.

Another comedy which I accidently omitted from my ten best summer films column on Wednesday is A Fish Called Wanda. This film combines the best of British humor (courtesy "Monty Python" alumni John Cleese and Michael Palin) and American story structure. Jamie Lee Curtis, who along with her cohorts, robs a bank, then enlists the help of a barrister (Cleese), to keep tabs on the partners that are trying to steal the loot out from under her. Cleese is at his best, giving his character depth and even vulnerability, and he is responsible for the witty script. Kevin Kline completes the group as dim-witted Otto. Don't miss this film.

On the other hand, under the horror-trash department, both Chuck Norris and Freddy Krueger are back, and I'll admit I'm starting to wish they weren't. The Hero and the Terror is Chuck's bag, where he plays such a sentimental family-man type character that's too much. There's a limit as to how fast you can change your image, guy. As for Freddy, A Nightmare on Elm Street 4: The Dream Master is basically a re-hash of all we've seen before. Some nice effects, but not much else. Don't bother.

Finally, on the serious side, Stealing Home stars Mark Harmon as a down and out ball player who relives his childhood and the special times with Jodie Foster, the girl that taught him how to live, laugh, love, and who is now ashes in the urn he clutches like a teddy bear. Supposed good performances all around can't make up for the meandering story, and sugary sentimentality. If you must.

As the mainstream offerings seem limited this week (until we get into the more "serious" films of autumn), check out the "little theaters" in the area. The Amherst Cinema is in town and offers artsy films at reasonable prices. A good buy, though I'll always keep hoping that they'll bring back the double features that delighted crowds up til last year. A pity. The Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton is a first-run art house that specializes in rare and quality features the big cinemas wouldn't even dream of showing. A nice interior and friendly staff make it one of the valley's gems. Lastly, The Academy of Music is one of the oldest movie houses in the country, and features films in a grand setting. For a look at the way folks enjoyed films in the good old days, this is the place to go.

That's it for this week, and I'll keep you updated on all in the world of film, both on screen and behind the scenes.

Survey says scales miss standards

BOSTON (AP) — A survey by the state Division of Standards found that nearly four out of of 10 scales used by retailers for measuring liquid propane gas sold to backyard barbecuers and recreational vehicle owners failed to comply with state regulations. Inspectors found that 38 percent of the sales checked failed to meet state standards for annual testing and sealing to guarantee accuracy. The survey, released Wednesday, involved 149 scales in 132 retail outlets in 73 municipalities across the state.

Some advice for Mike and George

An education president for only some classes

An education president? Hard to believe, but George Bush and Michael Dukakis have made education a top election issue.

Hard to believe, because neither presidential candidate is apparently capable of understanding what's wrong with education in the United States.

David R. Mark

Both say they support improved education. Unfortunately, it's easier to support improved education than to know what improves education.

Dukakis suggests the Vice President was silent while the Reagan administration slashed federal aid to public schools and higher education in the 1980s.

"Where was the man who now says he wants to be the education president? He was playing hooky, he was nowhere to be found," Dukakis said in a California campaign step.

Dukakis is correct. Bush has 'played hooky' as the Reagan administration cut financial aid to students and public school lunch programs, and nearly eliminated the Department of Education. But Dukakis is not one to talk about education either.

For when he says the presidential election is a contest "between those who see education as lifetime commitment and those who see it as an election-year strategy" I am left wondering who's whom.

According to The Chronicle of Higher Education Almanac, Massachusetts is the only state where more students attend private institutions than public ones. This is not good.

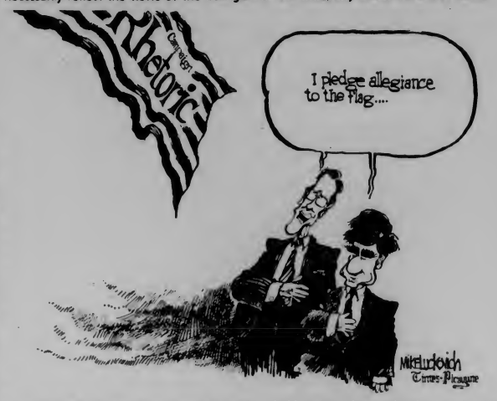
"That demographic fact, combined with the history and prestige of private colleges, has led to a series of state policies that help independent (private) institutions," writes the Chronicle. "There has long been an expectation in the state that the best students will attend private colleges. For public institutions, the situation has been difficult."

It isn't hard to believe the two have better education records with private schools. Let's not forget Bush attended Yale, and Dukakis attended Swarthmore. Both schools are private.

What this should lead the voter to believe is that neither would be the 'education president' Americans need. Instead, the voter would get a 'classist education president,' who would only be useful to people who could afford Yale or Swarthmore.

Further proof of the potential for a 'classist education president' is provided by Charles B. Saunders Jr. Saunders, an executive vice president for the American Council of Education, wrote that Bush and Dukakis, in their education papers, "foster the misleading notion that the central federal role in student aid is to guarantee educational loans."

He continues, "Neither mentions the critical importance of increasing grant aid for the neediest students, so that they will not have to rely so heavily on loans to obtain an education.



So what the American people are left with are two presidential candidates who are more concerned with middle and upper class, college-bound students. And why not? The poorest of the poor, the ones who need the most help, are the ones who are least likely to go to college and can almost be counted on not to vote.

It's unfortunate.

Bush and Dukakis barely care about students who can't afford college, or would be too saddled by large loans to even try, let alone those who have no college aspirations.

If only Bush or Dukakis could make a campaign stop at one of America's less affluent urban high schools where gangs, not teachers, are in charge; where contests are held to see whose urination creates the most steam on the radiator; where students are more likely to aim for a street corner to sell crack than a state university to store knowledge; where students go to bed hungry and don't benefit from school breakfast and lunch programs, and where attendance is another word Johnny can't read.

It's unfortunate Bush and Dukakis will not take a close look at these students, because in this year of campaign rhetoric, it's these students who need 'an education president' the most.

David R. Mark is editorial editor of the Collegian. "Some advice for Mike and George" will run Fridays until the week after the presidential election

Notes from the Campus Center basement

A tale of tidy Greeks, messy schedules

From the Poetic Justice Department: In four years, you have a lot of add/drop experiences. This year, I thought I was special, because I got all my classes. Since I'm a grown-up now, I even signed up for a 400-level English seminar. Life looked good.

So I showed up for my first class. And there was a little hand-written note on the door, "English 481 is cancelled."

My false sense of security blown, I ran up the stairs to beat everyone else from my class to the English add/drop line. There, I signed up for the waiting list of another seminar, which is about some William Carlos Williams, about whom I know exactly nothing. I'm sure I'll learn.

At the add/drop table, there was a nice man helping people, but he didn't really seem to know what he was doing. I thought he was kind of old for a graduate student, and most professors are pretty inured to add/drop. Then he signed my form: James Tate.

This has got to be the only campus in the country where we bring famous poets to our faculty and make them sign add/drop forms. I wonder if I should save the signature.

UMass graduate makes the big time department: Just when you thought Tony Rudy wouldn't make it into the pages of the Collegian, he pops up in a syndicated Mike Royko column. Royko was calling the National Defeat Dukakis campaign and Rudy answered the phone.

Royko quoted Rudy for awhile, then concluded a UMass education is shaky accreditation. That's the kind of publicity that won't make the Office of Public Information clips pamphlet this fall.

Nancy Klingener

This week on the Campus Center concourse, the New Testament Fellowship table, with a banner reading "Jesus is Lord," was set up next to the Young Communist League table. On a stroll through the concourse, the entire spectrum of undergraduate life at the University is laid out. It's a wonderful thing, even if the vast majority of students wants nothing to do with either of those philosophies.

There are freshman biology courses scheduled for lab sections in Morrill Science Center that won't get them, because renovation work that was supposed to be finished Sept. 1 isn't even started. Meanwhile, the faculty lounge is full of supplies, cleared from other rooms which have become makeshift teaching spaces. This, while our governor is proclaiming his support for education at campaign stops around the country. The Dukakis shuffle moves on.

Greek Row is all shaken up this year: BKO's house is boarded up, and rumor has it offices will go into that space (they'll have to do some serious renovation inside). At the old Tri-Sigma sorority house, on North Pleasant Street, a relatively new fraternity has moved in. Tri-Sig has a few apartments next to each other, and AEP is in their first house on this campus.

More landscaping work over the summer has made the row look better than it has in at least a decade. Following ATG's lead, Pike and Lambda Chi have both made their houses look respectable, which will help them and the University in dealing with Amherst town people. Long-time residents have a legitimate beef with a main road through town looking like a landfill on Saturday mornings.

As a post-script to add/drop, there is an obvious solution to the boring, frustrating, bone-crushing lines we all hate on registration day. Why doesn't each department give out tickets, like a butcher shop or a deli? Instead of spending five hours in the history line, students could draw a number and do other errands. If you miss your turn that's your fault, but it's better than disorganized lines where people cut and entire days are wasted, just to find your class was filled long ago.

In other news. . .

And that's the way it is. Or is it? That's what Brent Bozell's Media Research Center wanted to find out when it analyzed the networks' coverage of the Democratic convention. On an objectivity scale of 1 to 40, here are the results: NBC, 28; CNN, 27; ABC, 22; CBS, 10. CBS's basement rating was due to Ed Bradley's comments that Dukakis "comes out strong on defense." Bruce Morton's pro-tax commentary, and Dan Rather's question to Dukakis's mother: "What were his first words as a child?" (Momma, Dadda) and "Did he ever come home at night maybe having one too may beers?" ABC ranked third because of Peter Jenning's comment that today's Democratic Party is "less liberal" than during JFK's time, and Jeff Greenfield's use of Robert Reich as a source without identifying him as a Dukakis advisor. But CNN gets the bonehead award and many have lost first place to NBC because of Linda Ellerbee: she "marred CNN coverage with an incomprehensible commentary on her experience in an OMNI restroom."

Burma riots for democracy

RANGOON, BURMA (AP) — About 1 million people, including government officials and intelligence agents, marched in the capital today demanding democracy. Mobs beheaded three people who tried to poison the protesters.

In a Rangoon suburb, security forces shot and injured 17 people to halt looting.

The capital came to a standstill as uniformed state factory workers, Buddist workers and Catholic nuns, housewives and a group of 200 blind people joined in mass marches and a general strike to demand an end to 26 years of authoritarian rule.

The Soviet Union, China, Japan and other foreign governments evacuated dependents of diplomats and other citizens, diplomats said. An attempt by the United States to do the same was delayed by an airport strike.

Residents said more than 700,000 protesters arched in Mandalay, 350 miles north of Rangoon, and the same number in Monywa, an important trading town 60 miles northwest of Mandalay. About 100,000 marched in Moulmein, the Mon State capital 50 miles southeast of Rangoon.

A Western diplomat in Bangkok said the evacuations were ordered because embassies believed the country was "sliding toward chaos."

Factory workers, Buddhist monks, Catholic nuns, students and teachers marched through the capital to press for an end of repressive, one-party rule. Opposition leaders are demanding an interim government to usher in a multiparty system.

Also participating were employees of the Council of State, the Parliament office, the Bureau of Special Investigation, or civilian intelligence, and uniformed officers of the state-owned shipping line. Most held banners identifying their groups.

The protest was the largest in Burma since August 24, when President Maung Maung lifted martial law in the capital and nationwide curfews.

Today's march was largely peaceful, but sources said a mob beat to death two men and a woman who gave poisoned ice water to several demonstrators, including schoolchildren, and beheaded them.

Demonstrators took the three to a monastery. After they confessed to having been paid $42 each to poison protestors, a waiting mob dragged them outside and beheaded them, hanging their heads on posts at a major junction, it was not clear whether any protesters had been poisoned.

State-run Radio Rangoon said security forces today shot and wounded 17 people as authorities moved to stop a mob of 500 people from looting a cigarette factory in a Rangoon suburb. An army officer was overpowered by mobs and beaten near the capital's Swedagon Pagoda, it said.

The radio said authorities the previous day retrieved from Inya Lake seven bodies of people who had been stabbed and drowned.

Government radio had said Wednesday that security forces had shot dead five people and wounded six to halt widespread looting in the capital the past two days.

$2 million civil rights suit filed

Tennis coach says he'll help end country club discrimination

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The parents of a black teenager who was barred from playing tennis with her high school team at an all-white country club have sued for $2 million.

The Rev. Johnny Whitfield and his wife, Lorene, filed the civil rights suit Wednesday in federal court on behalf of themselves and their daughter Theresa, 16.

In April, Miss Whitfield went with the Earle High School Team to Forrest City for a match at the Forrest City Country Club. The suit contends that the Forrest City high school coach told her she couldn't play at the club.

The girl and her opponent went to a city court to play their match.

Named as defendents are the tennis coaches, Jack Hosford at Earle and Charles Bowlin at Forrest City, the school districts and the private club.

"We hope to send an emphatic message to those people who would do such a thing against a young girl," said the Whitfields' attorney, Ronald Wilson.

Calls Wednesday to Bowlin's home went unanswered. In July he told reporters he was following long-standing Forrest City Country Club rules in barring the black teenager from playing there.

"I really and truly thought the country clubs had the right to tell us who had the right to play," Bowlin said.

He said that he wrote a letter of apology to Miss Whitfield and that he would cooperate with Miss Whitfield and her attorneys "in seeing that this custom and practice is ended immediately."

Dan Dennis, country club president had said that the club has no written policy prohibiting blacks. He did not return a telephone call Wednesday.

There was no answer at either school district's office Wednesday and no listing for Hosford in Earle.

Court rules for trial over King papers

BOSTON (AP) — A Superior Court decision made public yesterday has set the stage for a trial over whether Boston University or Coretta Scott King should control thousands of documents left to the university by Martin Luther King Jr.

In a ruling received Thursday by lawyers handling the case, Suffolk Superior Court Judge John L. Murphy Jr. said a letter by King bequeathingthe papers to BU is not a formal will and therefore King's widow has the right to a trial onher possession claim. Mrs. King launched a legal battle last December to gain control of her husband's papers.

Murphy ruled that BU was the rightful holder of the King papers at the time of King's death in April 1968. But he wrote in an eight-page decision that Mrs. King also has the right to make a claim for the papers.

A key issuein a trial, Murphy said, would be whether Mrs. King's delay of more than 20 years in making a claim strengthens the university's case.

"The factfinder must determine whether the 23-year delay in instituting this action was unreasonable and resulted in some injury or prejudice to BU," the judge wrote in his decision.

He also rejected a counter-claim by BU to ownership of King papers now stored in Atlanta.

The decision was dated Aug. 31 but was received Thursday b attorneys in the case.

"We are very pleased with the decision because it establishes that the counterclaim in Atlanta is thrown out," said James F. O'Brien, an attorney representating Mrs. King. "That's 90 percent of the case behind us in our favor."

O'Brien said he was confident the question of an harm to BU in the delayed filing of the claim can be easily handled. "Boston Unniversity has not been harmed in any way. It's actually benefitted by having the papers all this time," he said.

Mrs. King is on vacation and was not available for comment.

Attorneys for Boston University were out of the office and did not respond to messages left by The Associated Press.

Murphy's decision set no trial date, but O'Brien said he would file a motion shortly requesting a trial on Mrs. King's claim that the papers held by BU should be stored in the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Non-Violent Social Change in Atlanta.

At issue is the collection of 83,000 documents entrusted to BU by King in 1964, four years before he was assassinated in Memphis. Mrs. King filed her suit last December after negotiations over her bid to reclaim the papers broke down.

Mrs.King has been trying for years to get the papers back so she could consolidate them with 100,000 more King documents at the center.

Centralto the case is a one-page, typewritten letter dated July 16, 1964, from King to the BU library.

In the letter, King, who received his doctorate in theology from BU in 1955, wrote, "In the eventof my death, all such materials deposited with the university shall become from that date the absolute property of Boston University."

Missiles destroyed in first step of INF treaty

KARNACK, TEXAS (AP) — Like mammoth Roman candles, rocket motors from two Pershing nuclear missiles were burned today, becoming the first of 867 U.S. missiles to be destroyed under the U.S.-Soviet intermediate-range arms treaty.

Hundreds of people, including Vice President George Bush and a team of Soviet inspectors, watched the static firing, in which the motors were bolted into a concrete and steel structure, ignited and allowed to burn up their fuel.

Bush used binoculars to watch the first 50-second firing at the 8,500-acre Longhorn Army Ammunition Power Plant.

"This is the first elimination of such U.S. missiles under the INF treaty anywhere, worldwide," said Susan Franklin, Washington spokeswoman for the On-site Inspection Agency, established to help carry out the arms treaty.

"It's interesting," said a member of the 12-person Soviet team, Andire V. Krutskikh of Moskow. "We have a lot to do, though."

A small group of Michael Dukakis presidential supporters and other protesters, one of whom carried a sign saying Texans for a Sane Demilitarization, lined the drive to the arsenal's front gate.

"The Soviets watch the motors' static firing to eliminate the rocket propellant in the motor," said Dave Harris of Karnack, a civilian employee with the the U.S. Army's Redstone arsenal.

"We must then physically disable the rocket motor so the motor casing could not be reloaded and reused again," he said. "We're going to do that in a car crusher, squash them in a car crusher."

The Soviets arrived here Wednesday. The treaty allows up to 20 such observers.

Ms. Franklin said that about nine were scheduled to be eliminated in the following at Longhorn, which is 170 miles east of Dallas.

Church leaders urge Catholics to vote pro-life

BOSTON (AP) — The Catholic leaders of Massachusetts issued an election-year statement Thursday urging voters in Democrat Michael Dukakis' home state to use their votes to support family life while opposing abortion and the death penalty.

Cardinal Bernard Law, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, joined the bishops of the state's three other dioceses in encouraging Catholics to vote and in challenging the church's faithful to reflect on the importance of the individual, the family, education, the enviornment, and peace.

"Each member of the human family is created in the image of God," the church leaders wrote. "Each one of us enjoys an innate dignity with a reason for existence extending beyond the limits of this world. This vision demands that every human life be respected from the moment of conception to natural death."

The concern for human life "from the moment of conception" was the most direct reference to abortion, a practice condemned by the Catholic church hierarchy.

The reference to "natural death" was intended to reflect the church's opposition to capital punishment, according to Gerald D'Avolio, the executive director of the Massachusetts Catholic Conference.

Dukakis, a member of the Greek Orthodox Church, opposes abortion personally but supports a woman's right to choose an abortion. In recent campaign appearances around the country, Dukakis has been dogged by small but noisy anti-abortion protests.

Dukakis is opposed to the death penalty under any circumstances. As governor, he has told the Legislature he would veto any legislation restoring capital punishment.

Republican George Bush, an Episcopalian, opposes legalized abortion except in cases of rape, incest, or a pregnancy that threatens the mother's life. Bush has said he would support capital punishment for "drug kingpins."

The bishops' four-page "1988 Political Responsibility Statement" was addressed to all eligible voters and did not recommend a vote for or against any particular candidate.

"We were very careful about that," D'Avolio said. "All this is is an educational document. The thrust is to get out the vote.'

The statement was addressed to "all citizens of good will" and not just Catholics, who make up about half the nearly 6 million population of Massachusetts, according to D'Avolio. Beyond the focus on individual human life, the statement condemned discrimination and urged the fostering of "family life and values."

We appeal to all citizens to participate actively in the life of the nation for the good of society. Most importantly, we urge all to vote, and to vote with thoughtful conviction," the bishops said.

Computers up for MA students

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — A new survey shows the ratio of computers to students in Massachusetts last year was 1-to-25, compared to the 1-to-57 ratio of 1984

"It's pretty much what we have predicted," said Connie Louie, an education technology grant coordinator for the state Department of Education.

"The use of the equipment is very much in keeping with the trend of how other school systems in the nation use them," she said.

A new report of the congressional Office of Technology Assessment showed the national ratio of computers to students is 1-to-30, and even those with access to computers only use them an average of one hour a week.

The federal report said not enough money is being spent to give students easy access to being taught how to use the high-tech methods.

In the Massachusetts survey, 173 of the 337 school districts responding said they provide some type of computer training for teachers.

Also, 205 of the districts said they encouraged teachers to use the computers for preparing lesson plans and doing other professional work.

STRATFORD, N.H. (AP) — Students leave en masse from the high school in Stratford on Wednesday morning to protest the reinstatement of a 17-year-old student who last spring was found with a gun at the school. Parents and students are angry with the decision.

"Schools (in Massachusetts) are still investigating the best use of computers in the instruction process," Susan Foote, the instructional technology coordinator for the state education department, told The Patriot Ledger in Quincy in a story published Wednesday.

"It is a relatively new opportunity. It is constantly evolving. The computer you bought yesterday is improved tomorrow," she said.

Agassi defeats Connors on way to semifinals

NEW YORK (AP) — Andre Agassi, who was born the year Jimmy Connors played his first U.S. open, trounced the five-time champion 6-2, 7-6 (8-6), 6-1 Thursday night to become the youngest male semifinalist in Open history.

Agassi overpowered the sixth seed before an overflow crowd of 20,767 at the National Tennis Center. Agassi, the No 4 seed, will meet top-seeded Ivan Lendl Saturday. Lendl, who is seeking a record fourth straight Open title, downed Derrick Rostagno 6-2, 6-2, 6-0 earlier in the day to reach the semifinals for the seventh straight year.

After dropping the first set, Connors had a chance to get back in the match in the tense second-set tiebreaker.

But after they battled to 6-6, Connors netted an easy forehand and sailed a backhand return long to fall two sets behind. Agassi then broke Connors twice in the final set to win his 23rd match in a row, the longest streak on the men's tour this year.

Agassi's booming ground-strokes kept Connors constantly on the move and struggling to hold serve.

Agassi's booming groundstrokes kept Connors constantly on the move and struggling to hold serve. Meanwhile, Agassi breezed through most of his own service games, winning 16 points in a row on serve in the second set.

Lendl, who struggled in the early rounds, was nearly faultless against Rostagno.

The world's top-ranked player made only 10 unforced errors, held serve every time and had just one double-fault. Lendl only came to the net twice in the entire match, but he won both those points, too.

"He's very tough, very fast, very powerful, very accurate, very solid," said Rostagno, who at No. 52 was the lowest-ranked player left in the tournament. "He's a great player."

NEW YORK (AP) — Andre Agassi (top of page) smiles as he returns a shot to Jimmy Connors (above) in their quarterfinals match in the U.S. open at the National Tennis Center Thursday night. Agassi won the match 6-2, 7-6 (8-6) and 6-1. Agassi will play top-seed Ivan Lendl in the semifinals.

Lendl said he was pleased with his "intensity and concentration" against the former Stanford star.

"It's not that easy to play Derrick," he said. "He plays a lot like (Miloslav) Mecir. He made unbelievable shots and missed easy shots."

Lendl, who lost only one set in each of his last three Opens, has already dropped three sets this year. He played a five-seter in the opening round against Amos Mansdorf and a four-setter against Jakob Hlasek in the fourth round.

Rostagno, a 22-year-old Californian who travels the U.S. circuit in an old bus, couldn't beat Lendl but he did beat the odds by reaching the quarterfinals.

"I played some great tennis here, although maybe not today," he said. "I'm proud of myself. I did my best out there today. I missed, but I kept trying."

The other semifinal pits second-seeded Mats Wilander against Australian Darren Cahill, the lowest-ranked man to reach the Open semis since the computer ranking system was established in 1973.

Cahill was ranked 33rd going into the tournament. Johan Kriek was No. 29 when he lost to Bjorn Borg in the 1980 semifinals.

Wilander, the Australian and French Open champion, is trying to become the first man since Connors in 1974 to win three Grand Slam tournaments in one year.

In the mixed doubles final, Jana Novotna of Czechoslovakia and American Jim Pugh defeated Elizabeth Smylie of Australia and American Patrick McEnroe 7-5, 6-3.

They were unusually serious. . .with the exception of a few pumping fists on key points and Connors hitting two balls into the stands near the end of the match after a fan shouted, "Hey pop, you're a legend."

"Some people says it's good to play five sets because it makes your match tough, and that's true," Lendl said. "On the other hand, if you keep playing five sets you are going to be tired going into the final.

"So you take your pick. Personally, I prefer the easy ones."

Rostagno, who was playing in his first Grand Slam quarterfinal, was philosophical about the defeat.

"If I won it this year, I wouldn't have anything to look forward to next year," he said.

Is Red machine to be roseless?

CINCINNATI (AP) — Reds owner Marge Schott said yesterday if Pete Rose is to return as manager next season, it will have to be under a one year contract.

Rose is in the final year of a three-year deal that pays him about $500,000 per season. Schott, reached by phone by the Cincinnati Post at the baseball owners' meetings in Montreal, said Rose might have to accept a 'different type of contract' if he wants to manage the Reds during the 1989 season.

"We're not doing any more multi-year contracts," Schott told the papers. "They've been done with a lot of players and haven't worked out."

Asked if she thinks the length of Rose's contract might be a problem in negotiations Schott said, "I'm sure Pete will do what he feels is right. He's a very honest person with himself."

Schott said a report that Rose will have to take a pay cut 'is not word in stone' But she wouldn't rule it out, either.

"If you're going to be the highest paid manager in baseball, you expect a championship," she said. "If you're not doing the best job, you shouldn't be paid as high as the guy who's running the company that's going full tilt."

Acording to Schott, the subject of Rose's return won't be addressed until after the season. She said general manager Murray Cook and others in the Reds hierarchy will have input in the decision.

"I'm the boss," Schott said. "But I'm not so much the boss when it comes to baseball people."

Despite bad trip, Sox in lead

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox return to Fenway Park on Friday following a losing road trip that still saw them take over the lead in the American League East.

The Red Sox, who completed a 6-7 road trip Wednesday night with a 4-3 loss to the Baltimore Orioles, begin a 10-game home stand with three games against the Cleveland Indians.

The Red Sox began the 13-game road trip two games back of the Detroit Tigers in the American League East. They ended it with a one-game lead after taking two-of-three in Seattle, suffering a three-game sweep in Oakland, splitting four games with the California Angels and taking two-of-three in Baltimore.

"When we left, we were saying that what we wanted to do was stay two games back and we'd be okay," said Jody Reed.

The Indians come to Fenway Park having won two out of three from the Yankees.

Mike Boddicker, 10-15, was scheduled to start against Rich Yett, 8-4, Friday night.

The Red Sox lost for the first time after entering the ninth inning with a lead when the Orioles rallied for two runs Wednesday night, erasing a 3-2 lead. Boston had a 71-0 record when leading into the ninth inning.

The inning began with reliever Lee Smith striking out Brady Anderson. But he felt a pain in his neck and gave a single to Jim Traber before leaving the game.

"There was a little stiffness," Smith said. "It's something like a pinched nerve and there's not a lot I can do more than a hot shower to loosen things up. Hopefully, I can do some things on the day off to maybe relax the nerve."

The Minutemen will be missing the services of All-Yankee Conference offensive guard Mike Barrette, who is expected to miss eight weeks while recovering from a foot operation.

"Anthony Guidice, who is playing for Barrette, was playing only OK in the first couple of weeks but he has progressed a lot," Reid said.

Barrette's injury is one of several UMass faces, including senior fullback Ted Barrett (pulled hamstring) and senior defensive tackle Dan Charron (groin injury).

"We have some key injuries," Reid said. "But at least people didn't get hurt two days ago. At least we've had an opportunity to prepare."

Kevin Murphy, a fullback last season, has switched to defensive tackle and has done the job so far. Noseguard Joe Cullen and tackle Steve Brothers join him on the line.

The linebackers will be Drew Comeau, John McKeown, George Karelas, and Matt Tulley. McKeown, a second team All-Conference selection last season, was second on the team with 117 tackles despite missing two games with a foot injury.

Cornerbacks Garrick Amos and Jerome Bledsoe, and safeties Pat Doran and Scott Alia round out the defense.

Senior Dave Palazzi will be the starting quarterback. Last season Palazzi threw for 1868 yards and 10 touchdowns.

One of his targets may be freshman wide receiver Lamar Newsome, who had a very impressive preseason.

The top rusher for the Minutemen, senior tailback Kevin Smellie (587 yards, 2 touchdowns in '87) is back to lead the running game.

Smellie picked up 61 yards on the ground when the teams met last year, as the Black Bears came to Amherst and beat the Minutemen 31-14.

UMass was within 21-14, but a fumble and a Maine field goal put the game out of reach.

Like this year, the teams met in the season opener.

"The good thing is that in this conference, any team can beat any other team," Reid said. "Whoever wins this game builds momentum. We're going to have to gear up, play good football, and hope they make some mistakes.

"It's time for all the [preseason] talk to end. It's time to shut up and play football."

the opposition, but also the dreaded injury plague. "Now we're trying to beat the injury bug," Rudy said.

Among the wounded are sophomore forward Sue Gaudette, who is a question mark for this weekend's action. Gaudette has rolled her ankle every day in practice, according to Rudy.

"She's a fine player. We can't afford to lose our key players," Rudy said.

Also hampered is senior forward Beth Roundtree, bothered by shin splints so bad that she could barely walk, Rudy said.

The Minutewomen still have questions all around the board entering opening weekend, uncommon for a team coming off a Final Four appearance, but likely for a team with a new coach.

"I still have lots of questions to be answered. But we're going to do well," Rudy said. "If some of the stuff we practiced will stick under pressure, we'll be alright.

Sidelines: UMass is ranked fourth in the national preseason poll. North Carolina, defending national champion, is on top again with a veteran team. UMass plays them on Oct. 15, one of four Top 10 teams on its schedule.

The Lady Tarheels were a unanimous choice for the top spot, gathering a perfect 300 points. The University of California-Berkeley, a participant in last year's Final Four, is second with 263. Next is Colorado College, whom the Minutewomen play on Oct. 30, with 261, followed by UMass with 253. North Carolina State, another UM opponent (Oct. 16), is fifth with 242.

The University of Connecticut, William and Mary, Central Florida, the University of California-Santa Barbara and Wisconsin-Madison round out the Top 10 . . . UMass' game against Providence College, scheduled for Sept. 20 at Boyden, was cancelled. There was no immediate reason for this, except that maybe the Lady Friars remembered the 8-0 pasting they suffered at the hands of the Minutewomen last year. The game won't be rescheduled.

"We have to beat a team of that caliber if we have any intention of beating a conference team," she said.

As of now, the Minutewomen are still rough around the edges, they are hoping to get the rust off before Sunday's game.

"This is a very different time of year. It's a period of transition at the beginning. Things aren't pretty but we'll keep trying," Ford said.

The key, she said, is communication on offense and defense.

"If there is conflict or a lack of communication, we will be in trouble," she said.

The responsibility of running the offense for the Minutewomen falls on the shoulders of junior setter Karen Ferguson. Nearly every UMass possession will be keyed by Ferguson, a second-team All-Conference selection last year.

Fortunately, Ferguson will be surrounded with four seniors and two other veterans for most of the afternoon.

"We don't have the leadership problems we had last year," Ford said.

Things to look for on Sunday will be 1) How well the Minutewomen play above the net despite their lack of height, and 2) How far UMass' experienced nucleus can carry the team.

"What we lack in height, we make up for in ability," Ford said. The Minutewomen will rely on seniors Julie Smith, Juliet Primer, and Barbara Meehan to present the "big block" up front for UMass.

Primer and Smith moved from the outside hitter position to the middle, while Meehan's powerful offense will cement UMass' attack. "What I want to see is intensity for long periods of time. Intensity with skill and we should be successful," Ford said. "I'll be happy if I just see basic execution. No lapses."

undefeated teams and teams that certainly didn't lose very often and there were a lot of people who were upperclassmen when I was a freshman that certainly inspired me to keep going and Dottie was one of the real motivating forces in terms of me going into coaching."

In nine years Hixon has ran up a 154-41-14 record, and has earned trips to the NCAA Tournament in each of the last seven seasons. They are 8-2-1 mark against the Indians.

Zenaty's record at Springfield is 179-90-35. She will be beginning her 19th season as coach of the Indians.

Tommorrow's game is the home opener for the Minutewomen, who finished 1987 as the No. 3 team in the nation. Springfield finished up last year 6-9-1 but that one tie was a 1-1 game in Springfield against UMass.

"It's an important game because I know we are competing against one of the best-coached teams in the country," Hixon said. "Even though they may not have the talent that a lot of other programs have they certainly are well-coached and that's how they stay competitive."

UMass set to kick off season tomorrow

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

There will be no beating around the bush for the University of Massachusetts football team.

In tomorrow's season opener, the Minutemen's opponent will represent perhaps the toughest competition of the season.

And how UMass fares against the University of Maine, last season's Yankee Conference co-champions, will have a big part in setting the stage for the entire season.

"You never want to open the season against a conference champion," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "And you'd rather not open against a conference opponent at all. We'll find out quickly what's in store for us."

The Minutemen will be trying to improve on last year's 3-8 record in which they finished a disappointing 2-5 and tied for fifth place in the Yankee Conference.

Maine, on the other hand, was 8-3 and went 6-1 in the conference to share the title with the University of Richmond.

The Black Bears' main weapon is quarterback Mike Buck, last year's YanCon offensive Player-of-the-Year. Buck, a junior, last year threw for 2987 yards and 23 touchdowns.

"Buck is a guy with a 150-cannon arm," Reid said.

But although Buck is the main concern for UMass, he is by no means the only one.

"We can't focus on one player," Reid said. "B.U. tried to concentrate on stopping Buck last year and Maine got 200 plus yards rushing. They have balance."

The good news for the Minutemen is that Maine's standout wide receiver, Sergio Hebra, graduated last year.

But senior tailback Doug Dorsey, who battled injuries last season, is healthy and will lead the running game.

"We have to watch out for Buck," Reid said. "But they also have Dorsey and Carl Smith, who runs a 4.38 [in the 40-yard dash]. Smith has the best speed on the field.

"And their line is absolutely massive. I thought we were big but they outweigh us by 10 pounds per man."

UMass soccer teams open play this weekend

• Men play host to Black Bears Sunday

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

There is no more time to iron out the wrinkles. For coach Jim Rudy and the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team, the real thing is here.

The Minutewomen begin their season this weekend when they travel to Kingston, R.I. for the University of Rhode Island Tournament. Hopefully, it'll be the beginning of another journey to the Final Four, but of course, it's too early to tell.

Rudy has had his chance to feel the waters in his new job. He is ready to get started.

"I'm not scared of the challenge, but realistically, it's going to take a while," Rudy said.

Rudy still isn't sure about the teams in New England. Having just arrived from the University of Central Florida, he hasn't had much chance to scout or play against northern teams.

"It'll take the first four games until I get a feel for the competition up here," Rudy said. "There are fewer weaker teams here than in the south."

The start will be a critical testing period for the Minutewomen, one that may predict the future of this team as far as this season goes.

UMass opens the tournament by facing the host WRams of Rhode Island at 11 a.m. tomorrow. As terms of experience, the Minutewomen are dominant, but Rudy isn't going out on any limbs.

"Rhode Island looks like a pretty young team," Rudy said. "I expect them to be very young, but enthusiastic. We're going to have to beat that enthusiasm."

Indeed, the WRams are a youthful squad. They have just one junior and no seniors, but Rudy feels that, despite the relative low ages, they have a deep squad.

In the second game, it will be Rutgers against George Washington. The winners will meet in the championship game Sunday at 2 p.m., preceded by the consolation game at noon.

Rudy feels that both Rutgers and George Washington have their best teams ever.

"Rutgers' entire team is back except for two. They basically have their whole lineup returning except the goaltender," Rudy said. "George Washington has already tied George Mason. That's big stuff."

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, they will start the season not only battling

At the opening of a season it is critical for any team to get off to a good jump. But when it is playing nearly half its home games in the first week of the season, the need for a good start becomes glaring.

For the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, the next week will be one of great importance, as the Minutemen begin their season with a stretch of four straight games at home. The first one is Sunday, as the Minutemen open their season against the University of Maine in a 1 p.m. game at Boyden Field.

The Minutemen have been preparing themselves for the season, yesterday scrimmaging crosstown-rival Amherst College, and according to assistant coach John Martin, they are ready.

This game will also be the season-opener for the Black Bears coach Jim Dyer, who come to Amherst with a not-so-experienced cast. Only nine of the team's 28 roster players are juniors and seniors.

However, one of them is the ever-dangerous Ben Spike, a physical forward who can wreak havoc on the field. Also returning is junior netminder Todd Brennan and senior back Brett MacDonald.

In last season's game between these two teams, the Minutemen traveled to the Arctic wastelands of Orono and took a 2-0 win home. With this year's game at home, the Minutemen won't have to face the prospects of traveling six hours by bus or playing in less-than-desirable conditions.

That should be a big advantage for the Minutemen, one that they hope will get this season off on the right foot.

Sidelines: The teams are set for the annual UMass Tournament, which will be held Oct. 1-2 at Boyden Field. Siena College joins Boston University and West Virginia University to round out the four-team field.

One of the interesting twists in this year's tourney, according to Martin, is the participation of West Virginia, a rival team of UMass' in the Atlantic 10 Conference. Although the two teams are in separate divisions within the conference, Martin says that the game may be used in the event that a tiebreaker is needed for the Atlantic 10 Tournament . . . . The Minutemen also play the University of New Hampshire, and then host a pair of Atlantic 10 games against Temple University and St. Joseph's University on this crucial four-game homestand.

Field hockey to face rival Springfield Chiefs

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Every season, University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon hopes that Springfield College loses one game, but only one game.

Hixon is a graduate of Springfield and when the Minutewomen faceoff with the Indians at 1 p.m. tomorrow at Totman Field, she will be matching wits with her old mentor, Dottie Zenaty.

A member of the United States National team as a freshman, Hixon was a four-year-starter for Zenaty from 1969-73. During those years, Springfield was a major force in women's sports.

"At that time they were truly a powerhouse in field hockey and actually all women's sports," Hixon said. "Even though it was a small school, it was predominantly a school where people were majoring in some type of teacher education, so there were a lot of physical education majors, a lot of people involved in the P.E. related field and without scholarships during that time, that's where a lot of the athletes or the people interested in continuing athletics migrated to."

Upon graduating from Springfield, Hixon enrolled as a graduate student and served as an assistant to Zenaty for two years. In 1979 she was named head coach of the Minutewomen, a Division I team.

Springfield had prepared Hixon very well.

"There was a great tradition of winning," Hixon said." Springfield always had

Volleyball plays host to U. of Hartford Sunday

The season begins: First there are few kills, followed by the digs, until one team finally falls at the mercy of the stronger team.

No, it's not a Stephen King novel. It's volleyball season.

On Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m., Totman Gymnasium will be the scene of multiple kills, digs, and blocks when the University of Massachusetts volleyball team plays the University of Hartford in the first match of the 1988 season.

"Hartford is very competitive," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "It should be a very good first match."

The Minutewomen, who went 21-9 last season, will be playing their only afternoon game of the season against a team they beat fairly handily last year.

UMass downed the Hawks in four sets in 1987 year and, although Ford said she hasn't scouted this year's Hartford squad, she said UMass controls its own destiny.

"I'm more concerned with UMass than with Hartford," she said, adding that Hartford is a team that the Minutewomen should be able to beat.

Closed meeting launches controversy

• Budgets Committee Chairman asked to resign by SGA leaders

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association leaders have asked Budgets Committee Chairman Gil Penchina to resign because he misused student monies this summer to prove it could be done.

In a statement Penchina handed out during Thursday's Coordinating Committee meeting, he admitted to superfluous spending of the Student Activitiees Trust Fund.

"This summer I intiated a test of the safegaurds (sic) and security that SAO (Student Activities Office) has on all RSO (Registered Student Organizations) accounts within the Student Activities Trust Fund," the statement reads.

Penchina said he got away with putting extra hours on his pay slip, purchasing unneeded office supplies, and spending student monies for personal use of a photocopier.

Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate Robert Fadel, who was conducting the meeting, requested the committee go into executive session, during which no minutes were taken.

Friday, Fadel issued a statement that he claims reflects what the committee discussed while in executive session.

The statement reads: "A certain level of trust, commitment, and communication is expected of any elected official and a member of a cooperative team.

"Mr. Penchina betrayed the dedicated working relationship established between the students and staff of the Student Activities Division [sic], who have made numerous allowances for his own questionable behavior since his election as Budgets Chair."

As to whether he plans to resign, Penchina said, "I'm going to wait and see what develops."

• Collegian to seek investigation on possible breach of state law

FROM STAFF REPORTS

A Student Government Association committee may have broken the "open meeting law" Thursday night when members agreed to continue a meeting behind closed doors to discuss the actions of a committee member.

The move prompted the Massachusetts Daily Collegian to prepare a request for an investigation by the district attorney's office.

However, the "open meeting law" may not apply to student governmental bodies, according to a local attorney.

The Coordinating Committee, which undertakes the duties of the entire student government during summer and winter vacations, went into executive session during the meeting apparently to discuss requesting the resignation of Budgets Committee Chairman Gil Penchina.

During the meeting, Penchina handed out copies of a statement calling the student government's and Student Activities Office's system of checking misuse of funds by student government members inadequate.

Because Penchina's statement refers to student monies, the Collegian feels any debate about the statement must be held in the students' eye. One way to keep the debate in the students' eye is by reporting it in the newspaper.

"The newspaper's role is to report to the public what those elected by the public are doing," said Pedro Pereira, Collegian editor in chief. "If allegations of misconduct by elected officials exist, then the public has the right to know about them, even if they are untrue or unflattering to those officials."

UMass starts year with a bang

Upsets defending conference co-champion Maine, 45-42

The University of Massachusetts football team showed in three hours Saturday afternoon just how much it has learned in the past 12 months.

The Minutemen showed the 12,458 people in attendance at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium that last year's 3-8 season is, indeed, a thing of the past by beating the University of Maine, last year's co-Yankee Conference champion, 45-42, in the season opener for both teams.

"I've never been more proud of a team," an emotional UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "These guys played their guts out. They never quit."

UMass opened up a 38-21 third quarter lead on Maine, which is ranked No. 14 in the nation in Division 1-AA, then watched the Black Bears score three straight times in the fourth quarter to take a 42-38 lead.

But senior quarterback Dave Palazzi found Dimitri Yavis for an eight-yard touchdown with 2:32 left, and free safety Pat Doran intercepted a Mike Buck pass on Maine's next drive to clinch it.

In the game, Palazzi threw for 211 yards and three touchdowns, and rushed for another touchdown himself. Senior tailback Kevin Smellie led UMass with 74 yards rushing.

"We started to sit on the lead a little," Palazzi said. "But I knew as long as we had time, we could come back."

After the Black Bears took the lead, UMass made the most of its remaining time when an 11-yard return by David Mitchell of a short kickoff gave the Minutemen the ball at their 45-yard line with 4:31 left.

Mitchell gained 6 on the ground before Palazzi hooked up with flanker Mike Trifari for gains of 6 and 31 yards to bring the ball to the Maine 12.

Palazzi took the ball to the 4 on a keeper play, then found Yavis cutting across the goal line. Silvio Bonvini added the extra point.

The Black Bears, led by junior quarterback Mike Buck, marched to the UMass 37. But on a fourth-down play, Doran stepped in front of a pass intended for Jeff Knox to give the Minutemen possession and their first win of the new season.

Budgets chair misuses funds to prove point

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Budgets Committee Chairman Gil Penchina claims his motive for misusing Student Activity Trust Fund monies was to show student leaders and administrators do not check how the money is spent.

In a statement he distributed at the Coordinating Committee meeting Thursday, he said he spent money out of a frozen account, purchased superfluous electric office supplies, photocopied personal items with SGA money, and submitted pay slips with extra hours.

"It's just the point that nobody checks," Penchina said. "People can go around doing little things, pilfering."

Penchina said he decided to run a series of tests when his first pay slip as a University of Massachusetts student employee slipped through the system with excessive hours.

He said he mistakenly requested the number of hours that he had actually worked, 20, instead of his allotted 15. He said he later realized no matter how many hours students invest in their position, they are entitled to collect only their allotted amount.

After Penchina left a meeting during which student leaders gathered to approve a statement calling for his resignation, his eyes watered as he said, "The statement accuses me of all kinds of things. What I did may not have been kosher but they and everyone else knew that I did it to fix the system."

Student government leaders issued a statement saying, "For him to conduct his 'test' of the system without informing another official of his actions casts serious doubt as to his intentions and with whom his loyalties lie."

The statement states Penchina is in a position of responsibility that demands trust, committment, and communication.

SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins said she did not have any record of Penchina being paid for more than 15 hours, even though he showed a pay stub that was more than 15 hours at a rate of $3.65 per hour.

Filkins also could not find where in the records it shows the SGA Budgets Committee revenue account had been used after it had been frozen on May 5, 1988.

Filkins said she would not call Penchina's purchase of an electric stapler and lamp for the Budgets Committee office superfluous. Instead, she called it not essential.

"I wouldn't exactly approve of it, but it certainly isn't an outlandish expenditure," she said, adding that it was not like buying a stereo or track lighting for the office.

The photocopying was questioned when former Attorney General Bill Collins told Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice that Collective Copies, a business in Amherst

NOW pledges support to Dukakis

Mass. president says Duke's policies will benefit women

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

There will be more than one victory in 1988 if Democratic presidential candidate Gov. Michael Dukakis is elected, according to the National Organization for Women.

"If he is elected, more positive things will happen for women," said Jennifer Jackman, Massachusetts president for NOW.

"Dukakis is pro-choice, pro-pay equity, and pro-ERA," said Jackman. "These are issues that will mobilize voters. His position is terrific."

Jackman said if Republican nominee Vice President George Bush is elected, he will block legislation and progress for women and womens' rights.

"If George Bush is elected, it will be an unmitigated disaster for women's rights. I think that the policies of the Reagan administration that have hurt women in the past will be continued," she said.

Jackman said that women have been predominantly hurt by increased military expenditures and decreased child care, health and welfare budgets.

"Bush is against abortion and lesbian and gay rights. He is part of an administration that called pay equity 'the craziest thing since looney tunes,'" she said.

Jackman said Dukakis is a longtime advocate of the Lesbian and Gay civil rights bill, but said NOW is unhappy with his position on foster care.

"It prohibits lesbian and gay men and women from becoming foster parents," she said.

The national child care issue has prompted both Dukakis and Bush to introduce specific proposals to meet public demand.

Dukakis says he plans to utilize federal aid to improve and expand current child care systems. The $2.5 billion plan will be administered through the Act for Better Child Care (ABC bill).

Jackman said that NOW is in favor of the bill but that $2.5 billion is a paltry sum compared to the $40 billion that is really needed to supplement national child care.

"The ABC bill is by no means perfect, it's not really talking about expanding," she said. NOW advocates more public child care and is concerned that there are no standards in the bill to insure that the education provided by child care centers are free of unconstitutional biases.

"A lot of churches have day care centers. That means sending government money to churches. It's not a separation of church and state, it's unconstitutional," she said.

Bush's proposal provides a tax credit of up to $1,000 per child for taxpaying and non-taxpaying American families.

Jackman said Bush's plan is even more inefficient than the ABC bill, particularly in regard to the poor.

"First, you receive money at the end of the year. It's a financially unreasonable way to do it. It doesn't produce more child care and the money offered is insufficient," she said.

"The Republicans are trying to enhance their image among women, but there is no substance in Bush that will appeal to women voters," she said.

Dukakis discusses defense policy

BOSTON (AP) - Michael Dukakis huddled with Democratic congressional leaders yesterday to discuss defense policy in advance of a week of campaign appearances designed to shore up his image on national security and foreign policy issues.

The Democratic presidential nominee acknowledged after the meeting that he had some differences with leading defense spokesmen of his party but promised a consensus-oriented approach to setting Pentagon priorities.

"What you see here is an example of the way we're going to make national security policy beginning in January 1989," Dukakis told reporters after his session with nearly a dozen members of Congress. "With a president and a Congress that work together."

Dukakis and the congressmen denounced President Reagan for his veto of a defense authorization bill that won broad, bipartisan support in Congress and was endorsed by several ranking administration officials, terming it a political move to give Republican nominee George Bush fodder for his attempts to characterize Dukakis as naive on defense issues.

"The vice president's political team said let's play political football with the nation's defense," said former presidential candidate Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee. 'I think it's outrageous."

Dukakis also criticized the president for his handling of the Pentagon procurement scandal, accusing the administration of "searching for scapegoats instead of solutions" to influence peddling and exchange of confidential information at the Pentagon.

Among those at Dukakis' side were Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia and Rep. Les Aspin of Wisconsin, Chairmen oif the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, respectively.

Nunn, Aspin and several others at the meeting agreed that Bush has been successful in painting Dukakis as weak on defense but said they expected the Democratic nominee to successfully counter those efforts with his statements on defense issues this week.

"Governor Dukakis understands the president has to make tough decisions," Nunn said. "You can't have a strategy on defense based on a cash register."

"There has not been management," Nunn said of Reagan administration defense policy. "There has not been a strategy."

While crediting Reagan for trying to improve the nation's defense, Nunn said national security has not improved as much as it should have considering the billions spent during the Reagan years.

"We have not made improvements commensurate with the money that has been spent," the Georgia senator said.

"I don't want a lot of hype. I just want something I can count on."

Tailgaters at UMass an endangered species

By LISA ELIAS
Collegian Correspondent

Tailgaters at University of Massachusetts football games are now a dying breed.

The Minutemen opened the season against the University of Maine Saturday, and the tailgate area that used to be scattered with barbecue grills, beer bottles, and tailgaters was barren, except for a few die-hards.

Because of the University's alcohol policy, no drinking is permitted at outdoor events under the school's jurisdiction. This includes football games.

UMass Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson made it clear if violators chose not to respond to reminders from faculty and staff not to drink, then uniformed police would be summoned.

"I think some will challenge it. Change almost guarantees resistance," Hilson said.

Though the administration has not taken away the right to tailgate, they have taken away the right to drink in public. For many students football, tailgating, and drinking go hand in hand.

"It's awful because it's the attraction of the game. You want to come out here, drink, and relax," said 23 year old Jerry Brault. "This place used to be packed. Now it's like a morgue."

Dave Roach, 21, said, "It takes a lot of the fun out of it. A lot less people will show up because of it. It's kind of sad."

Daryl Miller, 24, was one of the few people tailgating until he was told by a policeman to dump his beer and either go in the game or leave. Miller said he was surprised they were polite and didn't harass him.

Lieutenant Stephen Warren said, "There really hasn't been any trouble. It's a nice crowd."

Brian Johnson, 21, said, "It's ridiculous. If you're 21 you should be able to drink. Not as many people will show up now. We have to do something until we get a good football team."

Compromise reached for Republican Club

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

A compromise that will keep the University of Massachusetts Republican Club out of office space until at least November was reached Friday in a meeting that ended the long and bitter struggle between the club and the Board of Governors

The compromise moves the Minuteman newspaper office to room 322 of the Student Union building, also the office of Students for Bush. The Central American Students Association and Concepto Latino will move to SU 415, the former space of the Republican Club and the current home of the Minuteman.

The meeting was held Friday afternoon in the Student Activities Office. Eric Nakajima, chairperson of the BOG, Irene Carew, director of SAO, Bill Collins, editor in chief of the Minuteman, and Bill Harris, director of the Campus Center were among those in attendance at the meeting.

While no guarantees have been made, there are strong indications the Republican Club will get a new office when space is reallocated by the BOG.

"I'm perfectly happy and I think its best for everyone involved." Stephen Lutz, president of the Republican Club said of the move. He said he was very confident of getting space in the near future.

Nakajima said of Lutz' confidence, "They made a fair assessment of the situation."

Said Lutz: "Everyone walked out of the meeting not saying 'who's a winner and who's a loser.' We just walked out of there really happy. We didn't get our space, but we didn't get evicted, either," Lutz said.

"I feel very strongly that we're moving in a positive direction and that we can look forward to a community of responsible student-citizens," Nakajima said of the arrangement.

The Republican Club can reapply for space now. Available spaces are allotted in November, Nakajima said.

The Minuteman will now occupy space with Students for Bush, which is working on the George Bush presidential campaign. Collins agreed many members of the Republican Club are also members of Students for Bush, and will be able to use the space.

Nakajima said no consideration had been given to the dual-membership issue and it was not a factor in the decision. "We're doing this to do the right thing," Nakajima said.

Dean of Students to retire after nearly 40 years

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

After almost 40 years of service, the first dean of students at the University of Massachusetts, William F. Field, is set to retire in two weeks.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson recently praised Field for his accomplishments during his years at the University.

"On behalf of the entire campus community I wish to thank Dean Field for his dedicated service to students, their families and the institution itself," he said. "His leadership has been marked by a commitment to high ideals, perception and sensitivity, buoyed by his sense of challenges."

Field first arrived on campus as a psychology teacher four years after the school became a University when the enrollment was approximately 3,000.

Leaving the University with the enrollment at approximately 25,000, he is looking forward to retiring.

"There has to be a time to move on," he said. "Now I'm going to get a chance to do things I've never had time for in the past."

Some of those things are taking advantage of the cultural aspects the University offers, such as the Fine Arts Center and the library. Field is also interested in the natural sciences, the outdoors and wildlife.

In his 27 years as dean of students, Field has worked on and developed numerous projects and programs. Some of those include the initial organizational structure for the Admission and Records Office, the Placement and Financial Aid Office, University Health Services, and Student Activities.

He said the job is too diverse to describe precisely in two or three sentences, but essentially involves finding things in the system that are not working and trying to fix them.

"Basically you look at the whole picture and then beg, borrow, control and do anything else you can think of to try to improve things," he said.

Field said he will not give his successor any advice, because if he thought there should be a set way of getting things done, he would not be retiring.

"After 27 years, it's time for new, fresh ideas," he said. The diversity of UMass is one of its greatest strengths, but there is room for improvement in the system, he said.

> "Basically you look at the whole picture and then beg, borrow, control and do anything else you can think of to try to improve things."

"The diversity of the students is tremendous," he said. "And the faculty has such different interests, it's just incredible."

As for improvements, he thinks the school should try harder to bringing faculty and students together and decreasing the numerous rules and regulations it has.

"The University is always fighting a battle with rules and regulations," he said. "Our books of regulations are too long, and we have to work on that. As for relations, the more contact between students and faculty, the better for everyone."

Although he is happy about retiring, Field will not be completely out of the picture and expects to stay in touch with the happenings at the University.

"I'll expect to miss it," he said. After a moment of thought, he laughed as he added, "I am going to visit, but I'm not going to hang around."

Field was first elected Amherst town meeting moderator in 1971 and will continue to hold the post. He was awarded the Chancellor's Medal in 1983, named Honorary Alumnus in 1981, and the Amherst Chamber of Commerce has presented him the Janet and Winthrop Dakin Award for community service.

After retiring, Field will undertake a Student Affairs archive project, where he will try to organize numerous documents and records of different student organizations, and their past accomplishments.

Field was born in Los Angeles in 1922, attended public schools in Philadelphia, and served during World War II in the Pacific as an Army Air Force sergeant. He graduated from West Chester State College in Pennsylvania in 1947, earned a M.Ed. degree from Temple University, and in 1951 received a Ph.D. in psychology-education from the University of Maryland.

Field's wife Helen is simultaneously retiring this week as the chairperson of the Social Science Division and assistant professor of psychology at Holyoke Community College. They plan to do a lot of traveling in the future, but have no intentions of moving out of the Amherst area.

"After living here for so long, we wouldn't know what to do anywhere else," Field said.

Gladys Rodriguez, who has worked in the Dean of Students Office since 1976, has been named acting dean and will begin her interim appointment October 1. She has worked as a clerk, a secretary, and an assistant to Field before being named an assistant dean in 1987.

Madson said he hopes to complete a search and appoint a new dean of students by January 1.

Parents hide drug abuse from kids

FRAMINGHAM (AP) - As a college student in the early 1970s, Sally smoked marijuana a couple of times a week. She couldn't go to a party without being offered a joint. Casual use of the illegal drug didn't bother her a bit, or so she thought.

Then a 4-year-old at a party asked, "When are we going to get high?" A marijuana cigarette was passed and the child took a puff. "It really just did a number on my stomach. I remember thinking, 'Boy, I'm not comfortable with that at all,'" said the 39-year-old Shrewsbury mother. The incident made her feel more certain than ever that drugs are bad for children.

Sally may have been a child of the 60s, but she's not always as open with her children as she'd like to be. She and her 44-year-old husband haven't told their three teenagers that they still use marijuana occasionally. They fear that their children may turn against them if they knew, because of the strong anti-drug messages they get from school and television.

Parents are probably less successful at hiding drug use from their children than they think they are.

-Susan Morley

Interviews with sociologists studying drug use in America as well as MetroWest parents who have been social drug users since the 60s and 70s reveal a clash of generations reminiscent of the 60s. This time, though, the roles are reversed.

In the 1960s, teen-agers hid their drug use from disapproving parents. Today, many of the few parents who still use drugs hide it from their children. All of the parents interviewed about their illegal drug use for this article agreed to speak only on the condition that they not be identified.

"It's important to look at why parents are hiding their drug use. How come there's this incredible double standard?" said Susan Morley, director of substance abuse services at the social service agency Together Inc., in Marlboro.

Parents are probably less successful at hiding drug use from their children that they think they are, she said. One of the major ways children learn about drugs is by watching role models. Parents who try to hide their drug use are setting a bad example, she said.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse estimates that six million to eight million people use cocaine regularly. It also estimates that 20 million to 30 million people use marijuana regularly. The vast majority of marijuana users are under age 25, according to Henry Tischler, a sociology professor at Framingham State College.

It's hard to determine how many of these illegal drug users are parents. Some sociologists studying the issue sense the number is small and on the decline. Dr. Eric Voth of the National Federation of Parents for a Drug Free Youth disagrees. Judging from his experience working at a drug abuse clinic in Kansas, he believes the number of parents using drugs is on the rise.

When Craig Reinarman started studying cocaine use in 1974, it was fairly common for parents to use drugs in front of their children. With today's heightened anti-drug mood, this practice is less common, said the Northeastern University sociology professor.

Parental fears that their drug use will be discovered by their children may have been heightened two years ago when a girl in California turned in her parents for using illegal drugs. If that trend was going to take off, it probably would have done so by now, Reinarman said. If the anti-drug fever progresses, such incidents may become more of a risk for parents or a benefit for society, depending on your perspective, said Bruce MacMurray, assistant professor of sociology at Northeastern.

When staff from Together Inc. of Marlboro talk to area students about drug abuse, many children say they are worried about their parents' drug use, Morley said. They are afraid to do anything about it, though, without the support of their parents, she said.

Kathleen Trainor, a substance abuse counselor in Framingham, said children often feel they, like their parents, can use drugs socially without getting into trouble. Yet children often get into more serious trouble with drugs faster than adults, she said.

In some cases, parents who use illegal drugs are not anxious for their children to quit their own habit, Trainor said. For example, parents may have to ban alcohol from their house to aid the recovery of their 17-year-old alcoholic, even though the parents don't have a drinking problem.

The same can be true with illegal drugs, she said. Trainor has seen families where parents don't want their children to quit drugs because the children are their supplier. "It's easier for a kid to cop drugs than an executive," she said.

Anti-drug education in the schools and on television appears to be having a powerful effect on parents as well as children. Rather than face questions from their children about illegal drug use, many parents are either hiding it from their children or quitting.

Two editors hired for black affairs

Thomas Mambande and Joseph Hill have been named co-black affairs editors of the Collegian.

Mambandes and Hill were hired over the weekend and plan to start organizing the desk today.

Mambandes, a junior economics major from Philadelphia, was the former news editor at Nummo News, a monthly black students publication. He also hosts New World Theatre, a talk show on WMUA.

Hill, a sophomore chemistry and sociology major from Uxbridge, was a sports editor for his high school yearbook.

Both Hill and Mambande were active in the New Africa House occupation last semester. The six-day protest came in response to a series of alleged racial incidents on campus.

Orefice said she noticed the posters on the walls of the Student Union and told Filkins, who requested Collective Copies to forward the copying receipts. The receipts showed Penchina had bought 150 copies in blue and 300 copies in golden rod paper. The receipts, however, do not say the copies were used for directions to a party.

"Do you see how blatant you have to be to get caught?" Penchina said.

SGA leaders say they had no idea Penchina's actions were a test.

On-campus housing continues to be a problem at UMass

By JOYCE COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

On-campus housing continues to be difficult to get for some students at the University of Massachusetts and the Whitmore Administration Building was a haven last week for students who were denied housing.

Even though the incoming freshman class has remained at around 4,000, according to the Director of Housing, Dr. Joseph Zannini, there still seems to be a shortage of housing services available.

"There are new incoming students as well as returning students, and only so much space is available," Assistant Director of Housing Larry Moneta said. "If too many returning students decide they want on-campus housing, then we've got a dilemma."

Approximately 125 to 150 students did not show up to get their housing, so those students temporarily being put in the Campus Center Hotel were moved to fill those "no show" spaces. "We're only allowed to use the Campus Center Hotel for a couple of weeks, so when spaces become available , we moved the students out of the hotel first," Moneta said.

Some lounges in the residence halls have been converted to house even more students because there presently is not room for them in regular rooms. These swing spaces are temporary in most buildings, but in others they will stay in swing spaces throughout the semester, he said. "I don't see this as being a problem; I see the swing spaces and the lottery as a solution," Moneta said.

Moneta says the lounges will not be eliminated, nor will even half of them become swing spaces in most of the residence halls. "The worst part about living in a swing space is knowing that you may have to move sometime during the year," he said.

Eric Ossing is a senior who is temporarily being housed in a swing space in Gorman Residence Hall. He just finished a one-year exchange program in Japan, and when he got back last Monday, he learned he had no housing, even though his bill has been cleared.

Before students can leave the school on exchange programs, they must sign housing contracts and fill out housing preference forms. According to Ossing however, the housing office said they could not find any record of him doing so.

Consequently, he had to stay in a friend's dorm until Friday when Whitmore attacked junior and senior housing problems. "Now that I'm in a swing space in Gorman, I don't want to move out although I know I'll have no choice when they have a permanent residence for me," Ossing said.

In addition to the problem of students having no housing, others like Debbie Irwin and Ann Wiede stood in line on Friday because they wanted to move from the dorm they were in to be with friends in another. "The housing office told us we were no different than the 800 students who wanted to do the same thing and that there was nothing the housing office could do about it," Irwin said.

Not all of the students waiting in line Friday were upset about their dilemma. Some were sympathetic to the housing office's problem. "I would imagine that these things happen, especially when there are so many students," junior Greg Rutheny said. He is presently living in a swing space in Central Residential Area.

A swap board and a lottery are alternatives for students who would like to move from their current room or residence hall.

Nothing could have prepared me for the first few moments with my roommate. "Anique"—nothing more, just "Anique"—was her name. Change the "A" to a "U" and you've got a description.

When they asked what type of roommate I wanted, I didn't know that I needed to be more specific than non-smoker. I could swear I saw a picture of Anique on a postcard I got from London. Within five minutes, I found out that she was an Art History student, into the Psychedelic Furs, and totally, totally against the domestication of animals.

I was just about ready to put in for a room transfer when she reached into her leather backpack, pulled out a can of Suisse Mocha and offered me a cup. Okay, I decided I'd keep an open mind.

As we sipped our cups, I found out that Anique and I share the same fondness for Cary Grant movies, the same disdain for wine coolers, and the same ex-boyfriend. That gave us plenty to talk about.

Lester is a victim of academic oppression

Academic freedom is dead and buried at the University of Massachusetts. That is evident from the manner in which Julius Lester was transferred out of the W.E.B. DuBois African-American Studies Department just on the basis of his free expression of thoughts and conclusions.

Julius Lester was a tenured professor at the Afro-American department for 17 years. In that time he received all three of the University's most prestigious faculty awards. Lester, who had converted to Judaism six years ago, became a center of controversy within the Afro-American department after the publication of his latest book, Lovesong: Becoming a Jew. He was officially transferred out of that department in June, and welcomed as a new faculty member at Judaic Studies this fall.

In Lovesong Lester criticized the late James Baldwin for condemning a black reporter for revealing the Jesse Jackson 'Hymietown' remark in 1984. The assumption being, as expressed by Baldwin and later supported by all 15 Afro-Am faculty members [except, of course, Lester], that a black American is black first, and American second.

While this would appear to be a ridiculously dangerous approach in regards to race relations in this country, it does not in the least compare to the incisiveness of the Lester expulsion.

The Julius Lester story is one which exemplifies the prevalent black opinion in academic and other circles that black debate has a limit. That limit is reached when a black "leader" is criticized by another black.

Black leaders are rarely ever substantively criticized by the "white" media, as they fear being targeted as racist. A good example is the way Dan Quayle was more harrangued in 10 minutes by the establishment media than Jesse Jackson was in 10 years.

Stuart Gottlieb

But when a black tries to criticize a "popular" black, then that free thinker is automatically targeted as an Uncle Tom, or in Julius Lester's situation the faculty of the Afro-American department referred to him as "the anti-Negro Negro." Another case in point is Roy Innis's [National Director of CORE; the Congress of Racial Equality] criticism of the controversial Reverend Al Sharpton.

Innis has been shunned from many black circles due to his independent beliefs. Likewise, Lester has been shunned.

Lester is far from an Uncle Tom. He has evolved intellectually in academia and life experiences to formulate his own opinions on many subjects. Those opinions are safeguarded in the First Amendment to the Constitution, and according to our Founding Fathers should never be persecutionary. Is academia not the very place to preach such a philosophy?

So why the hypocrisy?

The answer lies in the above mentioned approach to the new black ideological fundamentalism. The white liberal establishment brandishes it with the assumption that opposition to affirmative action quota's is equitable to being a racist.

And the up-and-coming 'black struggle' hierarchy; the Jesse Jackson's, the James Baldwin's, and the Chester Davis' [UMass Afro-American department chairman] have closed the debate of what is in the best interest of not only the black community of America, but to all Americans. They did this, and continue to do so, because other viewpoints go against what they believe to be the correct viewpoint. Now that's pervertedly un-American.

Alexis de Tocqueville, the prophetic French theorist of the 19th century, warned the new-found American democrats about the danger present in the "tyrannical" views of the majority. Our First Amendment has controlled such a tyranny.

The black "intellectual" view which places blackness over democracy is the most formidable threat to the democratic fibers of this country since its foundation.

Pressed Quayle

"The conservative movement was dead," the national media sang. Movement conservatives had lost the Republican Party's nomination to an eastern-liberal-establishment type – George Bush.

True, Bush is no movement conservative. But the national news caretakers were wrong. Conservatives came to New Orleans and didn't leave empty-handed.

W. Greg Rothman

When the 1988 Republican platform was released, conservatives were happy. Plus, they got a vice-presidential candidate representing the opposite of the eastern-liberal-establishment type, Senator Dan Quayle.

It was one situation the national press had not prepared to deal with.

Bush had selected for his vice president a man who has led the fight for the Strategic Defense Initiative; consistently voted pro-life, pro-family, pro-defense, and who had strongly supported the freedom fighters in Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Angola and Mozambique.

The press isn't a graceful loser, and they were not going to take this lying down. Almost as soon as Bush announced his selection, the media began 'Quayle Season.'

In the Aug. 25 edition of the Washington Times, it was reported CBS had stopped answering their phones due to the number of negative calls about their coverage of Quayle. Despite the public's displeasure, the media continued to viciously attack Bush's running mate.

But Senator Quayle is a fine American. He served his country in the National Guard, the same Guard that has served the American people since the Revolutionary War. Yet, the national press continues to insult the Guard and Quayle's military record.

The national press has also had a field da with rumors about a Quayle and lobbyist Paula Parkinson relationship. It's a sad day for journalism when rumors about a U.S. Senator and a harlot become the lead story on the national news.

The American public has a right to know everything about its leaders — everything. The press has a duty to give the public all they can discover, as long as it's truth. Such is not the case with the media's record on Dan Quayle.

The national media's anger was fueled by the bitter disappointment the liberal wing of the Republican party felt when they realized they had been left out on Bourbon St. As the they and moderates in the party publicly complained about the choice, the press began speculating about a Quayle demise.

The delegates didn't think Quayle should be taken off the ticket; the people didn't think serving the National Guard was dishonorable; the public didn't believe stories coming from the lips of a Playboy bunny. It was the press who wanted Dan Quayle off of the ticke — not the people.

The Bush-Quayle ticket will survive the onslaught by the keepers of the news, but the trust between the media and the people may not. Americans have become weary of the national press. That's not the people's problem, it's the media's.

Tales from the Rerun Zone

You know, coming back to this three network town may be disheartening, especially if you lived in Boston or New York, and had a working television.

Others of us were not as lucky this summer, and for us three stations is a Godsend.

Welcome to the world of one channel: WQTV, Channel 68 Boston.

Sylvia Gaudette

"You may not know you have a hearing problem because you take your hearing aid wherever you go. Now there's Miracle Ear."

"She said, 'Will that be bleu cheese, Thousand Island, or vinaigrette.' "

"He said, 'Two streets up and take a right.' "

"He said, 'Speak now or forever hold your piece.' "

"What'd he say? What'd he say?"

It became second nature to me — Channel 68 was the only station my T.V. picked up this summer. I admit, though, I could finagle the antennae and pick up The Dating Game at 11:30 on an unknown station with a wide green line down the middle.

The green line was contestant number two.

While all America was watching Jesse Jackson's riveting convention speech — in fact, while all America was in 1988, I was in the time capsule of Star Trek, Kojak and Bonanza.

I can't tell you about the speech, but I could write a dissertation about that night's Eight O'Clock Movie on 68 where this British guy keeps dreaming that he has woken up from a dream he has had about waking up from a dream.

That's the cutting edge that I as a journalist should be on, right?

At first it was just an annoyance: "Damn, I can't believe what lousy reception this TV gets."

Forget that nothing we could see was filmed after 1977; forget that Channel 68 fails to have even one news update during any 24-hour period. I can quote you entire passages from Scarecrow and Mrs. King — after all, what makes better cocktail party conversation?

There was one sliver of entertainment in this otherwise Nielsen-appauling situation. When others left during commercial breaks, I stayed.

My roommates and I were amazed at the endless combinations of the same six commercials. We were thrilled when a new one broke the monotony.

After the Miracle Ear commercials, hours of thrilling entertainment were spent learning about the magic that is Popeet.

What a great space-saving product! It shrinks to the size of leftovers! "Keeps salad green, soda bubbly, and it stores so small that it's like having an extra kitchen cabinet."

Who needs to be aware of pending war after the USS Vincennes blew up an Iranian jet? The unparalleled suspense of whether the magician could pour all that milk into the Popeet held by his lovely and talented, sequined-covered assistant was enough gripping drama for me this summer.

meetings of governmental bodies, save some exceptions, must be open to the public. Chapter 30A of the General Laws of Massachusetts states that before a governmental body goes into executive session, which means the public is not allowed to be present, the presiding officer must conduct a roll call vote and announce a specific reason.

Speaker of the Senate Robert Fadel, who presided at Thursday's meeting, failed to take a roll call vote, although he contends all votes for and against going into executive session were recorded. Fadel also contends the committee was indeed in executive session.

Michael Pill, an Amherst attorney, said the law may not apply to the student government because the committee is not created under state legislation.

However, he said, if the law indeed applies, he feels the Collegian is right in asserting the committee may have violated the law.

"The presiding officer must cite the purpose for executive session, and state whether the agency will reconvene after the executive session," the law states.

According to Collegian reporter Erin Abbey, who covered the meeting and was barred from attending the executive session, Fadel did not announce the specific reason for calling for an executive session.

Chapter 30A cites the following as some of the reasons for going into executive session:

- "To discuss the reputation and character, physical condition or mental health rather than the professional competence of an individual." The individual may request the meeting to remain open to the public.
- "To consider the discipline or dismissal of, or to hear complaints or charges brought against a public officer, employee, staff member, or individual." The individual involved may request the meeting to be open.
- "To discuss strategy with respect to collective bargaining or litigation if an open meeting may have a detrimental effect on the bargaining or litigation position of the governmental body.
- "To consider allegations of criminal misconduct."

Abbey's notes show that one committee member challenged the need for an executive session, to which Fadel replied: "I think there are things that need to be discussed."

Fadel later told Pereira: "I said, 'We are discussing an internal problem.'" Fadel added he did not recall the exact words he used at the time.

In addition, Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, who is not a committee member, was allowed into the room where the executive session took place.

Steve Samolewicz, director of public rights at the district attorney's office in Northampton, said he could not comment on whether the committee violated the law because he is not familiar with the situation.

Samolewicz said he needs a written statement relating the situation before he can comment or conduct an investigation.

The Collegian prepared a statement over the weekend that asks Samolewicz to determine whether the committee indeed violated the law. And if so, the Collegian requested, what can be done to ensure it does not happen again.

Said Pereira: "Judging from a statement the committee later released, it seems they were discussing calling for Penchina's resignation, in which case Fadel was required by law to state that specific reason.

"Penchina had the right to request an open meeting and he was never given the chance to exercise that right because Fadel never announced a specific reason for going into executive session," Pereira said.

When pressed to produce minutes from the executive session, Fadel said no minutes were taken. He did, however, produce a statement signed by those present at the executive session that condemns Penchina for violating the trust of student government officials.

Book shines with images

Full Spectrum
Edited by Lou Aronica and Shawna McCarthy
Bantam Spectra Books, 483 pages.

Take a look out the window sometime after a rainstorm, when the sun is shining through the remaining thunderclouds. Perhaps the water, still lingering in the sun's bright path, has caught the beams and divided them into the multi-colored vision we call a rainbow. And if you take notice of the colors, it may become obvious that some shine more brightly than others.

The intent of Bantam editors Lou Aronica and Shawna McCarthy in Full Spectrum was to capture the shades of fiction that color the fields of contemporary Science Fiction and Fantasy; and though some of the short stories contained in this anthology shine more brightly than others, the resulting volume of twenty-five fictional works succeeds admirably.

Perhaps the most important contributors to this volume are those who have made no name for themselves in the past: five of the stories are the first published works of the author, and they are among the brightest stories offered.

Among these new authors, the offerings of Aaron Schutz, Ronnie Seagren and Charles Oberndorf, contain much to think about and digest. Their thematic work questions human knowledge of God, and of man's own capabilities by examining moral and social questions facing us from the past and present, or awaiting us in the future.

In addition to the works of these previously unpublished authors, the works of the more seasoned authors offer some striking images, though two were obviously the most stirring.

Lewis Shiner's "Oz" is not much longer than this article, yet it's power of statement could not have been achieved through a longer piece of prose. After one reading the image is striking, but the story is even more meaningful after a second and third reading. If you have no intention of purchasing the book pick it up off the shelf and read this story; it will take five minutes.

As a final offering, look through James Morrow's "Bible Stories for Adults, No. 17: The Deluge." This slightly sacreligious, and possibly offensive version of the Bible's Great Flood creates a not improbable variation on the story, which raises the intrigue of our past.

If you thrive on short fiction, Full Spectrum is a solid offering.

Cube exhibit opens

Twenty-four artists, 24 Cubes. That is the order of the day at the new exhibition at the University Gallery at the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts.

The exhibition that opened yesterday and that will run until Oct. 19 was organized by New York artist Saul Ostrow and represents a broad survey of sculptures from the 1960s to today, focusing on cubes.

Cubes were first prominent during the 1960's, when artists such as Donald Judd and Sol LeWitt broke from the abstract expressionist painting and assemblage scultpure and began using the cube as an artistic format. The cube was regarded as a neutral entity to which a variety of artistic intentions and viewer perceptions could be brought. The work in this exhibiton shows a variety of sculptural developments over two decades by the artists. Among artists at this show is Stephen Antonakos, whose 1965 "Blue Box" features neon lighting to create an enveloping effect. Gary Kuehn's "Double Cube" concentrates on the truth of appearances. Sol LeWitt held that ideas should be logically manifested and using modular grids and cubic units, makes

UMass Juggling Club promises a ball

By GINA COLETTI
Collegian Correspondent

"We can teach anyone to juggle in a half hour or less."

That is the challege put forth by Bruce Wisenburn, co-president of the University of Massachusetts Juggling club.

The club which meets every Friday from 3 to 6 p.m. held its first meeting this past week by the Campus Pond, where they usually can be found performing (or in case of bad weather they move indoors to the Campus Center).

A student government-supported organization, the Juggling Club was first formed in 1985 by Wisenburn and Adam Levine and today has 20 to 30 members. They have performed at various functions, most recently the 125th anniversary of the University.

Along with juggling balls, the club teaches one ball manipulation, balancing, fire-swallowing, torch and club juggling.

The club also focuses on two Chinese juggling techniques, the diabolo — a yo-yo like device that is balanced on a string between two sticks — and devil sticks — the practice of balancing one stick with two others sticks.

Juggling, a talent usually considered a solo endeavor, can also involve others, as in the game of combat. Combat is a big favorite of the club and involves juggling and knocking clubs out of the other players hands — all while still remain juggling. Out of group of ten (or more) the last to remain juggling wins.

Several of the club members do street performing in Boston and San Fransico. (Don't expect to see them on the streets in Amherst and Northampton — it's considered begging).

The Juggling Club is holding an exhibition on Saturday, Nov. 12th at the Campus Center as a part of Veterans Day weekend convention. An expected two hundred jugglers will attend from various parts of the country. The show is free for UMass students and a small fee for non-university students.

The first meetings are free and then $3 to join for a semester.

The UMass Arts Council

Founded in 1966, the Arts Council fosters excellence and scope in the arts on campus. The Arts Council's activities include:

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THE ARTS
Through two granting programs, the Arts Council supports RSOs, campus galleries, the Residential Arts Program, and other UMass groups that present arts events and programs.

ARTS INFORMATION
Every two weeks, the Arts Council publishes the Arts Calendar, a listing of arts activities on the Five College campuses. The calendar is available at galleries, box offices, and information centers at all five colleges.

ARTS MANAGEMENT TRAINING
The Arts Council supports arts management courses and internships for UMass students through a program offered by the Arts Extension Service, 545-2360. On Sept. 27 and Oct. 4 the Student Activities Office and the Arts Council will offer two workshops in program design and management, grantswriting, etc.

PUBLIC ART
The Arts Council is actively involved in expanding the public art collection at UMass. The Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library, an exhibition space for UMass faculty and students, will host an opening reception on September 20. The Council has commissioned landscape architects and artists to redesign the Student Union Plaza and Metawampe Lawn. A memorial to our first sitting-president, William Smith Clark, was designed by a student and is expected to be built this coming summer. This year students are being invited to design a commemorative garden to Helen Curtis Cole, the University's first and only Dean of Women. The garden is proposed for a site between Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

The Arts Council is funded primarily by a portion of the Arts Fee. The Council includes undergraduate and graduate students, alumni, faculty, and professional staff representatives.

Metal: the musicians of the maligned music

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

We're the loudest fucking band in the world and we're here to kick some ass! Manowar at The Channel in Boston; 1987

While statements like this one may not get the band Manowar on American Bandstand, perhaps the growing audience for speed and thrash metal will lead to something more than the post midnight slot that this unique musical genre occupies on MTV. Like so many of their power metal brethren, Manowar fights the constant battle for public acceptance, airplay, and groupies above the age of consent. Juvenile attitudes and cheesy metal cliches aside, musically, the new wave of long haired screaming maniacs has something genuine to offer.

Ask your average twenty-one year old music fan to name a few metal bands, and you'll likely hear the names Judas Priest, Black Sabbath, Motley Crue, Iron Maiden, and Deep Purple (Musical historian types will mention Led Zeppelin as the original metal band, but what do they know anyway?). However, hunt down the black leather and studded wristbands at the local junior high school, and you'll be introduced to Slayer, Testament, Overkill, Megadeth, Grim Reaper, Anthrax, and Metallica.

This breed of metal is a step beyond the traditional power chord feast. Classically influenced guitar hotshots tear through riff after riff. Vocals are fast, angry, and distorted. And above all, everything's loud as hell.

Power metal has an attitude as rebellious as anything we've seen since the Sex Pistols. Similarly, hardcore bands like Black Flag, D.R.I, and Slapshot employ the same techniques and social outlook. The audiences, however, take on a different look. While it would be no surprise to find some aging grad students at a Circle Jerks show, metal bands draw primarily pubescents. Unfortunately for club owners, all-ages shows just don't do the numbers at the bar, and you can only charge so much for a ticket.

Whether or not you call it "kidstuff," the level of musical ability within the best speed metal bands is quite high.

Metallica, the only speed band to have broken through to the mainstream with the billing on this past summer's Monsters of Rock tour, boasts the work of guitarist Kirk Hammett. Hammett is a disciple of six string demon Joe Satriani, teacher extraordinaire, and featured guitarist on last year's Mick Jagger tour. The intricate approach Hammett takes toward his guitar lines provide a melodic aspect not normally associated with heavy metal.

Lyrically, women, booze, sex, sex with women while drinking booze, and the like, remain the favorite topics of interest. However, much in the same way that Iron Maiden grabbed attention with their poignant social commentary with Two Minutes To Midnight, Megadeth has offered a different view on life.

Lyricist Dave Mustaine's dark picture of the world we live in provides a wealth of thoughtful songwriting material, and understandably, Megadeth stands as one of the more controversial metal bands.

Regardless of the countless opponents to the metal philosophy, it's obvious that this style of music is here to stay. For all the criticism it may get, metal, in one form or another, has survived through a host of fleeting fads.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES — People in Amherst Common yesterday protest the dictatorship in Chile.

Shooting victim afraid to leave home

BOSTON (AP) — After being shot by a passing motorist as he sat outside his home in the Roxbury neighborhood last week, 11-year-old Sterling Garvin says he'll think twice before venturing out of his apartment building again.

"I don't think I'm gonna go out on my steps," Sterling said Sunday, dressed in a blue shirt and faded red shorts that exposed the bandage covering his thigh wound.

"The only time I'm gonna sit on my steps is if there's a lot of people out there I know. . . and I'm talking about a lot," he said.

But his mother, Jean, and his uncle, Felix Thompson, are seeking a more permanent solution to the threat of violence: After living in the same four rooms for six years, the Sterling family is looking for a new home.

"It's been the worst time of my life," said Mrs. Garvin, who emigrated from Trinidad 14 yeas ago. "We had a fire above us a few months ago and my son got shot, so I think it's time to move out."

"You're not going to live around here no more," Thompson, also from Trinidad, told his nephew. "I don't want people shooting at you no more."

Sterling and two friends were talking after dinner Thursday when a red car with tinted windows pulled up to the curb and fired a single gun shot.

"I heard somebody say, 'Wow!' Then I see a hole in my pants," Sterling said. But he said he only felt a pinch and didn't believe he had been shot.

"I kept saying I didn't get shot 'cause it didn't hurt," he said.

He was taken to Boston City Hospital, where doctors bandaged his left thigh but decided to not remove the .22 caliber bullet.

"They ain't gonna take it out 'cause if they did take it out it'd damage my leg," Sterling explained as he rested on his mother's bed, fingering the hospital bracelet he still wears and a gold chain around his neck.

His mother and several cousins said they believed he was either shot randomly or was mistaken for someone else.

"There's a lot of crazy people out there," Sterling said. But added, "I think it's a mistake. I don't start trouble around here with nobody."

His friend and mentor, Maurice Thomas, 21, said the youth rarely hangs around his neighborhood because they frequently hang around with another youth in the apartment basement in another neighborhood.

The three are the "R&B Exclusive," a rap band featuring Sterling and Thomas "scratching" with records and one singer. The trio has performed in showcases at the Apollo Theater in New York and plans to cut a record.

"This is supposed to be a bad area and I didn't want anything to happen to him," said Thomas, who isn't a relative. "I just took him under my wing and now he's my best friend. I don't go nowhere without him."

Sterling is the latest victim in a string of stabbings and shootings in the city that Boston police have blamed, in part, on a rise in street gangs, dozens of which they say are trafficking in drugs and guns.

Lawmakers urge government to save Cape Cod shacks

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rustic shacks that dot remote Cape Cod dunes and have served as inspiration for solace-seeking artists and authors such as playwright Eugene O'Neill must be saved, three lawmakers are urging the Reagan administration.

The National Park Service has maintained that the 18 dune shacks do not have any architectural significance and therefore should not be placed on the National Register of Historic Places. The service plans to tear the cottages down.

But Rep. Gerry E. Studds, a Democrat who represents the Cape, and Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and John F. Kerry, D-Mass., are joining local and state officials in a fight to save the primitive huts from destruction

"These buildings represent a unique aspect of American history and culture that should be preserved for future generations," the lawmakers said in a letter last week to William Penn Mott, director of the National Park Service. "We believe the dune shacks are indeed historic structures."

The shacks, nestled in a two-mile strip of dunes in Truro and Provincetown at the far end of the Cape, were originally built by the Coast Guard as shelters from the coastal weather. They became part of the National Park Service's domain in 1961 when President Kennedy created the Cape Cod National Seashore.

The cottages' preservation has become an emotional issue in the last few years because one-time leases signed when the national seashore was created, usually for the owner's lifetime or 25 years, are expiring.

Preservationists want the federal government to declare the shacks historic treasures and allow a private organization to maintain them for public use.

The future of the dune shacks looked bleak when a study commissioned by the Park service found that the primitive structures do not qualify for National Register protection.

That study, critics charge, focused on the buildings' lack of architectural importance and ignored historic and cultural significance that some proponents compare to Walden Pond, the home of Henry David Thoreau.

But a wave of local support for preserving the shacks has grown, and the Massachusetts Historical Commission is expected to vote Wednesday to urge federal officials to save the buildings.

The Park Service has left the door open for change, and said it will issue an opinion at Wednesday's meeting in Boston.

Boston raid nets eleven

BOSTON (AP) - Boston police used sledge hammers and a battering ram to break down the doors of two apartments in a Roxbury public housing project Saturday, arresting 11 suspected members of a youth gang and seizing about $8,000 worth of cocaine.

Seventeen officers took part in the raid at the Orchard Park housing complex, which the gang allegedly had used as a base for drug trafficking, police said.

Citing unnamed sources, The Boston Sunday Herald reported that gangs have taken over apartments in various Boston housing projects, forcing some residents out of their homes at gunpoint and paying others up to $100 a day to keep silent.

New York youths have helped to form the gangs, recruiting about three dozen local youths for drug running, The Herald said.

Gang violence has become a hot issue in Boston since the slaying last month of 11-year-old Tiffany Moore, who police said was an innocent bystander in a fight between groups of street toughs involved in drug dealing.

Shawn Drumgold, 23, and Terrence Taylor, 23, both of Boston, were arrested in connection with the killing.

Some Roxbury community leaders have called on police to step up patrols and take other steps to clean out the gangs. Deputy Police Superintendent Gerard O'Rourke said Friday that although gang activity is on the rise in Boston, it is not comparable to other cities, like Los Angeles.

"It's certainly not getting out of hand," O'Rourke said. "The situation that's going on in Boston is very manageable. I certainly wouldn't put the city of Boston on a par with Detroit, Los Angeles, or Chicago."

An estimated 50 residents of the Roxbury and Dorchester sections took part in a march Saturday to protest recent slayings and shootings in their neighborhoods and to ask for more police on the streets.

Others in the group asked for more athletic leagues in the parks to give young people an outlet and interest.

Capt. Bobbie Johnson, commander of the Mattapan police station, told the group that more police have been added to patrols and they are making arrests energetically.

City Councilor Charles C. Yancey told the groups a hearing on crime issues is set for Sept. 27 by the city Public Safety Commission at the station.

"They're always a tough team for us, they're a good team with some good players," said Gettler of Maine.

In mentioning good players', Gettler must have the Maine backfield in mind. UMass' revamped breakaway attack was held at arm's length for most of the afternoon, as Brennan and fullbacks Fred Franzini and Robert Thompson broke up Minuteman breakaways all afternoon.

"I'd like to see us finish our chances," said Gettler. "In the first half we were unlucky not to get a goal."

For UMass forward's Steve Cesnek and Carl Hanks, the first half was indeed a frustrating affair. Both fell just shy on repeated one-on-one opportunities, and Hanks especially spent plenty of time face-to-face with the Maine netminder, with nothing to show for it.

With the wind at their backs in the second half, the UMass offense maintained more consistent pressure on the defense, finally breaking through late in the contest.

The UMass defense, meanwhile, was solid from start to finish.

The most spectacular defensive play of the afternoon came with 18 minutes remaining, when Grizbuk lunged out of the net after a crossed shot, leaving Maine forward Todd Sniper with a loose ball and an open goal. Senior fullback Bret Blanton stepped in to block the freebie and kill the best scoring opportunity the Black Bears would have.

"I thought defensive play would be the key, and I thought we did a pretty good job," praised Gettler. From among the strong team defensive effort, Gettler singled out senior back Michael McCormick for individual accolades. "McCormick did well organizing and running the show," said Gettler.

Free Kicks: . . . Keeping with opening day tradition, the Minuteman starting lineup carried red carnations out to the midfield circle during the pregame introductions . . . faces in the crowd included Andy Bing, late of the Boston Bolts, and Amherst women's track coach Kalekeni Banda . . . the UMass non-roster reserves sported maroon shirts that featured a Spuds McKenzie look-alike on the front and the motto "never kick a mutt" on the back . . . next up, the Minutmen will host the University of New Hamphire, Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. on Boyden Field.

Junior Laura Brown broke up senior Cindy Cox's shutout at 22:14 of the half. Cox is a transfer from Purdue University who is battling with Sue Desmond for goalie duty.

Cox looked strong, recording seven saves but she really was not tested that often. Though Cox has the upper hand right now, the position is still up for grabs.

"They're still competing. I think Cindy, she's a little bigger than Sue, a little more aggressive," Hixon said. "I think she has a slight edge but it doesn't rule out anybody for the whole season. We're pretty much game by game. I think both of them can contribute."

Another transfer student, sophomore Kerri Fagan from Southeastern Massachusetts University, helped make Cox's job a very easy one.

"Kerri Fagan I thought did an excellent job at centerback," Hixon said. "She came through with the ball alot, she was tough, strong, got us out of trouble."

At 25:25 of the second half, junior Mara Frattasio added the fourth goal of the game for the Minutewomen on a day in which they finished with 41 shots.

"Scoring four goals was good but I felt that we had many more opportunities that we should be capitalizing on," Hixon said." I think its concentration on their part and that will come."

UMass kept applying the pressure, McEnroe sparked UMass to a 5-0 lead with five powerful serves. But then the Minutewomen got complacent and Hartford took full advantage. The Hawks caught the Minutewomen and tied the score at 6-6.

The Minutewomen needed another spark to jumpstart a temporarily stalled offense. They got it.

Senior Ann Marie Larese served two aces while carrying UMass to a 12-6 lead.

Now, it was a matter of time. Fittingly, UMass ended the match on a Sullivan serve.

Sullivan, starting in her first match as a Minutewomen earned her job yesterday with her hustling performance.

"She looked good out of season," Ford said.

The only down-side for UMass was in front of the net, which may be a sore spot for the Minutewomen this year. They registered only three blocks in all four sets.

"We went up so early," that Hartford was hitting over the top of the block, Ford said. "We also have to improve our passing and cleaning up the offense."

Forwards Beth Roundtree, a senior, and sophomore Sue Gaudette both shrugged off leg injuries and turned in big performances in yesterday's win. Gaudette scored the game-winning goal, with Roundtree picking up an assist. It came 35 minutes into the contest, as freshman Michelle Woodside broke in from the right and nailed a groundball to Roundtree, who touch-passed to Gaudette in stride for a rocket past the prone Rutgers goalkeeper.

"Beth had a good game for us with and without the ball," Rudy said. "She created a lot of space for us."

And Woodside, from Springfield, Va. made a big impression in her first collegiate exposure, assisting on both goals in yesterday's game, as well as picking up her first goal in Saturday's win.

Her quick throw-in to Michelle Powers set up the final goal against Rutgers. Powers, whom Rudy has said would make an impact this year, found Sue Cooper in the penalty area with a short pass at the 68 minute mark.

"Those goals were to of the best collegiate goals I've ever seen involving more than two players," Rudy said.

UMass outshot the Lady Knights, 18-7. Each team had a shot hit the post, and senior netminder Carla DeSantis made a sterling stop on a penalty shot to preserve her second shutout of the year.

On Saturday, with Rhode Island not even coming close to mustering an attack on DeSantis, Woodside's goal was more than enough. It was set up by Cathy Cassady, who crossed the ball from the right side. Powers made a fake, and Woodside picked it up and put it in the left corner.

Cassady would get another assist as Powers took a long pass on the right side and raced past a defender to put the ball in the upper left side.

"Cathy made to very creative, deceptive assists," Rudy said.

Rudy is happy with his team's 2-0 start, but still feels there is some improvement to be made.

"We need to work on finishing our flanks. We missed some lay-ups in close, so we need to improve our finishing," Rudy said.

Sox knuckle under to Indians, 4-2

BOSTON (AP) — Tom Candiotti was not the kind of pitcher Boston manager Joe Morgan wanted the Red Sox to face.

With relief help from Doug Jones, Candiotti helped the Indians salvage the windup of a three-game series with a 4-2 victory over the Red Sox Sunday at Fenway Park.

"He's the type of pitcher who can give you trouble even if you're hot," Morgan said. "He has that knuckler and he gets it over pretty good."

Candiotti, 12-8, allowed five hits and two runs for seven innings, earning the victory on Willie Upshaw's tie-breaking single in the eighth. Jones came in and pitched two shutout innings for his 32nd save in 38 chances.

It was only the second loss in seven games for the American League East-leading red Spox.

"Candy's really pitched well since he's come off the disabled list (Aug. 19)," Cleveland manager Doc Edwards said. "When Candy's on his game, I don't care who he's pitching against. He's capable of beating anybody."

"Since hurting my shoulder, I've been going back and forth between being a knuckleball pitcher and a conventional pitcher," Candiotti said. "I surprised them a little today by starting out throwing a lot of fastballs. Once they began catching up, I went to the knuckleball, my best pitch."

Pinch-hitter Terry Francona led off the eighth by beating out a single to the left of the mound off reliever Bob Stanley, 6-4.

Paul Zuvella ran for Francona and took second on Alfonso Jiminez's sacrifice. Lee Smith replaced Stanley and Upshaw grounded a single through the hole to the right, scoring Zuvella.

The Indians added an insurance run in the ninth when Joe Carter tripled and Mel Hall singled.

Boston starter Wes Gardner allowed only four hits in six-plus innings, but two were solo homers by Dave Clark and Joe Carter.

Gardner, who beat Baltimore last Tuesday in his first complete game since he was in Class A in 1982, retired the first 14 batters in order.

Then, with two out in the fifth, Clark broke up a no-hit bid for the second day in a row by hitting a 2-1 pitch into the Cleveland bullpen in right for his third homer. Clark spoiled Roger Clemens' no-hit bid with a looping single with one out in the eighth on Saturday.

Clark's homer tied the score 1-1, but the deadlock didn't last long as Rich Gedman led off the sixth by hitting a 3-1 pitch a dozen rows into the bleachers beyond the Boston bullpen for his eighth homer.

Minutemen open new season, top Maine 45-42

"Last season is on the back of some people's minds," Palazzi said. "We're not going to let that happen again."

"We're a different team," said senior linebacker John McKeown, who was game captain along with Nick Salmon.

"We're a run-around team and we use finesse, quickness, and emotion."

The Minutemen needed all of those against Maine, which had the YanCon title and Buck, the YanCon Offensive Player-of-the-Year.

Buck lived up to his billing, throwing for 312 yards and three touchdowns.

And redshirt freshman Carl Smith galloped for 206 yards and two touchdowns on 15 carries, and added 43 yards and another touchdown receiving.

"I kept reading how Maine was working on its running game," Reid said. "And I thought they were trying to fool us, so we prepared more for the pass. Then they ran Smith down our throats. But I'll give him 7000 yards as long as we win."

The numbers the Black Bears rolled up (25 first downs, 643 total yards) magnify the importance of the win for UMass.

The Minutemen's statistics were not as impressive, but they used big plays to their advantage.

Jerome Bledsoe started things off by returning a punt 92 yards down the right sideline for a touchdown to give UMass a 7-0 lead.

Buck found Matt Swinson for a 39-yard touchdowns pass to tie it.

Then one of the biggest plays of the game occurred, although it won't show up in any scoring summary.

Facing a fourth down and eight from the Maine 31, UMass elected to try for the first down.

Palazzi kept the ball on a draw play and picked up 23 yards to set up a first and goal from the 8.

"We've practiced that situation," Reid said. "We decided we're going to be aggressive and we wanted the ball in Dave's hands."

UMass couldn't push the ball in but Bonvini hit a 20-yard field goal to make it 10-7.

There were other impact plays for UMass, like the 56-yard Palazzi-to-Steve Olson touchdown pass that put the Minutemen up 17-14.

After a Palazzi rushing touchdown, there was a 36-yard strike to Chip Mitchell to make it 31-21, and on the first play after Marco Gabrielli's kickoff, Vaughn Williams picked off a Buck pass and ran it in 26 yards to expand the UMass lead to 38-21.

But that's when Buck went to work and the size advantage of the Maine offensive line began to show.

"They're big and they move quick," McKeown said. "They're a strong quick line."

The Black Bears scored on their first three possessions of the fourth quarter to make it close.

"We knew how good they were," Reid said. "I told our guys last year UConn led Maine 28-10 and Maine came back to win 38-28."

But that was last year. This year Maine may be a different team. The Minutemen showed Saturday that they are surely a different team.

Better, and definitely different.

Extra points: The Minutemen received some good news with regards to their injured players.

Senior defensive tackle Dan Charron, who was expected to be out one to three weeks with a groin injury, was able to play yesterday and in the third quarter batted down a Buck pass and caught Smith for a one-yard loss.

Offensive tackle Mike Barrette, who was expected to be out for eight weeks while recovering from a foot operation, could be back in four weeks.

Field hockey runs over Springfield in opener, 4-1

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

After watching Saturday's 4-1 drubbing of Springfield College at Totman Field, it is quite conceivable to say that the University of Massachusetts field hockey team just may be deeper than last year's team that finished third in the country.

The Minutewomen got some key performances from some old heros as well as some play from a rookie and a couple of transfers who will play big roles in UMass' drive for a repeat Final Four appearance.

Senior forward Tonia Kennedy, playing in her first game in over a year, showed no signs of rustiness when she gave the Minutewomen their first goal of the year at 24:50 of the first half.

The goal, assisted on by junior Kathy DeAngelis, gave UMass a 1-0 lead, a lead it would never relinquish.

The first half closed out at 1-0, though that score is not a good indication of the way the play went in the first half. The Minutewomen dominated on the offensive end, firing 23 shots at the Springfield goal.

"We were tentative, we were holding back," Springfield coach Dottie Zenaty said. "While they were going for a ball, we waited for a ball. I think that was the biggest difference."

In the second half, the Indians really paid a price for that waiting.

At 10:59 of the second half freshman Dawn Trumbauer scored her first collegiate goal to give the Minutewomen a 2-0 lead. Trumbauer started at forward but her lack of experience on the college level was no worry to UMass coach Pam Hixon.

"I felt that she could contribute right away, Hixon said. "She's lived up to her expectations and certainly has lived up to ours. She's a great one on one player."

DeAngelis extended the lead to 3-0 at 21:49 of the second half, starting right where she left off last season when she was UMass' leading scorer with 19 goals.

Volleyball serves up opening win over Hartford

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team mounted a 40-kill offensive Hart-attack yesterday, which shackled the University of Hartford 13-15, 15-7, 15-4, 15-8.

After dropping the first set to the Hawks, UMass gathered its composure and ran away with the next three sets for the win.

"I don't think either team played well," UMass coach Carol Ford said.

The Minutewomen, playing in their first match of the season, balanced the offense out against Hartford. Five of UMass' six starters had six or more kills.

At times, the UMass offense seemed incoherent. They were without the services of senior outside hitter, Juliet Primer, and in the first set the Minutewomen were struggling.

"I knew we were going to miss (Juliet, who was out for medical reasons) so we started working with Christine (McEnroe) this week," to replace Primer, Ford said.

In the first set, Hartford apparently was not feeling the first-game jitters because they frustrated the Minutewomen and took an early 3-0 lead.

But UMass soon balanced the match behind the serving of senior Barbara Meehan who had three service aces and offense of sophomore Nancy Sullivan who had four kills (eight overall).

The Minutewomen knotted the score at 13. One service winner later and Hartford lead 14-13. An offensive miscue by the Minutewomen and all of the sudden, they lost the first set of the year.

Maybe someone forgot to tell Hartford that they were the underdogs.

In the second set, neither team could establish momentum. UMass was quaterbacked by Karen Ferguson who registered five assists (22 overall) in the second frame. Her main targets were McEnroe with two kills and Meehan and Julie Smith who had three kills apiece.

The Minutewomen lead throughout, however, because of a lack of communication on the Hartford side. UMass had leads of 7-4, 11-4, before eventually wrapping up the set at 15-7.

The third set was a clinic in team work by the Minutewomen. They dominated throughout the entire set and won easily 15-4.

Down two sets to one, the Hawks were literally shaking their heads.

UMass soccer makes a clean weekend sweep

• Minutemen tip Maine on Hollmeyer goal

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Is it fair to call Sunday afternoon's University of Massachusetts men's soccer team victory over Maine a 'must win?' A 'big game?'

Probably not.

It was, however, a real nice way to kick off the season. In a game featuring consistently stingy defense at both ends of the field, the Minutemen topped the visiting Black Bears 1-0, behind Louis Hollmeyer's point-blank drive with 11:49 remaining.

The goal was scored on one of the few strong shots the Minutemen mustered all afternoon, as Hollmeyer pivoted on a loose ball bouncing waist high, 15 feet in front of the goal. Maine goaltender Todd Brennan had no chance on the play.

UMass then maintained control of the ball in Maine's half of the field, surrendering ground briefly in the waning moments of the contest. One final save by Minuteman goalie Sam Ginzburg with 2:30 remaining secured the win.

The victory marked the beginning of this 1988 campaign, and launched a four-game homestand for coach Jeff Gettler's squad on the right foot. With a season's schedule that features nine of the top 10 teams in the Interscholastic Soccer Association of America New England preseason rankings, a fast start will come in handy for UMass when the leaves start to turn.

"I was very happy," said Gettler of his team's effort, "I was a little apprehensive, you never know what's going to happen in your first match, and they'd already played twice."

Maine entered Sunday's contest, in fact, with an 0-2 record. A winless opponent did little to diminish the Minutemen's opening day enthusiasm, however.

• Defense helps women take URI tourney

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy had a lot of questions in his mind as he entered this weekend for his first games as the team's coach.

Some of those appear to be resolved, as the Minutewomen gave Rudy a pair of wins to start his UMass career and the championship of the Rhode Island Tournament. UMass beat the host WRams, 2-0 on Saturday, and then in yesterday's championship game, dumped Rutgers University by the same 2-0 score.

The defense came through as strong as ever, shutting down nearly everything. A pair of veterans whose status was unknown because of injuries, overcame those problems and made gigantic contributions. And a first-year player made her presence felt right from the get-go.

"I was happy with the defense, getting two shutouts," Rudy said. This was a defense that, in the Rhode Island game, wasn't satisfied with holding the WRams scoreless, so it held them without a shot, as well.

Stabbing angers area women, vigil planned for tonight in park

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

The restraining order, which was to keep Alan Jose Reyes from having any contact with Virginia Ferrer, expired Friday morning.

Friday night, Ferrer's screams were all that was left to alert police of her plight.

Officers on a routine patrol in Turners Falls went to investigate screams coming from an alley behind her home at 11:30 p.m. and allegedly discovered Reyes on top of Ferrer, attacking her.

Ferrer was taken to Ferren Medical Hospital and later transferred to Franklin Medical Center in Greenfield where she died of multiple stab wounds.

District Attorney Judd Carhart said Reyes was arrested Friday night and arraigned for murder yesterday morning.

Nine women dressed in black interrupted Reyes' arraingment yesterday when they stood up in court chanting and claiming to invoke the presence of the murder victim.

According to the Associated Press, they pointed at the defendent and chanted "Your action will come back to you. Every action will have consequences."

The women wore stocking masks with runs and holes which appeared to be outlined with red nail polish.

"We will avenge Virginia's death," they said. "Virginia is here. You should have known Virginia is here. This is not that man's first day in court. That was not Virginia's first pain. We say Virginia is here. We say Virginia is not the only woman."

A recess was called and the women escorted out to the street where they continued to chant and then began to laugh hysterically. They refused to say if they were members of a women's advocacy organization or to identify where they were from. "We're all Virginia from Turners Falls," they said. After the recess, Reyes pleaded innocent. He will be held in Franklin County Jail without bail until a pretrial conference, Sept. 21.

A candlelight vigil will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Pulaski Park in Northampton by Necesidies/Necesidadas.

"Your action will come back to you. Every action will have consequences."

"We're hoping to make this public," said Mary Johnston, a volunteer coordinator at Necessities/Necessidades, a Northampton ageny for batered women, where Ferrer had sought help. "A lot of people who should have taken responsibility didn't. We want people to know that this does happen, it's real. She was murdered by a batterer, she had a history," she said.

"We expected this," said Ramona Diaz in an interview by the Daily Hampshire Gazette. Reyes was a jealous man, she said. Sometimes their arguments would escalate into beatings that left her bruised.

"He always said if she wasn't his, she wasn't anybody's," her eldest sister Correa Colon told the Gazette.

Their relationship has been off and on again over the last twelve years, they said. "He would cry after their fights," said Diez and after promising never to hit her again, Ferrer would take him back.

In the last four years, Ferrer has had between six and a dozen restraining orders against Reyes. Workers went with Ferrer to Hampshire District Court repeatedly, Aline Flower a coordinator at Necessities told the Gazette.

Last year Ferrer stayed for a time at the Necessities' shelter and decided to give up her four children to temporary foster care while she found suitable housing for herself and her children, said Flower.

Having found her home in Turner Falls, Flower said, the Department of Social Services devised a "service plan" for Ferrer that suggested that before her children were returned to her, she re-unit with Reyes because he was the father of four of her children. The plan suggested they then get into a family therapy program, said Flower.

Necessities went to DSS to oppose the recommendation, said Flowers. "It just seemed to us that (DSS) was holding the children as a carrot to Virginia so that (DSS) could fulfill their mandate from the state to re-unite," said Flower.

Flower told the Gazette it was a year ago that Ferrer got back together with Reyes and that she had often expressed fear for her life.

Student Government Association officers intend to file charges against Budgets Committee Chairman Gil Penchina for misusing of student monies, according to the SGA treasurer.

Penchina said during a Coordinating Committee meeting on Thursday that he misused student monies to prove it can be done.

"We're planning on auditing the accounts, finding out what we can, and then prosecuting through the Dean of Students Office," Treasurer Laura Filkins said yesterday.

She said the SGA will file charges based on Penchina's making photocopies for personal use with student money.

Penchina admitted he made photocopies for personal use. Collective Copies, a business in Amherst, forwarded copies of receipts to Filkins. The receipts, dated June 15, show 300 golden rod copies costing $17.50 and 150 blue copies costing $9.43 were made. The receipts do not show the content of the copies.

Filkins said throughout the summer she asked Penchina when he would repay the money. Penchina said he did not know how to re-deposit the money because the revenue account of the Finance and Budgets committees had been frozen. The committees have another account, in which no money can be deposited.

Filkins agreed these barriers exist but said, "I asked him to check with SAO (Student Activities Office). There are ways we could have deposited the money."

Graffiti appears on campus buildings

Graffiti attacking the Strategic Defense Initiative appeared recently near the Student Union.

Activists at the University of Massachusetts have taken their ideals to the streets — and to the building sides, the walkways and the wooden fences.

The recent wave of political grafitti, which is under police investigation, includes messages ranging from Dukakis-criticisms to fraternity-bashing.

"School is back in session," Arthur Hilson, director of public saftey, said of the grafitti. "The sad part of it is that occassionally these kind of incidents give rise to the copy cats. It allows them to have some vicarious moment in the sun."

The latest spree came yesterday, when two unknown vandals engaged in what appeared to be a written debate on the Stategic Defense Initiative, known popularly as Star Wars, on the circular driveway in front of the Student Union Building.

The chalk-scrawling was reported to police in the early afternoon, Hilson said. A few hours later, police received a second call claiming that the grafitti was expanded, He said. The initial message read, "Massachusetts receives $700 million for Star Wars: is it any suprise Dukakis supports SDI?" Someone responded below, "No it doesn't. Listen you C.I.A homeboy you created SDI."

In addition yesterday, grafitti calling UMass "Fort Duffey," and labeling the institution a haven for military research was discovered on the wall of the Fine Arts Center, between the Rand Theatre and Concet Hall.

Meanwhile, police are still investigating two anti-fraternity slogans found recently at Delta Upsilon and the defunct Beta Kappa Phi, which both read "Dismember the Boys Club." Hilson said police are treating all the cases individually.

Dukakis attacks opponent's record

Says Bush was 'unforgiveably wrong' in Iran-Contra affair

PHILADEPHIA, (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis, moving to counter Republican attacks on his national security views, charged yesterday that George Bush was "unforgiveably wrong" in the Iran-Contra affair and questioned whether his opponent has "the steadiness required in the Oval Office."

Beginning three days of campaigning devoted to defense and foreign policy issues, Dukakis said Bush as vice president had produced only failure in combating drugs, international terrorism and trade deficits.

"In each of these three areas, George Bush has failed," Dukakis said. "... No wonder he doesn't want to debate."

The Democratic presidential nominee spoke to an invited audience of 200 union members and other supporters in Philadelphia before flying to Evandale, Ohio, to tour a General Electric plant that produces engines for the Stealth bomber.

Dukakis has been stung by weeks of criticism from Bush and other Republican partisans who have portrayed him as weak on defense and opposed to a variety of new weapons systems, including virtually all land-based nuclear weapons.

Press Secretary Dayton Duncan said Dukakis' visit to the GE plant near Cincinnati was intended to demonstrate his support for the Stealth bomber, "despite what his opponent has said."

The Massachusetts governor planned to outline his views U.S.-Soviet relations in Chicago today, followed by an address on defense issues Wednesday in Washington.

In his Philadephia speech, Dukakis continued the tougher, more aggressive stance against Bush that he first displayed last week in Texas although he provided new specifics about his own national security views.

He shaped his now-familiar attack on Bush for keeping silent when President Reagan agreed to sell missiles to Iran in exchange for the release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

"He says he was out of the loop, but the fact is that he was fully briefed on all aspects of the transaction," Dukakis said. "He attended many meetings. He had time to think about it. He had an opportunity to advise the president. And he was disastrously and completely and unforgiveably wrong.

"I don't question George Bush's patriotism, even though these days he seems to be questioning mine," Dukakis said. "Not for a minute. But does this man, a man who would encourage the president of the United States to undermine American interests and prestige by selling arms to Iran have the judgment and the steadiness required in the Oval Office?"

Hopefuls trade jabs on campaign trail

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis charged yesterday that an unsteady George Bush botched his assignments in the battle against drugs and terrorism, while the Republican nominee challenged Dukakis to state his views on the U.S. strike against Libya and invasion of Grenada.

Bush also named a panel of national security advisers including former secretaries of State Henry A. Kissinger and Alexander M. Haig as well as Zbigniew Brzezinski, who was Democrat Jimmy Carter's natoinal security adviser. Dukakis, launching a three-day counter offensive against Republican charges he would cripple American defense and foreign policy, told 200 supporters at a union hall in Philadelphia that Bush was "disastrously and completely and unforgivably wrong" for not warning President Reagan against selling arms to Iran in an attempt to free hostages.

Dukakis said he would restore respect for America, which he said had been undermined by Reagan-Bush failures to combat terrorism, come to grips with the trade deficit and stop "the avalanche of drugs . . . pouring across our borders."

"In each of these areas, George Bush has failed," the Massachusetts governor said.

150 celebrate Rosh Hashana

Press Staff Report

The Student Union Ballroom was filled with the sounds of prayer last night, as 150 people joined Jews worldwide in celebrating the second night of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year.

The holiday, which celebrates the coming of the Jewish year 5749, was led by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, the director of the UMass Hillel Foundation.

Perlmutter, in a sermon, called on students who spend time learning new and puzzling computer languages to take time to learn another puzzling language, that of the Torah (Jewish Scriptures).

He said that while computers are high-tech, and constantly being changed, updated and improved, the Torah is never changed, and in fact re-read every year, with the hope of gaining more knowledge and insight.

The Torah reading of the week of Rosh Hashanah is the first Torah reading of the year. In the course of the year, each of the Torah readings are read in synagogue.

At the beginning of the service, the congregation participated in an alternate singing of the prayer Shema with sign language. The sign language was learned by Perlmutter in his one-year sabbatical last year in Israel. The rendition was apparantly well-received by the congregation, most of whom participated with enthusiasm.

Services for the final day of Rosh Hashanah will be held this morning in the Student Union Ballroom at 10 a.m.

Public Safety moves 'closer to home' in SW

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

In an effort to bring Public Safety closer to home, a section of the lobby in the Washington Dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area will be designated a police sub-station opening Oct. 1.

The sub-station's main objective is to maintain an atmosphere of community safety and service and to assist students in developing crime prevention habits while at school.

The sub-station will consist of two parts, the main area located in the lobby of Washington Dormitory, and a secondary area on the fifth floor used for conferences and training workshops for students, resident assistants and student security.

The station's opening will coincide with the beginning of National Crime Prevention Month, and is designed as a prototype for future stations to be implemented, if proven effective, in each of the residential areas.

Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson, designed the initial draft of the sub-station idea as the next step of his overall safety enhancement plan called the PEACE program.

PEACE, which stands for Public safety Education Assistance Community Enrichment program, is Hilson's brainchild, the purpose of which is to counteract the often negative image the police tend to receive.

"This is just a small piece of the ongoing program to help students understand Public Safety," said Hilson. "We want to improve our relations with the community and the less-than-positive perceptions of the police."

Last year, Hilson used auxiliary police to step up foot patrols in the residential areas to establish a greater presence of safety forces in the housing areas.

The sub-station will be open between what Public Safety terms the 'key hours' of 5 p.m. and midnight, . There will be three officers on rotating shifts in close cooperation with student security and students.

"I've chosen three high-caliber officers who in the past have demonstrated the ability to relate well with the student community." said Hilson.

Hilson said he feels that if the students can become familiar with the three officers, by name if possible, the tension of police-student relations will be significantly relieved.

"In the past if you needed the police you called them. If the police were present without being called for they were seen as an unnecessary evil," said Hilson. "I want to increase our contact with the people we serve."

"It is important that no one perceives this move as the development of a police state. It is the education of the community about prevention and safety in their living area," said Hilson. " I'm excited about it."

Protests against Pinochet rule mark 15th anniversary of coup

By KEVIN NOBLET
Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — At least 50 people were injured during anti-government demonstrations marking the 15th anniversary of the military coup that installed President Augusto Pinochet, police said yesterday.

The protests, which occurred mostly in slums and working-class neighborhoods of the capital, ended early yesterday after more than 200 people were taken into custody, police said.

Sparked by the anniversary Sunday, the protests included the stoning of Pinocet's motorcade during a campaign tour on the anniversary of the 1973 coup that ousted the elected government of President Salvador Allende, reporters at the scene and Radio Cooperative said.

Police fired buckshot and used tear gas and water cannon to disperse bands of protesters who hurled stones and erected barricades of burning tires in the poorer residential zones ringing Santiago. Some 50 people suffered bullet or buckshot wounds, police said.

In ceremonies marking the anniversary, Pinochet declared Sunday, "I am ready to give my last breath to my country," and urged citizens to vote to give him eight more years of rule.

Pinochet is the only candidate in the presidential referendum, set for Oct. 5.

Shortly after the speech, nearly 5,000 protesters in the coastal resort of Vina del Mar battled riot police following the largest ever memorial service at the grave of Allende, who perished in the coup.

Reporters said Gen. Pinochet's bodyguards opened fire after his motorcade was stoned in Cerro Navia, a working-class suburb north of Santiago. They said at least four protesters suffered bullet wounds.

Police did not report any injuries or arrests in Cerro Navia, but said 142 people were arrested in Vina del Mar when people tried to march from the cemetery into the resort's center.

Pinochet was booed by hundreds of people when he arrived in Cerro navia.

Many hurled rocks at his motorcade, and Radio Cooperative said Pinochet's bodyguards fired shots into the air as vehicles maneuvered around barricades of burning tires.

Earlier in the day, in a nationally televised speech marking the Sept. 11, 1973, overthrow of Allende, Pinochet said Chileans were morally bound to support his sole candidacy in the presidential plebiscite.

Penchina gave a check for the misused money to Filkins at the the Coordinating Committee meeting, but the check was returned to him.

Senate Speaker Robert Fadel, who conducted the meeting, said, "We wanted to make a thorough investigation of the matter. If we had held the check it would have been like we accepted a payment for the misuse of funds without an investigation or an audit."

Filkins said this is the first time she has known of a student using student monies for personal photocopying since she took office in April. She said she was not sure if a similar situation had happened in the past or how the people in the past had handle it.

Penchina met with SAO Business Manager Steve Sullivan during the summer to discuss safety checks in the systems of payroll, transfers, and other transactions in the Student Activities Office.

Sullivan said Penchina never said he was conducting a test or that the system was inadequate.

"I'm surprised he did it but not surprised a person in his position could do what he did," Sullivan said.

Penchina said he could not have told Sullivan or any student government leaders about the test. Sullivan and student leaders were the object of the test, he said.

Shari Silkoff, SGA co-president-elect, said Penchina got away with his so-called test because his position allowed him. Penchina, along with Filkins and Finance Chairman James Smack are the watch dogs of the system, she said.

Penchina said if he can get away with photocopying personal items, anyone can.

Conte enters race for U.S. Congress

WASHINGTON — Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., announced yesterday he will again run for Congress after 30 years of service.

Conte, the only Republican in the state's Congressional delegation, represents the First District, which includes Amherst.

Conte has been the Minority Leader of the House Appropriations Committee since 1979.

The Appropriations Committee, annually approves all federal budgets, making it one of the most influential in Congress.

Conte has been a strong supporter of UMass. In 1986 he helped UMass to get $20 million for the construction of the Polymer Research Center that will be named for him.

He has supported raises in the Pell Grant and Guaranteed Student Loan programs.

His Democratic opponent this year is John R. Arden, an attorney from Easthampton, who is running a law office in Northampton.

Conte was first elected to office in 1951 as a state senator. In 1958 he won his Congressional seat where he has remained.

Making Contact magazine

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Denim jacket-clad Rachel Morton sat in her Munson Hall office Monday afternoon and casually described Contact and her role as editor for the quarterly magazine. Morton's manner and dress reflect a down-to-earth direction Contact has taken since she took over the quarterly publication in 1984.

"I try to cover research that is exciting, that would be of interest to a lay audience: books recently published, interesting student projects or faculty projects, basically exciting things that are happening on campus that would appeal to a wide audience," she said.

Morton said the magazine has been focusing less on "scholarly pursuits," such as faculty accomplishments and scientific research on campus.

"There might be health (issues) and sort of light science, interesting things on campus. That's something I've been working on for the past year or two, trying to get some more student life, just the taste for what it's like to be on this campus both as a student, as a staff person and as a faculty member. I try to get some humor in there too," she said.

Contact has been published in magazine form for five years, Morton said. Before that, it was a newspaper for about six years. The magazine is typeset in Munson Hall, she said.

With a circulation of 40,000, Contact is distributed to university staff, graduate students, parents of undergraduates, alumni who donate money to the university and people who request copies, she said.

The fall issue will feature a cover story on Paul Theroux and a new "fiction department," for which Morton invited renowned writers from the university staff to contribute short pieces of fiction.

The typeset sheets for the upcoming issue are scheduled to be sent to the printer in two weeks. The issue will then be distributed during the second week in October, she said.

The Contact staff consists of Morton's full-time position, a part-time layout designer, two part-time writers, a work-study student who provides editorial assistance and an occasional freelance writer.

Beside Morton's desk sits a word processor, a welcome change since, as she described, "when I came, we cut and pasted and used a typewriter."

TWA pilot says hijacker pulled fatal trigger

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) – The pilot of a TWA jetliner hijacked to Beirut in 1985 testified yesterday that Mohammed Ali Hamadi fired the shot that killed a U.S. Navy diver during the ordeal.

Capt. John Testrake also testified that the hijackers brutally pistol-whipped his flight engineer when they first entered the cockpit.

But in the most dramatic testimony, Testrake told the court after a brief recess in the proceedings that he had had time to take a closer look at the Lebanese Shiite Moslem, accused of murder and air piracy.

After the break, Testrake told the court: "I want to make an important statement. I was able to take a close look at the accused just as I was leaving the courtroom for the last recess. I did say before that one of the two (hijackers) appeared to do more of the communicating and the other more of the violence.

"And looking at this man now, I was struck that this man for the second of the two descriptions ... that this is the man who I recall had stood in the forward entryway and shot (Robert) Stethem."

Hamadi had acknowledged comandeering the jet, but denied killing Stethem.

Testrake, of Richmond, Mo., was at hte control of Flight 847 when it was hijacked on June 14, 1985. His ordeal in the cockpit was dramatically illustrated in photographs distributed around the world showing a hijacker pointing a pistol at his head.

The flight from Athens to Rome was seized and diverted to Beirut and 39 Americans were held hostage for 17 days.

Hamadi was arrested at Frankfurt Airport in 1987 after explosives were found in his luggage.

Hurricane hits Jamaica with heavy winds and downpours

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert, packing 110 mph winds and torrential rain, moved over Kingston yesterday after skirting Puerto Rico, Haiti and the Dominican Republic.

There were no immediate reports of casualties. Telephone communications were affected.

"Right now it's actually moving over Jamaica," said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miuuve already had reports of 110 mph winds on the eastern tip.

"It looks like the eye is going to move lengthwise across that island, and they're going to bear the full brunt of this pwoerful hurricane," Sheets said.

Forecasters say Gilbert was expected to lash Jamaica throughout the day and was on track to later strike the Cayman Islands, a small British dependency northwest of Jamaica.

Meanwhile, Havana Radio reported yesterday that 25,000 people were evacuated from Guantanamo Province on Cuba's southeastern coast as strong winds fanning out from Gilbert began brushing the island.

All Jamaica-bound flights were canceled at Miami International Airport, while flights from Grand Cayman, the main island of the three-island chain, arrived packed with frightened travelers.

"People were running around in the main lobby of our hotel (on Grand Cayman) like chickens with their heads cut off," said one vacationer who was returning home to California through Miami.

Hurricane warnings were posted forthe Cayman Islands, Cuba and Haiti. Warnings were discontinued for the Dominican Republic.

"All interests inthe Western Caribbean should continue to monitor the progress of this dangerous hurricane," the service said, adding, "Little change in strength is expected for the next several hours as the hurricane moves westard over Jamaica."

The Associated Press' Caribbean headquarters in San Juan, Puerto Rico, was unable to get phone calls through to Kingston, where high winds and heavy rain preceding the storm drenched the capital overnight, toppling trees, causing local flooding and littering streets with branches.

Opposition in Burma rejects government plan

RANGOON, Burma (AP) - Opposition leaders yesterday jointly rejected the government's plan to organize a general election and instead demanded immediate formation of an interim government to oversee the transition to democracy.

"Under the vastly deteriorating economic, social, political and security conditions in the country from further hardships," said a letter to president Maung Maung by opposition leaders Aung Gyi, former Defense Minister Tim Do and Aung San Suu Kyi.

Maung Maung, bowing to nationwide anti-government protests that have brought the action to a virtual standstill, announced Saturday the the Burma Socialist Program Party would relinquish its 26-year monopoly on power and hold multiparty general elections.

The Parliament on Sunday authorized the government to hold the election as soon as late October.

But the opposition leaders said the people, who have since March taken to the streets by the millions to demand the government's ouster, would not trust it to oversee the elections:

"Since the government has lost the confidence of the natin, people will have no confidence in the general elections to be held by the government appointed Election Supervision Commission."

It said when an interim government is formed, striking public employees will return to work, Burma will regain normal economic activity and general elections would be organized.

Parliament set a target date of three months for the holding of the multiparty elections, but empowered the government to make it earlier or later if necessary.

It also appointed an election commission comprised of three retired civil servants, a retired army brigadier general and a former member of Parliament. The men, all over 70 years of age are generally regarded as neutral.

Blues jam every Tuesday at L'Oasis

Blues musicians know where to be tonight.

"They come from all around the area," said Michel Biard, owner/manager of L'Oasis nightclub in Northampton. "People know about it."

What they know is that every Tuesday night is Blues Night and for the past 10 monthes, musicians from around the area have been going to L'Oasis to play and hear the blues.

"Blues musicians come in and mingle, check out new groups," Biard said. "Everybody's always busy with their own band and this gives them a chance to get together. It's a very happening thing."

Musicians have been attending Blues Night since Biard held the first jam session last January with his own equipment and friends.

"The first one was very hip," he said.

Today, musicians can bring their own equipment, band or friends and sign up to play during the four-hour jam that is emceed by WMUA's own blues deejay, Bill Stepchew.

"Even if we don't have the best possible bands, it's still a fun night," Biard said. "Everybody gains from it. That night everybody is a winner."

Biard said for musicians looking for potential band members, Blues Night allows for an opportunity to scout out new talent.

"There are bands coming out of here," he said. "Blues has an easy theme to combine with people you don't know. Everybody knows three bars. It's All-American classic music."

Biard said all musicians are welcome and should come to L'Oasis at 9 p.m. tonight to sign up for a time to play.

"The night is very organized. It moves really well. Everyone plays two songs," he said. "There is no cover. It's a really great thing."

There is also no cover for L'Oasis' Wednesday's specialty night when the club features new bands. All nights are for 21 or over, unless otherwise specified.

Summers' solo album: not secured success

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Mysterious Barricades
Andy Summers
Private Music

Instrumentalists have a tough row to hoe.

Since the record-buying public has little patience for songs without words, the best reception Andy Summers' latest effort could possibly receive is a few comparisons to either of his gurus, Brian Eno or Robert Fripp.

Mysterious Barricades is a Summers project through and through. The lurking synthesizers and repetitive guitar-work that pervade the work of the Police and his collaborations with Fripp form the foundations of this album. "Red Balloon" and the title cut open the record in this vein, the former featuring a synth whistle that smells of Tangerine Dream (who pioneered the Private Music label and is currently touring with Summers).

Summers' trademark sound fills other tracks on the LP. "Shining Sea's" deep, heavy electronic murmur, coupled with a guitar synth that sounds like a faint operatic soprano, creates the aural/pop sound that gave Vangelis brief success.

"The Emperor's Last Straw" uses the old guitar/synth formula with subtle rhythm changes in this, the album's best tune. The guitar solo here is downplayed to a barely audible, but delightful, sound much like the solo on "Driven To Tears." "Tomorrow" is slow and repetitive, and depends on the formula too much. This one is tiresome and passes almost unnoticed.

Summers does manage to move into some new territory. "When That Day Comes" is 80 seconds of jazz guitar dabbling. Good stuff and worthy of a three-minute track. The thumps and rattles of "Train Song" work well alongside a high-pitched synth clatter.

While guitars hold the melody for most tunes on Barricades, "Satyric Dancer" is supported by a hovering guitar harmony. The slow synthetic melody makes this a true mood piece. Similarly, "The Lost Marbles" features a series of repeating eighth notes on electric piano that would make Eno proud.

Summers' formula works best when other great musicians are involved; Sting and Fripp complimented his work in the early 80s. When left to his own devices, however, Andy seems downright lonely. He's a fantastic collaborator, but a poor imitator.

Mysterious Barricades needs another talent, but it is a valiant effort, considering Summers was beaten before he started.

Scorpions still sting the crowds

By SAQIB ALLADIN and KAVITA SACHANANDANI
Collegian Correspondents

Holding a claw-like grip on their audience, the Scorpions injected an electrocuting sting of rock'n'roll on their most recent New England date at Lake Compounce last Saturday. And they kept stinging till the last words of their all powerful rock'n'roller "Dynamite" exploded to a crescendo and reverberated through the dusty and smoke-filled rock arena.

Klaus Meine, lead Scorpion, has that raw animal magnetism and his own brand of lethal charm. His distinct vocal projection with its amazing pitch carries over the heavy metal instrumentation like a shrill siren, making his message loud and clear.

The Scorpoins put on an intense show. The instensity of their music strikes you from the opening chords, lingering throughout the entire preformance. Songs like "Big City Nights" had the audience screaming, while the acoustic rendition of "Holiday" surely cast a mellow spell, but with no loss of intensity.

Herman Rarebell, with an excellent drumming record is the essential contributing factor to this puslating intensity. His percussion is superb, his timing pefect. Lead guitarist Matthias Jabs adds his talent to rhythm guitars, voice box and back-up vocals. Rudof Shenker joins him for a dual lead on the number one hit "Still Loving You."

The Scorpions possess good stage presence and provide an elaborate stage setting which complements their showmanship. Lightning ramps ran across the stage in a definitive symmetrical pattern and a mobile ministage was erected specially for the drum kit.

As a warm-up group, Kingdom Come was a pleasant surprise. With only one ablum to their credit and limited stage experience, they did well as Led Zeppelin clones. The lead voaclist's attempts to deny this comparison fell on deaf ears but their music kept the crowds enthralled. The rendition of "Get It On" was excellent, incorporating a brilliant drum solo to bring the ending notes to a climax.

Gidgette Goes To Hell has potential to go places

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Correspondent

Each Tuesday since 1988 began, L'Oasis nightclub in Northampton has been hosting a blues jam, an open stage which became so popular that it spawned regular Wednesday pick-up jams (not necessarily the blues). Mostly the resultant music is good, sometimes it's cacophonous. Gidgette Goes to Hell is one of the more promising and vital bands to have emerged from the L'Oasis showcases.

Gidgette Goes to Hell has as its songwriter-rhythm guitarist Sue Russell, who's old enough to have a teen-aged kid (she does, she is a crewmember). Gidgette has as singer the tartly dressed Julie Simons who has reached believability fast. As lead guitarist Tim Egan is at once absurd (guitar above the head) and respectable (he plays well). Amy Patton (bass) and Steve Polari (drums) complete the line-up and add the "oomph" necessary to distinguish this band from the generic claptrap that poses as college radio.

At a Sheehan's gig opening for Ray Mason last week, the Northampton-based quintet demonstrated considerable talent, honed over several weeks as the Wednesday L'Oasis showcase band. While ripping through a short set of all-good songs, the band displayed an ironic originality, mixing many musical elements which we've all heard before into something cathartic and . . . joyful.

Gidgette Goes to Hell isn't exactly punk, or rock, or funk or folk or shlock, but it is musical, melodic, throbbing and not snobby in any way. It's pretty accessible, sometimes loud. Now if only people would loosen up a little and dance — because if there ever was a band for a dancing good time, Gidgette is it.

SGA cheats public

The Student Government Association Coordinating Committee cheated its constituents when committee members last Thursday closed the doors to the public to apparently discuss calling for the resignation of a student government leader.

Speaker of the Senate Robert Fadel, who presided at the meeting, called for an executive session, which is closed to the public, without bothering to follow procedures mandated by state law. Fadel failed to specify the reason for the executive session and to take a roll call vote from committee members on whether an executive session was needed, hence violating Chapter 30A of the General Laws of Massachusetts.

Because the committee did not abide by the law, which exists so that elected leaders are held accountable to their constituents, the executive session was actually still a meeting open to the public. Therefore, whatever was said during the session is in the public domain and the students who elected these committee members deserve to know what happened.

Fadel called for the executive session after Gil Penchina, Budgets Committee chairman, handed out copies of a statement lambasting the SGA's system of safeguarding against misuse of student monies.

Judging from a statement released later, the topic of discussion during the session was requesting Penchina's resignation, which means Penchina had the right under the law to request that the meeting stay open to the public. He was never given the chance to exercise that right.

But we may never find out exactly what the committee discussed during the session behind closed doors because no minutes were taken. The public, therefore, was denied its right to public information.

This is a blatant challenge to the principles of democracy and a free press.

The Collegian has taken on the challenge by requesting the Northampton district attorney's office to investigate the situation, and determine whether the committee was indeed in executive session, as Fadel claims.

The fundamentals of life

Not tempted to see this

There's a bromide that says, "If you can't dazzle 'em with brilliance, baffle 'em with b.s." — an unreliable strategy for students but a proven winner in marketing. By many accounts, The Last Temptation of Christ is the latest triumph for baloney in advertising, as thousands flock to see what the fuss is about. The key to ticket sales has been wide publicity from reports of the face-off between modern, secularized, progressive Chistians (who think the film is good for religious dialogue) and fundamentalist boycotters (who don't think it's good for much of anything).

Rusty Denton

Fundamentalists, as the media broadly defines them, are those who believe the Bible is literally true in matters of history, science, morals and miracles. That definition fits the biblical description of Jesus Christ, the twelve apostles, and almost the entire early church. By contrast, many of today's so-called progressive doctrines were labelled heresy in the New Testament.

That anyone would want to be a Christian and not a fundamentalist is ironic, but journalists have championed the heretics as preservers of truth and freedom while castigating the true believers for the secular taboo of anti-intellectual censorship. Who is censoring whom here? For years the national media has reported only those statements of fundamentalist intellectuals that fit a stereotype.

Besides, to many Christians the issues are broader than heresy versus censorship. The issues are whether even a secular society isn't answerable to all-powerful God, and whether a constitutionally protected group has the right to use the most effective lawful means available to prevent wide distribution of a film that is noxious and exploitive of them.

They see parallels between racism and the insults in this film. Fundamentalists do see themselves as a separate race cutting across ethnic lines ("a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession" — 1 Peter 2:9), and in that sense the film is exploitive. It insults their identity with slurs on Christ, and it feeds on curiosity and anti-church sentiment in the rest of the population.

Last Temptation portrays Jesus as a cad, a sinner, a traitor, a confused messiah, and the author of disgusting sacraments. The original novel is anathema, the late author openly idolized the antichrist, Paramount cancelled production because of protests, and Universal's consultants warned them the script was filled with blasphemy. It seems Universal produced the film to capitalize on its shock value and church-bashing potential.

Moreover, the film's most hateful claims about Jesus have their origins in orthodox Judaism. Many fundamentalists feel that they are being mocked by the inclusion of these things in a supposedly messianic film. They also feel that both studio and press are trying to solicit anti-semitic remarks from them, and to sensationalize the response that the film contains "Jewish" lies, as opposed to other sorts of heresies about Christ that arose later in church history. Most fundamentalists are not anti-semitic and hate being stereotyped that way.

Meanwhile, cynical movie moguls rake it in. I'm probably as much of a fundamentalist as anyone else on this campus, but my own reasons for not seeing Temptation have more to do with the marketing than with the production: if the film were any good, it wouldn't need all the baloney in advertising. Or is that brilliance in advertising the baloney in art? Either way, this temptation is not for me.

A pen, a pen, my kingdom for a pen

Happy New Year

I was working at the Collegian when I quickly glanced at my desktop calendar.

Suddenly I was despondent.

By mere chance alone, I noticed that Sunday evening was the first night of Rosh Hashanah, or the Jewish New Year.

By mere chance.

David R. Mark

I consider myself to be a fairly responsible Jew — meaning I make an effort to go to University Hillel programs, go to Shabbat (Sabbath) services occasionally, and remember at all times who I am, in a religious sense, and where I've come from.

I could make excuses. Rosh Hashanah is early this year by a couple weeks, and I've been busy working and getting my schedule in order.

But. . .

Over the summer I was lucky enough to give a sermon at my synagogue, Temple Beth Shalom, in Manalapan, N.J. The Rabbi and I have a good friendship, and he thought it would be good for me to talk about anti-semitism at the college-level.

The Rabbi had seen me as a model Jewish college student. Now I'm not sure what kind of student I am.

Beyond forgetting Rosh Hashanah, I've sidestepped some other facets of Judaism. For example, I don't keep kosher.

It's difficult to keep kosher; no one ever questioned that. My parents keep kosher, but given the hectic college day, the lack of kosher foods easy to prepare, etc., it's excusable not to keep kosher while at college.

But now I live off campus, where it's easier to think about buying kosher foods. I could consider taking the extra time to prepare a kosher meal. It wouldn't be impossible; it would just take more effort.

But. . .

Traditionally, Jews are to marry other Jews. I, for one, would like to marry another Jew. The odds of this happening are nil. I read somewhere the odds are 1 in 33 a Jew will marry another Jew.

It would be easy to make excuses. I went out with a non-Jewish woman last semester without any hesitation. I'd do it again. If I fall in love with a non-Jewish woman, I'd probably have to think a long time if marriage was a possibility. Given my luck with dates, however, if a choice like this comes about, I'd jump at it. It would be easier than waiting to see if I'm the lucky 1 in 33.

But. . .

Maybe it's enough that during the eight days of Passover, I don't eat bread. On Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, I fast with other Jews worldwide. I went to Rosh Hashanah services, at least the evening ones. Plus I'm taking a Judaic Studies course this semester, my second at UMass in five semesters.

Is it enough? Can I do more? Yes. But generally I'm lazy, always have been, and it's a lot easier to go out to a party on Friday night than go to a Shabbat service.

Rosh Hashanah began Sunday night. The Days of Awe, from Rosh Hashanah to Yom Kippur, are days of personal self-examination.

I'll be doing a lot of examining.

They said it . . .

Seen Elvis lately? Thousands of people say they have, and multitudes more are buying a book about the living Elvis. There's even the occasional near-miracle popping up. In hagiography, this sort of thing has a name; it's a cultus, and it speaks clearly to the nature of Western spiritual tensions. Seen Jim Morrison lately? James Dean? Marilyn Monroe? JFK?

—Charles Paul Freund, in the magazine "The New Republic."

(Martin Luther) King was a selfless man, dedicated to principle, not a political party. He believed it was possible to change the hearts of men and women and, thus, bring about racial harmony. Politics was a means to that end, but many of those who spoke (at the 25th anniversary of the March on Washington), most especially Jesse Jackson, used the occasion to advance themselves. They see politics as the end. . . Sadly (the march) became partisan, fostered by a liberal Democratic Party leadership that cares far more about black vote than black progress.

The odds of winning the spiffy Mustang convertible in the Alpha Beta supermarket chain's California Dreamin' sweepstakes, the entry form said, were about 1 in 3.7 million. But for Navy Mechanic James Lee of San Diego, it was a cinch. In fact, a year after claiming the Mustang, Lee was lucky enough to win a $28,500 Chevy Corvette in a Taco Bell sweepstakes. Last week a federal grand jury in Los Angeles indicted Lee and four others on mail-fraud charges of rigging the sweepstakes.

My summer vacation: Part I

What I did on my summer vacation, by P. Lucht.

Since none of my professors have given my favorite assignment yet this year I took it on myself to chronicle the high points of my vacation experience.

No, I didn't simultaneously starve and gain valuable experience doing an internship this past summer. I probably should have. No, I didn't engage in 70 hours of backbreaking labor per week in order to alleviate my financial problems. Perhaps I should have.

Peter Lucht

What did I do? That's right, like the rich folks I summered on Cape Cod, in the garden spot of Hyannis.

For a mere $1150 (each) five of my closest friends and I (ugh!) got a beautiful shack in an area that, while not exactly scenic was at least interesting. That is it was behind a bar, next to the army recruiters, and down the street from the Salvation Army soup kitchen and a halfway house for homeless people. The most interaction I had with my neighbors was when I caught one bum, er, socially disadvantaged person, stealing some of our empties from the pile out in our tiny dirt yard.

Before the summer I heard all these stories about the tremendous labor shortage on the Cape. I figured I would be working at some worker-starved resort, basking in the sun while handing towels to generously tipping tourists on the beach. So of course the only job I could find after a solid week of hunting was as a deli clerk in the Heartland supermarket.

I figured I would be spending a lot of time at the beach, since I was to be living right there, but the combination of living five miles away, working days, and having to come up with six dollars every time I wanted to park my car resulted in something less than the Beach Boys-type fantasy I had envisioned.

I was psyched to be living with several of my best friends, people I had known for years. The first week was great. We laughed about the closet/house and about the job hunting and everything else and then the old familiar housemate story began to unfold. This guy didn't do his dishes. Another left cigarette butts around the house. She had her punk rocker friends over all the time. We didn't like each other's music, and on and on. Screaming matches and the occasional axe murder (or at least a fistfight or two) occurred.

The beer is too expensive.

After reading this you must be wondering if I enjoyed my summer, bums, bologna and all. The answer is: Of course I did. It was the best summer of my life. While my housemates and I could have done something more productive, more potentially valuable to our futures, this experience was something that could never be traded. I will never have cause to regret not having the opportunity to deal with insane drunks, weekend tourists taking pictures of streetlights or whatever, and brain-numbing employment for low wages. Someday I trust these will be fond memories.

...OR, PERHAPS WE COULD GIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS THE WEEKEND OFF, AND MAKE MURDERERS PAY FOR THE REST OF THEIR LIVES.
ARPAD THE COLLEGIAN

My summer vacation: Part II

You want to pay moi minimum wage? I laughed at the very notion.

Well, I'm not laughing anymore.

While my friends were telling me wonderful stories of how they made enough money this summer to fund the state lottery commission, I decided to figure out my own earnings during vacation. After figuring out my gross income, minus taxes, plus a bonus, minus social security, plus tips, minus miscellaneous expenses, plus tutoring money, I came out to a grand total of 68 cents per hour.

Josh Galitsky

After you wipe off the rug from wetting your pants laughing, you may ask how I earned this wage which crosses over the border of ridiculous. No, I worked at a summer camp.

The real question to ponder is not how did I make so little money, it's why did I choose to spend my glorious months of freedom working at a camp for overweight kids.

Nobody understands why I would sacrifice my summer (as they put it) to work with chubby 10 and 11-year-olds that they claimed would drive me off the nearest Berkshire cliff. My cousin offered to send me all kinds of munchies so I could open my own Cumberland Farms and make money off the "rich, starving brats." Chants of "fat camp" haunted my spring semester. Even my old roommate would tease me endlessly about some hypothetical boy named Johnny who would arrive at my cabin door in tears pleading and begging for "just one small piece of pork loin sausage."

I ignored the critics for the past two summers and had an incredible time. Sometimes, the experience is enlightening, such as times when you have a spur-of-the-moment rap session and learn about a kid's fears and hopes — and some of your own. Sometimes its disheartening when a kid goes on a field trip and spends his time cheating at the snack bar. It can be wonderful when you see a group of kids find the guts to get on stage and perform a skit. You never really know for sure if the job was rewarding until you find yourself sending postcards to their houses in the fall.

Sure it's too bad "fat camps" have to exist. Too bad we don't just have a "be yourself" camp or better yet, a "be yourself" world. But that's not reality. Reality is looking into the face of a ten-year-old who weighs 280 pounds, wets his bed every night, and despises himself. Reality is wondering whether to lie and tell him the world isn't going to laugh at him anymore.

The lessons the kids learn are sometimes about life, like how to take care of themselves, and to believe in who they are. When they return to a cupboard full of twinkies, and a school full of thin children, 99 percent of what they've learned is lost in an ocean of despair. It's that one percent that kept me smiling for 68 cents and hour.

Autumn is in the air, camp is done, and I'm broke once again. When it really comes down to it, it doesn't really matter how much I made. Whatever cash I did make will be spent on postcards.

Josh Galitsky is a UMass student

Graffiti: On the wall and from the heart

Last Wednesday's Collegian reported on a fraternity fence spray-painted with the slogan "dismember the boys club." This is the intelligent, aggressive graffiti that shows up in areas of conflict and revolution (unlike 'Aerosmith rules'). The fraternity boys concluded it was probably the work of those evil pseudo-women — feminists. How did you boys figure it out?

What caught my attention was a quote of Delta Upsilon's President, Michael Acker. He was ". . . kind of shocked and disgusted" finding it ". . .incredible that people feel they have to cram their ideology down your throat with vandalism."

Women live with other people's ideologies 'crammed down their throats.' Graffiti, if vandalism, is at least straightforward and avoidable. Media and social pressure are more prevalent. They dictate what's attractive, what's morally and sexually acceptable and what's behaviorally correct. Women are told to wear makeup, shave their legs, look pretty, and please their man.

But is the above graffiti a case of ideology or anger? By definition, fraternities are sexist organizations. And if Dan Rather himself told you women going to a fraternity party would be respected as equals — treated as people instead of sex puppets — would you believe him?

Fraternities concentrate the discrimination against women that runs through our society like mold through bread. It doesn't matter that there are sororities. One of the lessons of the civil rights movement was that 'separate but equal' is not enough.

Shari Ultman
Amherst

Sexism is sexism, no matter the sex

If 'flesh pool' were spray painted on a sorority wall there would be calls for reprisal. If the Everywoman's Center were damaged there would be calls for better security. If notes were inserted into the Valley Women's Voice proclaiming that 'Women are the root of all lust,' there would be riots.

But instead a fraternity fence has been painted. Instead local churches have had statues knocked over on Easter Sunday, and 'Dethrone the Male Gods' painted on the steps. Instead hateful messages advocating violence toward men have been inserted into Valentine's cards at local shops. Why are these sexist actions overlooked? Where are the rallies?

My theory is that since the target of this wave of malice has been men we have turned a blind eye. I think men today have been unfairly categorized by the sexist practices of the men of yesterday, and I think it's time for that to change.

The radical feminists groups of this area have sent a clear message. As far as they are concerned no action is too extreme if it promotes their ideals. As long as it attacks men (note that it's not promoting women) it is acceptable, regardless of it's destructive nature.

We should hold all rules universally consistent. We should treat these acts as sexist, and demand that our school's administration act accordingly. If we fail to act on these sexist actions, what can we expect for the next sexist action where a female is the target?

Syrians reportedly rescue American

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Syrian troops today rescued an American engineer who was abducted by gunmen in Lebanon, and turned him over to the U.S. Embassy in Damascus, a source close to the Foreign Ministry reported.

The source identified the man as an engineer working in Saudi Arabia. His name was given by various sources as Kenneth Paul Wells, Keith Weiss and Paul Weels. The U.S. Embassy in Damascus refused comment.

The Syrian sources, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the engineer went to Lebanon to marry a woman whose family lives in Baalbek. He said the American was kidnapped Sunday by unidentified gunman before he reached his fiancee's home. He said the man was found by Syria troops after an all night search.

The American was freed and taken to Damascus, where Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa turned him over to U.S. Charge d'affairs Jon Craig, the source said.

In Beirut, the Christian-run voice of Lebabnon radio station gave a different account.

The radio said a man identified as Keith Paul Weiss, 25, married Nadia Sharafeddine, 22, in Baalbek and that three gunmen intercepted the newlyweds a few hours after the wedding.

The voice of Lebanon said the bridegroom, "who excels in karate," overpowered the gunmen, who were armed with automatice rifles, disarmed them and took refuge at a nearby Syrian army post. The Syrians then drove him to Damascus, the radio said.

The Sharafeddines are a well known Shiite Moslem family in Baalbek, a stronghold of Iranian-backed Hezbollah.

Hezbollah, or Party of God, is an extremist Shiite group the is believed to be umbrella for various factions holing 18 foreign hostages in Lebanon. Nine of the hostages are Americans. The longest held is Terry A. Anderson, 40, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Hatians at Mass attacked, radio stations report five killed

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Police and soldiers made no attempt to intercede as thugs with guns and machetes attacked parishioners at a Mass celebrated by an opponent of Haiti's military rulers. Radio stations yesterday reported at least five people died.

The radio stations also said 60 men, women and children were wounded in the attack Sunday inside St. Jean Bosco Church. Some witnesses said as many as 12 people were believed killed, and that city hall workers were among the assailants.

Shielded by supporters, the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Ariste escaped uninjured and went into hiding.

Port-au-Prince Mayor Franck Romain, a supporter of former President Jean-Claude Duvalier, told Radio Metropole he believed Aristide had been "justly punished."

"Father Aristide has always preached violence .. he who sows the wind, reaps the tempest," said Romain, the former police chief of Port-au-Prince.

"If (city hall) employees were involved ... I don't see how I am concerned."

After the attack, gangs of armed men roamed the capital's streets, stoning the two radio stations and the headquarters of two political parties opposed to the government of Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy.

Man fired shots outside one of the stations. Roman Catholic-run Radio Soleil, which stopped broadcasting after being pelted by rocks and remained off the air today.

Bush, at a news conference in Washingto and later at a rally before 1,000 flag-waving Cuban Americans in Union City, N.J.; cudgeled Dukakis on defense and foreign affairs as well as the economy.

"I will really admit that I am having trouble pinning down the liberal governor of Massachusetts on his defense," Bush said in New Jersey.

Springfield man saves boy's life after train accident

SPRINGFIELD (AP)- Robert Bellefeuille said he knew nothing about first aid as he stood over the 16-year-old boy whose leg had just been severed by a freight train. "My thoughts were on a stopping the bleeding," said the 40-year-old employee of Milton Bradley.

Drawing only on his common sense, Bellefeuille said he quickly pulled a strap from a canteen he had with him and tied it tightly around the boy's injured leg, as close to the wound as possible.

Bellefeuille had been at the pond, fishing 100 yards away, when he heard the screams of another boy who had witnessed the accident, and the shouts of another fishermen telling Bellefeuille to call the police.

"You might've thought they were fooling around," he said of the screaming. "But you can tell the difference. This kid was screaming hysterical."

Bellefeuille, unsure what the commotion was about, started toward the tracks while instructing his son David to run out to the road and flag down a police cruiser.

When he reached the site of the commotion, Bellefeuile found 16-year-old Brian Miller lying near the tracks, his right leg severed below the knee. The train;s engineer had not realized the accident occurred and continued on.

"I just did what I had to do," Bellefeuille told the Springfield Union-News in a report published Monday. "Then I just kept the leg elevated and talked to the kid a little bit."

Bellefeuille said he managed to calm down Miller's 14-year old friend and told the boy to take off his jacket to cover the injured youth.

The other fisherman, William Bustere, had gone to notify a neighbor to call police

Paramedics recovered the severed leg, but surgeons at Baystate Medical Center were unable to reattach it, hospital officials said.

Medical personnel said Bellefeuille did the right thing in applying a tourniquet, although paramedics now use pressure bandages instead.

"He very likely could have saved the child's life," said Craig Vermes, a paramedic at Holyoke Hospital.

But Vermes cautioned that only with amputations should a tourniquet be applied. "Anything other than that, and it can do more harm than good," he said.

Testing reveals radon gas in many Mass. homes

BOSTON (AP) - Radon gas was found in one of every four Massachusetts homes tested recently, state and environmental officials said yesterday.

Radon concentrations were considered dangerous in one of every 100 tested homes, which translates into an estimated 22,000 dwellings with unsafe radon levels statewide, the officials said.

"In radon, the next generation of pollution problems is upon us," Michael Deland, regional administrator for the Environmental Protection Acency, said in releasing the latest testing data from seven states including Massachusetts. Radon is an "insidious colorless , odorless gas - naturally occuring from the decaying of uranium deposits,;; said Deland, who termed the potentially cancer-causing gas "one of the biggest killers that we have measured nationwide in EPA."

The EPA estimates the gas, which seeps into homes through the foundation, contributes to as manyu as 20,000 lung cancer deaths per year — second only to cigarette smoke in causing lung cancer. In Massachusetts, the estimate is 150 to 600 lung cancer deaths annually.

Although tests of 1,659 randomly selected homes across Massachusetts in February and March found levels substantially below several of the 16 other states wher EPA has conducted surveys, state and federal environmental officials urged Massachusetts residents to get their homes inspected.

Every single-family home townhous, rowhouse, mobile trailer should be tested, said Deputy Health Commissioner Van Dunn. In addition, base floors of apartment buildings should be tested.

Deland noted that testing kits are inexpensive - generally $10 to $25 — and the cost of reducing radon contamination through improved venting or sealing of basements averages $500 to $1,000.

The state Department of Public Health will send a radon information kit, including a list of testing companies to anyone requesting it by calling the agency's Radiation Control Program in Boston at 727-6214 or contacting one of the DPH's regional offices.

Of the 1,659 homes tested, 24 percent had radon levels high enough "to warrant follow-up testing," Health Commissioner Deborah Prothrow-Stith said. These were homes that registered at least 4 piconuries per liter.

A piconcurie is a common unit of radioactivity measurment, corresponding to the disintergration of slightly more than two atoms per minute. EPA estimates that a concentratoin of 4 piconruries per liter in the home increases the chance of lung cancer for a lifetime resident by about 1 percent.

North Dacotat, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Wyoming and Colorado all had a higher percentage of homes tested at the 4 picocurie level according to the EPA survey of the 17 states. Massachusetts translating into 22,000 of the 2.2 million homes in the commonwealth - had radon levels abouve 20 piconcuries per liter, which Prothrow-Stith said deserved immediat attention by owners.

The highest radon level found in Massachusetts was 61 picocuries in North Readn in Middlesex County. By contrast, a reading of 184 picocuries was found in North Dakota - the highest found in the country.

Middlesex County had the highest percentage of homes above the 4 piconcurie level at 38 percent. Suffolk County had the lowest at 5 percent.

Environmental officials said the reason they were urging widespread testing is because one home can be found to be within safe radon levels while a house next door could have much higher levels.

Middle Ages lives on in the Valley

By the Associated Press

For some people, the greater good was long ago, in another time when there was little dependable history but much fable. For them the Middle Ages and Renaissance never died, but flourish even today.

For such as these, the Society for Creative Anachronism was born 22 years ago.

There are 11 kingdoms and principalities in the society, each comprised of provinces, baronies, cantons and shires. The only shire in Massachusetts is Bergental, loosely centered on Amherst and the Berkshire foothills.

"This is a healthy outlet for people who are tired of the high tech world," Heather Abbott of Northampton told the Sunday Republican of Springfield.

"The romantic element represented by those times appeals to a lot of people."

The shire has up to 40 citizens and each must develop his own identity around their favorite time period and place. The person may or may not have existed, but cannot be prominent, like King Richard the Lionhearted.

"I think it is more fun to create a character who never existed." said Abbott, whose alter ego is Lady Elwynne Rowenna of Westworth.

The time on which these citizens focus is generally the years from 395 to 1530. Members take their cues chiefly from Europe because little is known of the Middle and Far East at those times

The society holds monthly meetings. Bergental schdules four events each year: the Crestfallen Tournament in November, a Yule Feast in December, the Bishop Geoffrey Three-Man Melee in June and another feast.

Youth and experience key for men's tennis

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Youth and experience. Think Crash and Nuke in "Bull Durham." Think Newman and Cruise table-hopping their way across the country. Think the 1988 Boston Red Sox.

Add the University of Massachusetts men's tennis squad to the list. The names of the top four slots from last spring's squad, Joe Desormiers, Brian Gable, Rich Stone and Humberto Soto, all have returned for this fall's action. None are guaranteed to step back into their familiar seeds, however, thanks to to presence of a bumper crop of fearless freshmen.

Glen Peck, Paul Audet and Kevin Nueman are the fresh faces with the best chance of cracking the top six — all three rank in the Top 40 New England 18-and-under standings. Local recruits Matt Murphy of Amherst and Matt Stein of Northampton have also impressed coach Manny Roberts during this week's tryouts.

It's up to Roberts to mix and match the veterans and the rookies, filling the top six spots with the best talent available. It's a potentially sticky situation that Roberts is lucky to be in.

"We're going to be holding a few more on the squad," Roberts said. "There are possibilities of freshmen breaking heavy into the lineup."

Last spring's squad capped its season with a fifth-place finish (from a 38-team field) at the New England Championships, a performance that featured Gable's second place overall showing in the singles' bracket. Steady seniors An Dang and Rob Perlman have since graduated, leaving Desormiers, Gable and Soto in the senior leadership roles.

"We'll miss them," Roberts said of Dang and Perlman, "but this is the strongest team in the last four years as far as incoming freshmen and depth. We should do very well."

The season's first serve is scheduled for this afternoon at 3 p.m. when the Minutemen will host Skidmore. Other dates to circle include Sept. 23-24, when UMass will travel to the ECAC Tournament, and the University of Hartford's much-anticipated annual visit, scheduled for Oct. 6.

Today's match is the first of four consecutive home meets for the Minutemen.

Women's cross country looks ahead to first meet

By MEG QUINN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's cross country team may be feeling nervous anticipating its first meet Thursday against Yale and Boston College (at Yale, 3:30 p.m.), but coach Julie LaFreniere is excited and ready to go.

Her enthusiasm is focused more on seeing how strong her nely improved team will perform, than on actually winning the meet. She says there is a big difference in the team this year even though most of last year's top runners have returned.

Dana Goldfarb, who previously held the No. 2 position, has a leg injury and won't be competing early in the season. But Shana Smith, the team's No. 1 runner last year, along with Christine Hopkins, Kristen Peers, and Kathy Holt are all in good shape, according to LaFreniere.

"Watching the workouts [last week] I've had some nice surprises. Lynn Kirchoff and Cathy Crocker look great. I'm impressed."

She added that she's never seen the women run this well so early in the season, adding "I can tell they worked hard over the summer."

LaFreniere said freshman Precious Hill looks very promising and sophomore Laura LaVallee, who played field hockey for UMass the UMass team that reached the NCAA Final Four, is also doing very well.

Rounding out the top 15 are sophomore Cate Dean and newcomers Amy St. Pierre, Wendy Lofgren, Anna Montouri, Grace Shen, Janin Venezia and Michelle St. Laurent.

Although the team has worked hard in preparing for Thursday's meet, the competition they face are two of the best teams in New England.

"Yale is the favorite, hands down," LaFreniere said. "They are the strongest in New England and placed third in last year's NCAA meet. They've only lost one person from their top seven. They're phenomenal."

Boston College is also a tough team to face in the first meet of the season, according to LaFreniere.

"[Ex-UMass coach] Randy Thomas did a great job recruiting for B.C. He's probably got seven or eight decent freshmen coming in, five of whom could be in the top 25 runners in New England," she said."

The Minutewomen are obviously the underdog in Thursday's meet but LaFreniere is still enthusiastic.

"We're at a higher level than we were last year. The freshmen have to get their feet wet, but we look good. e might have a shot at B.C. We're going to be aggressive and pick off as many individual places as we can."

Winning the meet would be nice, but it's not LaFreniere's main concern. "We'll improve by going up against people who are better than us. These women are not afraid to run. They want to be good."

Women's tennis falls to Friars

The women's tennis team was beaten by Providence College, 9-0, yesterday at the Boyden Courts.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Ten days is not an awful long time to get ready for a season. A team needs a fair amount of time to sort everything out and work out the kinks before getting into game competition.

But the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team, with less than two weeks of work so far this year, had to rush right into the season yesterday, facing a powerful squad from Providence College. The inexperience showed as the Minutewomen were swept by the visitors, 9-0 on the Upper Boyden Courts.

Not only was Providence a veteran team hell-bent on winning (the Friars brought just their top six players), but it had already played three matches.

"This is a very tough team to play in the beginning of the season," UMass coach Edwin Gentzler said. "They had beaten Rutgers, Seton Hall and Fordham, who are all tough. They match tough. They're just that far ahead of us."

Gentzler was more concerned with testing the waters, as he used six freshmen in the match.

"Using six freshmen, our inexperience showed," Gentzler said.

Providence went through the match without allowing the Minutewomen to win a single set. UMass came close a couple of times, but wasn't able to get over the hump.

Maura Foley was beaten at No. 1 singles by Dana Downey, 6-1, 6-2. Michelle Brater and Karen McShane each fell at second and third seed by similar 6-1, 6-1 scores. Shizuko Yamasaki lost her first set 6-0, but could have won the second, according to Gentzler, were it not for a couple of double faults. She fell in the second set, 6-4.

Tonya Sides and Tina Calhoun each dropped in the fifth and sixth positions by 6-4, 6-2 scores.

With the match already won, Providence proceeded to sweep through the doubles play to finish the match.

"Our big problem today was our timing," Gentzler said. "They (Providence) are not that good, but we just had trouble keeping up."

Once a Sox fan, always a Sox fan

In 1978, I was guilty of committing a sports fans' greatest sin. I gave up on my team. Yes, I can read your mind. I am the scum of the earth. I'm a quitter. I don't deserve to live. Shoot me and get it over with.

I was a Red Sox fan until 1978. I guess you could say it was in my blood. Or maybe I was just a sucker for the home team. At any rate, I was really into the Red Sox. My grandfather used to take me to Fenway Park and my grandmother and I used to always complain about how those no good Yankees cheated. Life was good and being a Red Sox fan was fun, unless you took it too seriously.

Bob Bobala

But then 1978 came. It was ten years ago that all my dreams, hopes, and aspirations for the Red Sox were crushed.

Oh, that 1978 season. The Sox were, I believe, fourteen games up over the Yankees in August. We were smoothly sailing to the World Series. . . . And then the choke. The choke. The choke. The choke. The choke of 1978. There's nothing less to call it. They blew a fourteen game lead and the Yankees won the division.

Yeah, sure, at least they were tied for first place at the end of the regular season. I remember the tie breaking playoff game at Fenway (I pretended I was sick so I could stay home from school to watch it). And I remember Bucky Dent.

Devastating — at least for a 10-year-old kid. I was depressed for weeks. And shortly after this crushing blow I called it quits on the Red Sox. I couldn't take the heartbreak anymore. I couldn't stand the pain. I switched from the Red Sox to my favorite National League team and became a St. Louis Cardinal fan.

Well, I've stuck with the Cardinals for 10 years now. I don't think I'll ever forsake them. I've survived through all of their chokes without being depressed for more than a week. Maybe it's a little bit easier to handle because St. Louis is so far away.

But I must repent of all my sins against the Red Sox. I confess that over the past ten years, with sadistic pleasure I have called them the Red "Flops." I even found happiness in the first few disappointing seasons after '78. I actually took great pleasure in seeing the pain and suffering on the faces of Red Sox fans. It elated me that I was no longer one of the suckers. But eventually I just didn't pay attention anymore.

I didn't start paying attention again until Dave Henderson hit that home run in the fifth game of the American League Championship series in 1986. Something changed in me at that very moment, and I even rooted for them in the World Series. After they got beat . . . No. Scratch that. After they lost, I still had respect for them. I even put a curse on the Mets and had the Cardinals avenge the Sox' defeat by kicking their behinds in 1987.

Well, now it's 1988 and I find that after 10 years I'm finally starting to bury the hatchet once and for all. I've found myself pulling for the Sox since April. All summer I watched them on T.V. and listened to them on the radio. I've seen players like Ellis Burks and Mike Greenwell play the role that Fred Lynn and Jim Rice did in '78. I've checked the standings every day and I've never given up hope — even when they were nine games out at the All-Star break — that this would be the year that they reverse what happened in 1978.

And over the next couple of weeks my dream will now be fulfilled as the Sox crush any pennant hopes that the Yankees might have and then go on to destroy the Mets in the World Series and avenge their 1986 defeat.

Well, I'm either getting myself up for the greatest exaltation of my life or the greatest depression. But, having lived in Massachusetts all of my life, I guess there's one thing that's true: No matter how much of a curse it may be, once you're a Red Sox fan, you're always a Red Sox fan.

Minutemen grab share of first place

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Before the 1988 football season began, University of Massachusetts head football coach Jim Reid predicted there would be parity in the Yankee Conference.

Seems he knew what he was talking about.

The defending conference co-champions, the University of Maine and the University of Richmond were both knocked off this weekend in their conference openers, as an interesting set of standings appeared in the Yankee Conference.

Yes, its only the first week of the season. And yes, only six of the nine teams played conference games.

But it still helps prove what everyone seems to be saying these days, that any team can beat any other team on any given day.

The Minutemen came from behind to beat Maine, and grabbed a share of first place in the process. The University of Connecticut upset Richmond, 35-12.

The other team in first place is Boston University, which is no surprise considering it opened against the University of Rhode Island, which was 1-6 in the conference last season. The Terriers beat the Rams 41-16.

The only other conference team to lose was the University of Delaware, which fell to Navy, 30-3.

Both sets of Wildcats both posted non-conference wins, as Villanova beat Bucknell 30-17 and the University of New Hampshire dumped Colgate 21-7.

These six games show that parity really is alive in the Yankee Conference.

At least for a week.

Extra points: Since the YanCon was established in 1947, UMass has the best record in conference games at 122-65-4 (.647) and the most conference titles (14).

Richmond, which has been in the conference for only two seasons, is second 9-6 (.600) in winning percentage and UConn is second in conference titles (13).

YanCon Standings

UMass	1-0
UConn	1-0
Boston U.	1-0
New Hampshire	0-0

Two tranfers show appeal of program

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

On the second floor of Boyden Building there is a trophy case. And inside that glass case there stands a trophy commemorating last year's third place finish in the NCAA tourney by the University of Massachusetts field hockey team.

But that trophy is just one of the rewards that last year's season has yielded.

When a team is as rich in the winning tradition as the Minutewomen have been (UMass has reached the NCAA tourney in each of the last seven years), it will attract attention and, very possibly, entice players from other schools to transfer.

Undoubtably that is one of the big reasons why Cindy Cox and Kerri Fagan decided to transfer to UMass.

Fagan is a sophomore who transferred from Division III Southeastern Massachusetts University. But Fagan's play has reached the Division I plateau, and then some. She started on defense Saturday against Springfield College.

Cox's decision to transfer to UMass is even more proof of the strength of the program. Cox is a senior transfer from Purdue.

She is battling senior Sue Desmond for the No. 1 goalie slot and right now appears to have a slight edge. Cox started in goal Saturday and registered seven saves against Springfield.

The Minutewomen also have recruited an excellent prospect in Dawn Trumbauer, who started at forward and scored a goal for the Minutewomen Saturday.

The Minutewomen will have a more explosive offense this year, as every offensive player from 1987 is back.

Last year's top three scorers, junior Kathy DeAngelis (19 goals last year), senior co-captain Ruth Vasapolli (4 goals, five assists), and sophomore Elise McDevitt (6, 1) are all back

Trumbauer and senior Tonia Kennedy are two players that did not play one minute for the Minutewomen last year in their Final Four season but who are starters this season.

Kennedy's game-winning goal on Saturday must have been particularly pleasing to Hixon considering that Kennedy sat out the entire 1987 season with an injury.

Code revisions to be discussed

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The Committee on Academic and Student Affairs will discuss today the proposed revisions of the University of Massachusetts Code of Student Conduct, which has yet to be approved by the Board of Trustees but is in the process of being distributed throughout the Amherst campus.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said it is not unusual to institute a University policy before having the approval of the Board because the Board delegates some of its powers to the chancellor.

An example of policy going into effect before gaining approval is the alcohol ban of last semester, which was not approved until this summer.

The ban initially prohibited alcohol consumption at all University sponsored events, but was changed this summer to restricting alcohol consumption at all events held on University property. The Board approved the revised version.

"We needed the printed version with school getting started," he said. "We didn't feel the changes were major enough to justify in calling a special meeting of the Board of Trustees."

The full Board of Trustees meets once every two months and all of the revisions were not worked out the last time the Board convened in August.

Duffey said the CSC was distributed because the students should be aware of their responsibilities and University rules and regulations when they arrive on cam-

Farmers, animal rights activists fight over state ballot initiative

By PETER LUCHT
Collegian Staff

Proponents of humane treatment for farm animals have squared off against Massachusetts farmers regarding an initiative that will be placed on the November 8 state ballot, according to sources from both sides.

The Humane Farming Initiative, question 3 on the November ballot is designed to eliminate cruelty to animals in factory or confinement-intensive farming operations in the state, said Evelyn Kimber, representative of Citizens For Humane Farming. The group is a coalition of humane societies throughout the state that has been the driving force behind getting the question placed on the ballot.

"Most people, when they think of farms think of an Old MacDonald kind of thing with the animals walking around. What they don't understand is that farming has changed. Intensive confinement (where animals spend their whole lives in crates unable to move) has become much more prevalent," Kimber said.

Opponents of the initiative claim it puts another level of bureaucracy of people who do not know about agriculture in place to dictate to farmers how they should treat their animals.

"The way the question is worded —'Do you favor the humane treatment of animals...,' gives everyone who reads it one initial reaction. We do favor humane treatment, everyone should," said Matt Parsons of the Amherst Farm Bureau, which has been actively opposing the initiative.

Parsons said the main thing the bureau is trying to accomplish is inform people in the area of the consequences of the proposal. Parsons claims it calls for an advisory board to be set up that could make binding decisions regarding such things as food, housing and care of farm animals. Parsons said a possible outcome could be dairy farmers in the area might have to demolish and rebuild their barns if it was decided the structures were unsuitable.

Parsons said the economic strain could cause many farms in Massachusetts to close, and that would result in developers snapping up much of the open space in the state.

"Young people would sell and move to a different state and old people would sell and use the money to retire," said Parsons.

Jim Degnim, spokesman for the Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture, said that the initiative would be disastrous for farms in Massachusetts. Degnim said that dairy farmers cannot take any more financial burdens, and said that a new barn for 100 head of cattle costs up to $250,000.

"With all the problems that dairymen already have, this would be the straw that broke the camel's back. The next thing you'd see would be condos for cows," said Degnim.

Kimber claimed that dairy farms are not an issue and it is generally agreed that dairy animals are treated humanely, but cited the veal and egg industries as examples where animals are treated inhumanely.

Batterer interrupts vigil for murdered woman

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Outrage and controversy sparked a candlelight vigil last night, marking the brutal slaying of Virginia Ferrer by her ex-boyfriend Alan Jose Reyes and calling for justice for battered women everywhere.

Several hundred men and women gathered at Pulaski Park in Northampton to speak and raise concern about abused women like Ferrer and the "system that let her down," according to Aline Flower, a coordinator at Necesitas/Necesidades, a Northampton agency for battered women.

But the crowd's cry for action was interrupted by the arrival of one of Ferrer's former batterers, estranged husband Juan Ferrer.

A verbal battle ensued when an unidentified man approached the microphone and challenged the crowd's intent. Ferrer's niece departed from the vigil shouting, "He beat my aunt and you're defending him," to another unidentified man.

"We're saddened that her other batterer has shown up and introduced himself. He's as dangerous as Alan ever was. She's been away from him for years and had restraining orders against him. He's a pig," Flower said.

"It's very hard to find batterer-free space," she said.

Flower said the large turnout was a good sign of increased community awareness. "I think this is only the beginning. I'm sad it's happening, but I'm glad that awareness may come out of this," she said.

"I hope that people are outraged and angry. We have women coming in our shelter all the time that need to be listened to, not callously treated," she said.

Police guilty of racketeering, extortion

BOSTON (AP) - A federal jury Tuesday found seven former and current police officers guilty of 55 counts of a 58-count indictment accusing them of racketeering and extortion.

The seven officers had been charged with accepting more than $8,000 in bribes from restaurant and bar owners to overlook violations and perform special services.

The jury, which had deliberated for six days, returned at 4 p.m. The jury foreman took about 15 minutes to read the lengthy verdicts. The seven officers showed little or no emotion.

Each of the officers was convicted of two counts under the federal racketeering statue. Conviction under the RICO statute carries a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Some of the defendants were also found guilty of federal extortion charges, substantive mail fraud and mail fraud conspiracy.

During closing arguments two weeks ago, Special Prosecutor James B. Farmer of the New England Organized Crime Strike Force said the case was "about misuse of office for personal gain. It's about each one of them using their power as Boston police officers to line their own pockets."

But defense attorneys argued that the money accepted from business owners that led to the indictment amounted to nothing more than Christmas and vacation gifts from people with whom the officers worked closely over several years.

Defense attorney Anthony Cardinale called the government's allegations of racketeering a "gossamer web" that would collapse under careful scrutiny.

Cardinale admitted his client, detective John F. McCormick, accepted $400 for himself from a bar manager on two occasions. But Cardinale said McCormick did not conspire with the other defendants and was not guilty of racketeering or extortion.

"My client, in accepting money, was wrong but it was not a felony. This was not an illegal conspiracy," he said during the trial. Cardinale said the officiers deserved disciplinary action from their department, but were not racketeers.

The seven officers convicted Tuesday were Thomas J. Connolly, John F. McCormick, Matthew A. Kilroe, Peter Boylan, Francis X. Sheehan and Kenneth J. Nave.

Much of the prosecution's case revolved around tape recordings made by the manager of the 1270, a downtown nightclub. Joseph McGowan became an FBI informant and the prosecution played 10 tape recordings of Nave, McCormick, Kilroe, Carey and Boylan discussing payoffs with mcGowan.

Defense attorney's challenged McGowan's credibility as a witness saying he had lied about being in the marines and about being blind in one eye. Judge A. David Mazzone refused to declare a mistrial after MoGowan testimony.

Election of Supreme Court clerk to be challenged by local group

BOSTON (AP) — Four Democrats will be vying for the job of Supreme Court clerk for Suffolk County in Thursday's primary, but a case under consideration by the high court could make the election meaningless.

The Civil Liberties Union asked the Supreme Court on Tuesday to declare that the general election would violate the constitutional rights of residents living outside Suffolk County. The group wants the court to issue an injunction against the election.

"In my view, this case turns on a single fact," argued Michael Greco, a past president of the Massachusetts Bar Association, on "whether election of the clerk by voters of a single county" violates the U.S. and Massachusetts constitutions.

Greco, representing the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, contended during court arguments that while the clerk's post is named the Supreme Court clerk for Suffolk County, it is actually a state-wide office.

A ruling from the court was not expected before Thursday's primary. However David Sullivan, chief counsel for the secretary of state's office, said his office has asked the court to make a decision before an Oct. 3 printing deadline for state ballots before the November election.

The four Democratic candidates are state Reps. Charles R. Boyle and Richard J. Rouse, and Michael James Reardon and Michael Ligotti. Since no Republicans have filed for the post, the democratic primary will virtually decide the successor to retiring clerk John E. Powers.

Under a 132-year-old state law, the clerk's post has been filled by elections confined to Suffolk County voters. The Supreme Court has another clerk who is appointed.

Greco said the 11 plaintiffs, including himself and other past state and Boston bar association presidents, "share our common fight . . . (in that) they are denied their constitutional right to vote (for the clerk) . . because they do not live in Suffolk County.

Cool spell aids forest firefighters

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, WY — (AP) Firefighters took advantage of a cold spell to make some headway against blazes that have devastated much of this famed park before hotter, drier weather returns.

"The fire people realize that things could heat up again this week," said fire information officer Sonya Capek. "The fires are still a threat, we are not out of it yet. We know there is some more fire time left in the season, but hopefully it won't be as intense."

Temperatures were only in the 40's yesterday while the force of some 8,000 firefighters worked to strenghthen existing firebreaks and prepare to protect the areas of Mammoth Hot Springs, and Gardiner and Jardine, Mont., if necessary. Jardine and park headquarters at Mammoth were evacuated before rain and snow fell over the weekend.

Updated forecasts for the area said the sky would be cloudy with highs rising to around 60 degrees and isolated showers expected.

In California, a fast-moving fire continued to burn out of control yesterday in the Gold Rush country of the Sierra Nevada foothills, but firefighters said much of it was contained.

That blaze, which covered 40 square miles early yesterday, has consumed about 150 buildings, including more than 90 homes, and forced the evacuation of more than 8,000 people.

The fire was spreading into an area east of Beale Air Force Base, a less populated area, and a forestry spokesman said firefighters may be able to spend less time protecting structures and devote more energy on containing the blaze.

But fire officials stressed that many houses were still in extreme danger, especially in Rough and Ready, a community of about 500 residents in the heavily wooded bottom of a steep canyon on the edge of the fire.

Elsewhere in California, fires burned in a remote section of Sonoma County, north of San Francisco, and in Del Norte County near the Oregon border.

Cutbacks have effect on EWC

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Budget slashing and program dormancy will plague the Everywoman's Center this semester in the wake of departmental cutbacks at the University of Massachusetts.

According to EWC Director Carol Wallace, the center has been ordered by the Department of Educational Access and Outreach to freeze one full-time position in addition to conserving $33,000 in professional staff money.

The center is absorbing approximately 50 percent of the cutbacks slated for DEAO, she said.

Wallace said the center will freeze the Women's Administration and General Educational Support (WAGES) position.

"WAGES is a program that helps older, non-traditional, prospective students who return to school. It's a population that is not served by the other agencies on campus that are geared to 18 to 22-year-olds," Wallace said.

"Freezing this position will impact the recruitment of this part of the population," she said.

Wallace said EWC will delay filling administrative vacancies in order to conserve the remainder of the $33,000 cutbacks not absorbed by WAGES.

"The rest will be saved by postponing filling the counseling program position and the public relations and outreach program position," she said. "Our choices were limited by what vacancies we had."

Counseling services will be postponed by EWC for this semester, but will return by spring term, Wallace said.

Wallace said there have been no developments in the administrative realignment of EWC recently proposed by the Tillis Commission, which reviewed minority student services at UMass this summer.

LSC case to be heard today in Boston

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

Three judges from the First Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston will be ultimately deciding today the fate of the Legal Services Center.

The hearing, scheduled for this afternoon, will decide whether or not the case will go to trial. Last fall, Boston US District Court Judge Joseph Tauro ruled the case did not warrant a trial.

Both sides will have a half an hour to present their arguments before the judges, and a decision will be announced at a later date.

Harry Miles, an attorney for the students, will be contending the abolition of the office was simply retaliation for prior successful lawsuits against the University.

Peter Ellis, the attorney for the administration and the trustees, will argue that the decision was in no way a violation of the students constitutional rights.

At issue is whether LSC should have the authority to represent students in the courtroom, a power which the Board of Trustees granted them in 1975.

Ten years later, the Board revoked the power from the center, then called the Legal Services Office, to represent students in cases against the University, and in the August of 1986 abolished all forms of representation altogether. The office was then renamed the Legal Services Center and had the power to only give free legal advice.

The students then filed a lawsuit claiming the trustees' decision was an infringement on their constitutional rights, but were ruled against in court by Tauro.

When the LSC had the power to represent students in the courtroom, the representation was free. The center's attorneys were University employees, were state-paid, and were considered part of the administration.

Video games vandalized

The janitorial staff working in the Hatch area discovered several video games in the Campus Center game room had been broken into with a screwdriver. Responding officers were able to recover $72.25 in quarters from the machines, and it is unknown at this time how much had been taken.

In other incidents:

- Employees of the People's Market in the Student Union reported Monday that $75 in cash had been stolen from their safe sometime since Sept. 9.
- On Monday a party reported their license plate had been stolen from their vehicle while parked in lot 44.
- A 38-year-old Amherst man was arrested on Montague Road yesterday and charged with driving while intoxicated and failing to stay within the marked lanes.

Northeast Area Government searches for new president, V.P., and treasurer

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Northeast Area Government officers are on the search for students who can fill the area government's top positions.

The elected president, Sandra Gallimore, did not return to school, and the vice president and treasurer positions were filled only by write-in votes. The students written-in have declined the positions.

People get intimidated by the responsibility of governing an area government of about 1,323 students and about $13,000, said Katy Tiernan, a former co-vice president.

However, former President Sara DeSimone said, "What you put into it you immediately see." She said the area government tends to produce immediate results whereas efforts in the Undergraduate Student Senate often get lost.

If former NEAG officers do not find a president, NEAG probably won't participate in the SGA, she said. The students will not be represented in the SGA and ratification of SGA legislation will go unattended, she said.

"That's what area government does. We represent the student. It's the only way we can deal with the administration," Tiernan said.

She said she did not feel the lack of competition to fill the offices is a statement of student dissatisfaction.

"It takes awhile to create something that is so visible that people want to get involved," she said.

Those interested in becoming a NEAG officer should contact Sara DeSimone, Peggy Mahoney, or Katy Tiernan.

The election to elect new officers will be Sept. 27.

Soviets main topic for Dukakis

CHICAGO (AP)— Democrat Michael Dukakis said yesterday the United States should encourage better Soviet relations but still deal firmly with any Soviet deception or aggression. Republican George Bush, emphasizing economic themes, said Americans are better off than when President Reagan took office.

Dukakis said of U. S. - Soviet relations, "We in America should stand ready to respond to progress with progress. But we must be ready to meet stubbornness with determination, deception with the truth and aggression with the full power of a strong and united democratic alliance."

His comments, continuing a week-long emphasis on foreign and military policy, came two days after he pledged support for the Stealth bomber, which he said was begun during a Democratic administration and would be completed during his own.

Bush, renewing his attack on Dukakis as too liberal for the presidency, said yesterday in a speech to the Executives' Club in Chicago that the Democrat supports a big-government philosophy that will leave "America shackled to the mistakes of the past."

In his remarks, Bush embraced Reagan principles of less government but also praised the idea of "economic empowerment," a phrase often used by Jesse Jackson, a Democrat generally considered more liberal than Dukakis.

Bush said that in addition to his stands against new taxes and in favor of a "flexible freeeze" on government spending, "the third principle is economic empowerment. The strength of our economy comes from the people, not from the government, from the creativity and initiative of the individual, not from official directives, five-year plans and so-called industrial policies."

Dukakis, in a speech to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations yesterday, said, "Yes, it would be naive to take (Soviet leader Mikhail) Gorbachev at his word, but it would be dangerous to allow his words to go unanswered and untested in the court of public opinion around the world."

He praised Reagan for the progress his administration has made on nuclear arms control but said too often the arms-reduction proposals came from the Soviet Union.

Haitian protesters admit to massacre, burn down church

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI (AP) - Hoodlums burned down a Roman Catholic chapel in a slum overnight after six self-proclaimed killers boasted on government television that they participated in Sunday's massacre at another church.

The Chapel of Immaculate Conception in the sprawling Cite Soleil slum burst into flames at 11 p. m. Monday and burned to the ground. Reporters who rushed to the scene were chased away by the arsonists, Radio-Soleil reported.

One of the men who appeared on television was recognized by a Radio Metropole reporter at the scene of chapel fire. Empty gasoline cans littered the area around the chapel.

The chapel is served by the Rev. Arthur Voleil, a Salesian priest known in Haiti for his work with the poor. The Salesian Fathers specialize in vocational training.

A Salesian vocational school was partially damaged on Sunday when St. Jean Bosco, the church of the Rev. Jean-Bertrand Aristie, another Salesian priest, was attacked by thugs armed with handguns, sharpened steel pikes and machetes. The assialants shot, stabbed and slashed at parishioners and then burned down the church and several vehicles parked outside.

Radio Haiti-Inter reported yesterday the casualty toll from Sunday's massacre had reached six dead and 77 wounded.

"The governemnt has committed a genocide on an unarmed people. It is for the international community to put a stop to it," Christian Democratic leader Sylvio Claude declared on Radio Metropole this morning.

Five men and a woman spoke on radio Metropole and Tele-Haiti Monday afternoon before appearing on Television Nationale, the government network, and declared they had participated in Sunday's massacre at Aristide's church.

The six made no attempt to hide their identity and spoke on the government-controlled network without apparent fear of reprisal.

They claimed the violence was related to an internal conflict within the church and threatened "a heap of corpses" at future Masses.

"We were after Father Aristide; what you saw yesterday (Sunday) was child's play. In whatever parish Father Aristide is accepted, a heap of corpses will attend that Mass," a spokesman for the group said on the Radio Metropole broadcast.

Aristide, one of the most popular figures among the poor masses in this Caribbean nation, regularly has preached against army atrocities and has led his supporters in street demonstrations.

Reagan signs fair housing enforcement bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan today signed a law strengthening the government's power to combat housing discrimination and hailed it as "the most important civil rights legislation, aims to make discrimination costly by imposing fines and extending protection to the handicapped and families.

"Discrimination is particularly tragic when it means a family is refused housing near good schools, a good job, or simply in a better neighborhood to raise children," Reagan said.

He said that the bill was "the product of years of bipartisan work" and that it "repaired a significant . . .defect" in the Civil Rights Act of 1968.

The new law, Reagan said, amounted to "the most important civil rights legislation in 20 years."

The original fair housing law, passed after the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., gave the federal government only a mediation role in settling housing disputes.

Flower said the battering will continue "until the courts stop thinking about their forefathers and start thinking about the mothers who are in there every day."

Every 22 days a woman is slain by her batterer, said Flowers. But, "when women kill their batterers, they are put away for life.

"Virginia was so alive, and I hope everyone keeps her alive. Women say they are afraid, and this is how the courts listen," she said.

Gatherers at the vigil said they came to offer support and to strive for change. "I'm here because it's not just a women's issue, but it's something that men better get a hell of a lot more concerned about," said Joseph Steigs, assistant director of admissions at Hampshire College.

A Memorial Fund for Virginia Ferrer has been established to help pay for legal expenses, funeral costs, and food and clothing for Ferrer's children. Contributions should be made payable to the fund and sent to Necessites/Necesidades, 16 Center Street, Northampton.

Allegiance for the flag...and?

I pledge allegiance to the flag,
Of the United States of America.
And to the Republic, for which it stands,
One nation, under God, indivisible,
With liberty and justice for all.

Meredith O'Brien

Patriotism — a noble quality to possess, correct? Let us define this word which we have heard so frequently during the election year.

Patriotism is thought to be the love of one's country,that undying feeling of loyalty and pride. People are willing to die in the name of patriotism to defend the very principles that our country is based upon. You would be considered to be a patriot by some if you love the flag, sing the "Star Spangled Banner" and eat Mom's apple pie. You would consider the Constitution as sacred as the family Bible.

Somehow, this sweet but idealistic sentiment has become a campaign issue, something that should be subjective, not objective. George Bush is attempting to play upon the country's emotional attachment to America (and everything it represents) and declare Michael Dukakis as "unpatriotic." In the year of the Olympics, when the citizen's love for the country emerges, Bush is painting a picture of a liberal candidate who will single-handedly try to defeat all aspects of traditional "patriotism."

Governor Michael Dukakis vetoed legislation in Massachusetts that would make the Pledge of Allegiance mandatory in public schools. For this action, Bush is declaring him "unpatriotic." Is this a realistic picture, and a well-founded accusation?

The Constitution is supposed to be the "highest law of the land," law that presidents take an oath to uphold. The Supreme Court have made numerous decisions saying the Pledge could not be made mandatory. (Originally the decision was made to protect pupils' freedom of religion.) In this country, the citizens have the right to express themselves individually. The citizens' rights would be violated if they were forced to pledge against their will.

Governor Dukakis is not saying he is against the Pledge of Allegiance; he opposes forcing it upon the people. That is not "unpatriotic." He is upholding a Supreme Court decision, whether or not he agrees with it.

Vice-President George Bush has said he would have passed the bill and suffer the consequences later. Bush is already prepared to violate Constitutional law and Supreme Court decisions. This is the pot calling the kettle black. By ignoring the Constitutional liberties, as Bush advocates, an essence of what this country stands for would be lost.

While both candidates are running around trying to find some semblance of real issues to throw at each other, they had best watch their accusations. Often times, the candidates wind up looking like hypocrites.

Odds and ends

Home sweet what?

Kevin Sullivan

I was looking forward to coming back. I even stayed at my mom's and stepfather's house in Worcester so the drive wouldn't be as long. I had everything packed. I was psyched to come back to UMass and Dickinson, the dorm I lived in last year.

Freshman year: looking back, it was the most exciting time of my life. My floor was what did it. My floor-mates were great, you could paint anything on your dorm door (such as a Greatful Dead logo), the bathrooms were co-ed, and round-robins were fun.

But now that's all but gone.

The people, veterans and newcomers, are great. But when I first walked back onto the floor, the shock almost sent me home. The doors were all painted baby blue, while the hall itself was oatmeal brown. We were lucky. Other halls were pink.

Then, at the floor meeting, I hyperventilated after finding out the bathrooms were no longer co-ed. When we were told there would be no floor parties, I thought about transferring.

I was disappointed to find so many radical changes occur in a place where I was so comfortable. I wouldn't have returned if I didn't like it so much. If anything, the door paintings and the co-ed bathrooms made things more interesting and relaxed. The women on the hall were like sisters and painting the doors was a way to show some individuality on an otherwise drab hallway. The round-robins? Well, they spoke for themselves.

What scares me most is I'm a sophmore now. I don't want to think about what it will be like in the dorm senior year. Already I'm having nightmares about checking into the dorm senior year.

I'm in the cluster office to check my clothes and milk crates for beer and any other contraband. I follow the mandatory clean-room policy and the nine o'clock curfew. I don't meet any women because all of Orchard Hill and Central are male, while Southwest and the other areas are female.

I keep telling myself this will never happen. But at this rate, who knows?

A parade of assumptions

The 60s were worth it

Stephen Bayer

"Will We Ever Get Over The 60's?" whined Newsweek in a recent cover story, once again conjuring up a miasma of conflicting emotions, images and opinions about an already controversial decade.

Never before in American history has a single 10-year period so profoundly entered and altered our national consciousness and then stubbornly refused to go away. Never before has a decade been able to so polarize Americans on the most basic issues relating to our own personal liberties and our nation's interests.

Like a trauma long repressed in our national subconscious, the spectre of the 60's abruptly releases itself when we're confronted with a symbol of that era. This time, the trigger was the furor over Republican vice-presidential nominee Dan Quayle's Vietnam-era service in the National Guard. Suddenly, the psychological gates opened and a flood of memories poured forth quickly followed by a barrage of questions aimed at public officials, who were asked "Where were you on the eve of the Vietnam War?"

Why this hypersensitivity to the 60's? What makes the thousands of Americans who grew up in and were influenced by this era suddenly want to purge it from the annals of history? Perhaps the attitude is merely a reflection on our current conservative mood and subsequent revulsion to anything that questions the status quo. For "The Sixties," that unwieldy block of time, was more than anything else a period of challenge and change.

But it is more than just change per se that so dismays the yuppie pack. Other periods of upheaval and transition are not met with nearly as much venom as are the 60's. Otherwise, we would expect articles titled "Will We Ever Get Over The Industrial Revolution?"

No, there's something peculiar about changes that occured in the 60's that sends the now-successful yuppies scurrying for cover beneath their tax shelters. Beneath all the "free-love, everybody-must-get-stoned" silliness, the truly oppressed were finally given a voice.

Most important, a vast number of Americans no longer supported the dictates of their leaders like blind sheep. Unlike the dead silence during the McCarthy years, for the first time vast numbers of people opposed the will of their leaders and a president who fueled a devastating and unjustified war. Assembling the masses behind a single national policy has been difficult ever since.

It is this legacy of diversity and protest the Reaganites are forced to deal with and that the shame-faced baby-boom generation has tried to trivialize into a Big Chill soundtrack. Conservatives would like to homogenize the population and return us all to a state of mindless, suppliant zombies. It's much easier to run a government when it's voice is the only one heard.

The 60's certainly bears its burden of excess (AIDS and crack will attest to that), but its spirit of protest lives on and is a tribute to democracy. Instead of reproaching the 60's, we should learn and build on it.

In other news

Since the Ayatollah Khomeini came to power a decade ago, Iran's stampmakers have made a habit of tweaking the American eagle's beak. One issue depicted the takeover of the U.S. embassy in Tehran, another the abortive 1980 attempt by an American rescue team to free the hostages. Iran has a new addition to its philatelic collection: a stamp illustrating July's shootdown of an Iranian airliner by a U.S. warship.

One such stamp came in the mail this month to International Pressure Service, a maker of high-tech aerospace equipment based in Urbana, Ohio. Inappropriately enough, the envelope contained a letter from an Iranian engineering professor requesting price and delivery information on material used in building aircraft.

Eleni show opens at gallery

The Student Union Gallery has opened the season with Eleni:

Art From the Discarded, an exhibition of sculpture created from the odds and ends of everyday life. The show opened yesterday, with a reception and an appearance by the Wellfleet-based artist, and will run until Sept. 30.

In this day and age when so much art is trash, it's a real kicker to see trash that's been turned into art. None of it is smelly garbage; mostly, it's disarded stuff, like chunks of old pianos, car parts, tin cans, bones, broken glass & mirrors, made into cool pieces with names like Fog, Icarus, Waterfall

Jimi Hendrix has layers of scrap wood in a bold background configuration with an old van mirror in the center, and rope dangling down. Cabinet of Dr. E. is an antique display case half-filled with trinkets.

Stop by the Student Union Gallery today and see these pieces for yourself. Eleni is a charming artist of Greek descent who works year-round on her sculpture in a tiny garage on Cape Cod. When finished, the pieces are stored in friends' basements and attics where they can age and rust. Go check it out today.

Freshman pre-med student, Rebecca Wolff peers at "Fog" at the opening of the Eleni exhibit yesterday.

Area theaters not tempted by Temptation

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Correspondent

Martin Scorcese's latest film The Last Temptation of Christ has created more controversy with audiences and members of the church than any film in the history of American cinema.

The film is an adaptation of the novel by Nikos Kazantsakis, which has been considered blashphemous for portraying Jesus Christ as a symbol of the flesh. The film, which is now playing at the Showcase Cinema in Springfield, (the only place in Western New England), is even more controversial and has provoked hostile reactions by members of the church.

Due to the film's controversy and threats from patrons and religious figures, managers and owners of movie theaters within the Pioneer Valley have had second thoughts about showing it.

John Morrison, manager of the Pleasant St. Theatre in Northampton wasn't intimidated by those who wished to pan the film.

"The main reason we wanted to show the film was because it's a major film by a reputable director. And before its release at the Ziegfield in New York City, the film was primarily aimed at art houses. Then came the hype. However we felt it should be judged on its own merit."

Morrison also stated that the reputation of the film means higher rental fees, which would be too much for the theater to handle financially.

Dwayne Robinson, director of the Academy of Music, a theater not only famed for selection of quality films, but historical value, has taken the issue seriously. "The Academy of Music cannot show The Last Temptation of Christ because of the way we're set up. We're run by Northampton and its citizens. We're a gift governed by a deed of gift. This deed spells out, in fact, that we cannot show a film which has created this type of controversy."

Robinson concluded by criticizing the protestors who haven't seen the film. "I will not comment on the film or its controversy because I have not seen it. Furthermore, it irritates me that most of the opinions voiced against the film are from those who haven't, or refuse to see it."

Three weeks ago, the managers of AMC Theaters) said that: "...It will not play AMC movie complexes, due to the films controversy." Yet, other sources have confirmed that Universal Pictures, the official distributor of the film, and AMC have both changed their minds and the film will be in mall theaters soon.

A spokesman for AMC Theaters at the Hampshire mall in Hadley said, "We don't know as of yet whether we're getting the film." He would not conment any further on the subject.

Now it seems that the only theater willing to even take the risk for Scorcese's film in the Northampton/Amherst area is the Calvin theater on King street in Northampton. "Any theater that dares to show it gets threats, petitions and sanctions" said a spokesperson for the Calvin. "When it was known that we had an interest in showing the film, we got lots of threats from long time patrons, particularly those who come to the Calvin as a family, threatening never to come back or support the theater. Some theaters have even gotten bomb threats." Still, the Calvin would be delighted to view the film, and has yet to meet with officials in Boston to make an official decision, the spokesperson said.

Should other movie houses in the Amherst/Northampton area show The Last Temptation of Christ? Send in your opinion to the arts desk at the Collegian in care of Jennifer, Cosmo or Kathy.

Boss speaks out with Amnesty and new EP

By SCOTT HYMAN
Collegian Correspondent

When Bruce Springsteen broadcasted his "Tunnel of Love Express Tour" across the globe on July 3rd of this year, he announced his joining of the "Amnesty International Human Rights Now! Tour" with Sting, Tracy Chapman, Peter Gabriel and others. To support the event, a new, four-track EP, Chimes of Freedom has been released, with the majority of the profits supporting Amnesty International USA.

The EP's first track, "Tougher Than The Rest," (from the Tunnel of Love LP) and "Be True," an old B-side, wonderfully incorporate the five-piece brass section Springsteen added to the trademark E-Street Band sound for the new tour. Both songs illustrate the new twist the Boss has been taking in his lyric writing, from homages to cars and girls to insight on the problems of relationships.

Springsteen speaks briefly on the EP about his joining the Amnesty tour before a cover of Bob Dylan's "Chimes of Freedom." The track was recorded live in Stockholm, Sweden from the July 3rd show.

It is not the Dylan cover, however, that is the gem of the EP. The last track is a slow version of the classic "Born to Run." He performs the song in a Dylan-esque fashion with only an acoustic guitar and harmonica. The number has been the show-stopper throughout the current tour, in which he introduces the song as his favorite. Though not on the EP, Springsteen has been talking about the song on the tour as a way of life he thought he wanted to live when he wrote the song at age 24, but in hindsight, feels otherwise.

For the avid Springsteen fan, the EP is a must-buy simply for the version of "Born to Run." Those who wish to support Amnesty International will find it an inexpensive ($3.50-4.00) way of supporting Human Rights Now!

Young Fresh Fellows play Sheehan's tonight.

Seattle band brings fun to Sheehan's

Somewhere between The Jam and The Replacements are Seattle garage rockers The Young Fresh Fellows (they even played at Paul Westerberg's wedding).

You can determine for yourself tonight when they appear at Sheehan's in Northampton.

The four-man band have just released their fourth album Totally Lost and their local hit "Everything's Gonna Turn Out Great" has made national airwaves.

Singer Scott McCaughey, drummer Tad Hutchinson, guitarist Chuck Carrol and bassist Jim Sangster have also made a move on college charts with their manic antics and irreverent odes — their most recent "Amy Grant," a song for and about the Christian rock singer.

The Young Fresh Fellows will strut their satirical stuff tonight at 9 p.m. with Check, Please as opener.

The UMass Arts Council

Founded in 1966, the Arts Council fosters excellence and scope in the arts on campus. The Arts Council's activities include:

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR THE ARTS
Through two granting programs, the Arts Council supports RSOs, campus galleries, the Residential Arts Program, and other UMass groups that present arts events and programs.

ARTS INFORMATION
Every two weeks, the Arts Council publishes the Arts Calendar, a listing of arts activities on the Five College campuses. The calendar is available at galleries, box offices, and information centers at all five colleges.

ARTS MANAGEMENT TRAINING
The Arts Council supports arts management courses and internships for UMass students through a program offered by the Arts Extension Service, 545-2360. On Sept. 27 and Oct. 4 the Student Activities Office and the Arts Council will offer two workshops in program design and management, grantswriting, etc.

PUBLIC ART
The Arts Council is actively involved in expanding the public art collection at UMass. The Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library, an exhibition space for UMass faculty and students, will host an opening reception on September 20. The Council has commissioned landscape architects and artists to redesign the Student Union Plaza and Metawampe Lawn. A memorial to our first sitting-president, William Smith Clark, was designed by a student and is expected to be built this coming summer. This year students are being invited to design a commemorative garden to Helen Curtis Cole, the University's first and only Dean of Women. The garden is proposed for a site between Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

The Arts Council is funded primarily by a portion of the Arts Fee. The Council includes undergraduate and graduate students, alumni, faculty, and professional staff representatives.

Scruffy plays Iron Horse tonight

By AL ARPAD
Collegian Correspondent

Scruffy the Cat is a good band. Go see Scruffy the Cat; drink Budweiser and wear a Shriner's hat.

Scruffy the Cat came to Boston from Iowa, or at least some of them did. In Iowa, many people still listen to Hank Williams and Patsy Cline. This is all right, if you like Hank Williams and Patsy Cline, which many people in Iowa do.

Scruffy the Cat came to Boston after a fairly successful period playing rock and roll, as well as Williams and Cline songs, in bars on both sides of Interstate 80. Back then, they were called, "The Law."

Charlie Chesterman is the lead singer for Scruffy the Cat. One problem with living in Iowa is that people in bars almost never want to hear bands playing songs that were written by a lead singer, unless the lead singer is Williams, or maybe Cline. Charlie writes lots of good songs, so he and a bass player named Mac came to Boston.

Mac's whole name is MacPaul Stanfield, and he and Charlie found three guys in Boston named Stephen Fredette (guitars), Stona Fitch (keyboards, banjo), and Randall Lee Beigson the Fourth (drums). All these guys wanted to be in a band, which is not unusual in Boston. The only unusual thing was that they wanted to be in a band with somebody who liked Hank Williams and Patsy Cline. They called the band Scruffy the Cat, and it was good.

Nobody knows why Scruffy the Cat became extremely popular in Boston, because they almost never sang songs about hate, death, and the psychotic adolescent traumas, all of which were very much the rage in Boston at that time. Instead, they sang loud and irreverent songs about happiness, tigers and being shy. For some reason, people liked that.

A while ago, Stona Fitch quit. After that, Burns Stanfield, Mac's brother, started playing keyboards for the band. Even though he's a minister, he doesn't seem to mind that everyone drinks Budweiser, so he's all right.

Scruffy the Cat played in a lot of bars before they finally got a record deal, but that was all right, because they don't really mind playing in bars. In 1986, Scruffy the Cat put out a fairly low-budget EP called High Octane Revival on the Relativity label. That record was so good, Relativity spent some money on the Tiny Days LP, which came out in 1987. They put out another EP the same year, called Boom Boom Boom Bingo. The next record is scheduled to come out September 16, and it will probably be good, too.

Since they released all those records, Scruffy the Cat has been playing in even more bars than they did before, but mostly in places like California and South Carolina. Tonight, they will play at the Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton, which is sort of like a bar.

Go see Scruffy the Cat. Tickets are $7.00 in advance, and there are two shows, at 7:00 and 10:00. Maybe they will even play a song by Hank Williams or Patsy Cline.

Godspell auditions open

Theater opportunities abound in the university community, and for those who wish to become involved in theatrical productions in the five-college area the latest opportunity is here.

According to Randy Todd Elkinson, a member of the University of Massachusetts Musical Theater Guild, Godspell will be performed during late October in Bowker Auditorium. Elkinson, who will direct the production, said the Guild expects about 100 students to audition for the 10 to 12 available roles.

"Nobody should be discouraged in auditioning (for these parts)," Elkinson said, stressing that all five-college students are eligible.

He said applications for backstage, lighting, make-up, and costumes can be filled out during the auditions, which will be held at 8 p.m. Thursday in the Campus Center Auditorium, and 12 p.m. Saturday in Campus Center room 101.

Elkinson said having a part in a production involves rehearsals from 7-11, Sunday through Thursday.

The results of auditions will be posted Saturday evening in Student Union Room 428.

Last semester's production was Little Shop of Horrors, which Elkinson said was very successful.

"They performed to a full house every night," he said.

The Guild has been in existence for 53 years, according to Elkinson, and stages an average of one major production per semester.

pus. He also said he does not forsee any problems with the Board approving the new version.

Student leaders and administrators have worked on the revisions of the CSC all summer. According to Shari Silkoff, co-president of the Student Government Association, most of the problems have been with the wording of some passages.

One of those passages concerns interim suspension, when the University has the right to suspend a student on disciplinary matters before a hearing.

The old passage stated "Interim restrictions may include, but are not limited to, the following: (1) suspension, (2) assignment to alternate housing, (3) limitation of access to designated University housing facilities..."

According to Silkoff, the passage was changed to "suspension in case of imminent danger."

"We wanted the words 'in case of imminent danger' in case of potential abuse," she said. With the revision, a student can not be suspended immediately unless he or she poses an imminent danger to those surrounding him or her, she said.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said she does not expect any opposition to the revisions at the committee meeting today.

"Most of our problems have been cleared up," she said. "There really shouldn't be any major conflict."

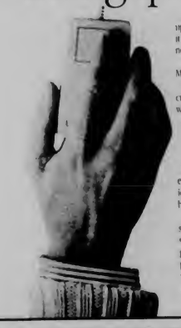
Orefice said although the student leaders did not get all the changes they wanted they are satisfied with the proposal.

"We are not jumping up and down about it, but we got a compromise," she said.

If the revisions get approved at the committee meeting today, it then goes before the Executive Committee and then to the Board of Trustees.

The Board of Trustees is made up of twelve committees that meet throughout the year and have different responsibilities. The Committe on Academic and Student Affairs has as one of its duties to consider policy matters pertaining to student life and activities. The Executive Committee has to consider and recommend to the Board the revision of rules and regulations for the governance of students and activities.

Get a grip on your homework.



Homework has a rusty way of piling up, doesn't it? One day, you feel on top of it all—the next, you're behind on your notes, your research, your term paper.
Our advice: Get in front of a Macintosh™ computer.
True, it may not turn a lifelong procrastinator into an overachiever. But it will make an enormous difference in how quickly you can write, rewrite, and print your assignments.
Not only will a Macintosh change the way you look at homework, it'll change the way your homework looks—with an endless variety of type styles, and graphics that'll make your professors think you bribed a friend in art school.
And as for all those classroom scribblings, research notes, and assorted scraps of paper that litter your desk, we give you HyperCard™—an amazing new program that provides an easy way to store, organize, and cross reference each and every bit of information. (HyperCard is included free with every Macintosh.)
Macintosh is so easy to learn, you can master it in just an evening. And as a full time student, you can buy one now for a very special price.
So come in and get your hands on a Macintosh today.
Before your homework slips completely through your fingers.

Bourque assumes leadership role on and off ice

WILMINGTON (AP) — Ray Bourque of the Boston Bruins has won the Norris Trophy as the National Hockey League's best defenseman twice. So has Paul Coffey of the Pittsburgh Penguins.

Coffey won it in 1985 and 1986 as a member of the Edmonton Oilers. Bourque won it in 1987 and 1988 while Coffey's seasons were shortened by a back injury and unhappiness that led to his trade from the Oilers.

"The second one was nice," said Bourque, "but I'd really love to get that third one. It would mean a lot more to me because Coffey will be healthy from the beginning of the season."

Bourque is starting his 10th season with the Bruins, and his first as the sole captain of the team, an honor and duty he shared with Rick Middleton for three years. He's been picked for the first or second All-Star teams in each of his nine seasons.

"In spite of it, his arrival at the Bruins' training camp was unobtrusive.

"I didn't see him all summer," said General Manager Harry Sinden, "and I met him the other night and he was as shy as he was eight years ago. You can't tell from watching him play; he doesn't play shy."

Bourque has blossomed into the leader of the Bruins, on and off the ice, that coach Terry O'Reilly has been seeking.

"When he first got here, he was kind of like Bobby Orr," said O'Reilly. "You remember how quiet and shy Bobby was. If you were interviewing him, you could hardly hear him talk.

"But when he stepped on the ice and put the puck on the stick, you could see the confidence oozing out of him. Ray was like that on the ice. It was like he was saying, 'I'm on the ice now; I'm at home.'

"Now it's starting to carry off the ice. Ray is the force in the locker room now."

While Bourque has one eye on a third straight Norris Trophy, he has the other one on an even more important one, the Stanley Cup. The Bruins went into the finals last spring before losing to Edmonton. In four previous seasons, they bowed out to Montreal in the first round.

"It used to be no one would talk to me too much about hockey," said Bourque, who spends the off-season in his Montreal home. "Every now and then someone would ask, 'What happened?' I'd shut him up quick.

"This summer everyone was telling me how well we played. It was a lot of fun."

Rice, Bosox slam O's; AL East lead now at 4 1/2

BOSTON (AP) — Jim Rice hit his eighth career grand slam and the Boston Red Sox beat the Baltimore Orioles, 6-4 Tuesday night for their seventh victory in nine games.

Lee Smith got his 25th save, helping the Red Sox maintain their lead in the American League East. Boston is 4½ games ahead of New York. They began the day with a 3 1/2-game margin over Detroit and a 4 1/2-game edge over New York.

Mike Smithson, 8-5, gave up two runs on four hits in 5⅔ innings. The Orioles scored twice in the eighth against Bob Stanley on doubles by Joe Orsulak, Eddie Murray and Larry Sheets, before Smith relieved for the final four outs.

Rice spoiled the major league debut of Pete Harnisch with his 12th home run of the season. Wade Boggs bagan the Boston third with a double and Mike Greenwell and Ellis Burks walked with two outs, loading the bases.

Rice, who struck out on three pitches in the second inning, ran the count to 2-2 and then hit a tremendous drive high off the light tower about the 379-foot mark in left-center for his homer.

Harnisch, a right-hander drafted from Fordham University in June 1987, gave up five runs on six hits in seven innings.

The Red Sox added another run in the seventh on doubles by Jody Reed and Boggs. Boggs' 40th double this year left him just eight hits shy of becoming the first player in this century to reach 200 hits in six consecutive years.

Rice singled in the eighth and Reed got an RBI single, his third hit of the game.

In the Orioles' fourth, Murray singled, Sheets walked and Mickey Tettleton hit a two-run double.

Field hockey travels to B.C. to battle the Eagles

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team was not tested in its 4-1 win over Springfield College last Saturday.

But the Minutewomen will be faced with a pretty stern test of its ability tonight, when they travel to Chestnut Hill to face Boston College at 7 p.m.

Tonight's game is not the only battle concerning the Minutewomen, however. The biggest controversy surrounding UMass in this young season is the fight for the starting goalie position.

Senior Sue Desmond and senior Cindy Cox have fought it out for the job in the first month of the season, but neither has solidified a spot as the No. 1 goaltender.

Cox started in UMass' opening game win over Springfield and was impressive. She recorded seven saves, while giving up only one goal.

Desmond did not see any action in the game. One factor that is working against her is her experience. Desmond has been a backup goaltender since coming to UMass and has not seen any meaningful minutes in goal.

On the other side, Cox was a three year starter for Purdue University before transferring to UMass for her senior year.

But Desmond has been given a fair shot at the position and still has a chance to win the position from Cox, who seems to have a slight edge. Another possibility is to rotate the goaltenders.

"This season who will play in goal will be determined by who plays well in practice, what our opponent will do, what we think they'll do. I think Cindy is a little stronger at this point so I think she has a slight edge," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

Whichever goalie gets the nod tonight will have a big job to do. BC was not a nationally ranked team last year, nor were they one of the top teams in New England.

"We are going to be tested by BC even though they have not traditionally been a strong opponent in New England. This is almost as important as opening the season or closing the season," Hixon said.

One contrast between last years game, which the Minutewomen won 2-1 at Totman Field, is that BC's field is artificial turf as opposed to the natural grass of Totman.

Because of the turf, Hixon will not use the same combinations of players that she inserted into the game on Saturday. The smooth carpet will make the game faster paced than it is on grass.

"We'll either go with our starting lineup or we'll go with three midfielders instead of two," Hixon said. "We need some speed, we need our best ballhandlers, we need our best passers in the game. On turf there is far more possession than on grass so we're looking to pick them up with our strongest lineup of the people who can control the ball the best."

One area where Hixon wants to improve from the opening game is on the penalty corners. Senior co-captain Ruth Vasapolli and senior Julie Stuart have been the Minutewomen's best corner combo over the last year.

"On turf, because the ball moves faster, there's a greater chance that the ball is going to go out of bounds and that no one is going to get to it and touch it for the rebound," Hixon said. "So we want to get a little closer to the goal, we want to use a lot more finesse of our skills to draw more penalty corners."

The Minutewomen won't be digging up the grass when they travel to Boston College today. The Eagles play on artificial turf, which will make for a high speed shoot-out between the two teams.

UMass will be tested by a tall team

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team may be unbeaten (1-0) and untied, but it is also untested so far in this young season.

Tonight's match, at Totman Gymnasium, 7 p.m., against Central Connecticut State University will test the Minutewomen in a crucial area — in front and above the net.

The Lady Blue Devils possess more height than the Minutewomen, with a line-up close to 5'8' in average height.

"One good thing for us is that this will be an opponent that will help us improve our hitting around a big block, and it will give us a chance to work on our blocking," UMass coach Carol Ford said.

Blocking was the weak spot for the Minutewomen in their first match on Sunday. They recorded only three blocks in four sets against the University of Hartford, but Ford said practices this week were dedicated to improving the block.

"I'm not worried (about getting beat on the block) because we are keeping things very simple," she said.

The Minutewomen are also hoping for the return of senior Juliet Primer. She missed the opening match (for medical reasons) but may be ready to play tonight. Ford said she would make the decision whether Primer could play after yesterday's practice.

Primer could aid the Minutewomen up front against the Lady Blue Devils.

"The difference (when Primer is playing) is, having Juliet in he middle puts Julie Smith on the outside where she is used to, and that puts Chris (McEnroe) on the right side, where she is used to," Ford said.

Central Conn. will face the Minutewomen with only three seniors, however, they do have six talented freshman (only two of which are shorter than 5'9').

"(Central Conn.) is a good, competitive New England program," Ford said.

And, although Ford said "we still have to play hard to beat them," she also said "we have to beat teams of this caliber if we want to be competitive against conference teams." Although it is still early in the year, Central Conn. has the edge on UMass in games played already. The Lady Blue Devils are 2-6 this season.

"They've played a bunch of matches but that's a small factor," Ford said.

She also said she was pleased with how much her team learned in its only match. The Minutewomen were stung by Hartford, losing the first set to the Hawks, but they pulled together and won the next three sets.

"Losing that first game is even more important than winning the first match. It woke them up," Ford said.

Men's soccer will try to tame the Wildcats

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

The opening night reviews are in, and the news is pretty good.

Sunday's 1-0 defeat of the Maine Black Bears launched the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team on a positive note, as coach Jeff Gettler's squad played decent team defense, controlled the ball effectively in the middle third of the field, and created plenty of scoring opportunities.

The Minutemen now enter the dark recesses of their scary schedule, again coming face to face with large wildlife. UMass will entertain the Wildcats of the University of New Hampshire today, the first of three contests in the next five days that will test the team's stamina and toughness. If the Minutemen hope to crack the New England Regional top 10 rankings sometime soon, and finish this homestand atop the Atlantic-10 standings, a win today is a must.

"We can make or break our season in this week," said assistant coach John Martin, "We're taking no games lightly."

"This game will show if we're a mature team or not," said Gettler. "If we're going to be a good team, we have to play at a very high level (today)."

The UNH program has rebounded in recent years, under the guidance of head coach Ted Garber, son of UMass lacrosse guru Dick Garber. The Wildcats will bring a 1-1 record to town, fresh from a 3-0 whipping at the hands of the University of Rhode Island Saturday. The loss followed a season-opening 2-1 overtime defeat of Central Connecticut State University.

The Wildcats feature junior midfielder Scott Brennan, who scored both goals against UMass the last time these two teams met, a 2-2 duel last October in Durham, N.H. Brennan, who notched both goals in this season's only UNH victory, led the team with 23 points last year, and was an All-New England selection at year's end.

The Minutemen will attempt to foil Brennan with a team approach, the same defensive philosophy that shut out the Black Bears on Sunday.

"The focus at the beginning of the season is to get our defending together. We have to show that we're a sound defensive team that will not give away goals, like we did last year," explained Gettler. "We have to shut down Scott Brennan. If we defend, we'll win."

UMass will have to score as well. Forwards Steve Cesnek, Carl Hanks, and Louis Hollmeyer spent plenty of time in the right places against Maine, but capitalized just once.

"I thought we missed at least five goals, in addition to the one we had," said Gettler of Sunday's effort.

The UMass attack will be looking to pound the ball past sophmore goaltender Eric Stinson, who allowed just 1.14 goals per game last season.

Men's tennis set for UNH in opener

Rain-out on 1st day

By JIM CUMMINGS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team and its coach Manny Roberts will have to wait until today to begin the 1988 season. Due to rain, yesterday's scheduled opener with Skidmore College was cancelled.

With that match washed out Roberts has turned his attention to today's opponent— the University of New Hampshire.

"We beat them last year and have a better than average chance of beating them again if everyone plays well," Roberts said.

UNH is not expected to be the toughest opponent of a four match homestand which consists of matches against Boston University, the University of Connecticut, and Central Connecticut State University.

Despite this the team is not looking past their opening matches.

Returning senior Homberto Soto said, "We're definitely ready for them and set to begin the season."

Roberts is looking forward to, hopefully, stringing together a couple of important victories here at home. That would give the players some much needed momentum to carry them into either the New England or ECAC tournament.

Today's match against UNH is will start at 3 p.m. and there is no word on whether the match with Skidmore will be rescheduled.

The Boston Red Sox moved farther into first place and a couple of steps closer to clinching the American League East title last night. With their win over Baltimore (see page 15) and Detroit's loss to Toronto, the Red Sox' magic number is now 14, meaning any combination of Boston wins or losses by the second place team will put the Sox in the playoffs.

Rugby clashes with Army to open 20th year

The Rugby Club, entering its 20th year as a club sport at the University of Massachusetts, gives students the opportunity to play in one of the country's fastest growing sports.

Rugby combines athletic skill, endurance and sheer physical strength. It feature two teams of 15 men on a pitch slightly larger than a football field, playing two 40-minute halves of non-stop action.

Currently, the club has 60 members, and, unlike other sports, everyone plays each weekend. Practices are held Tuesday through Thursday from 4 to 6 p.m. on the rugby pitches on the lower Boyden Fields.

All University men are welcome, regardless of physical stature or intelligence.

The UMass Rugby Club opens its season Sunday at 12:30 p.m. against Army.

SGA members defend meeting closed to public

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Numerous reactions have surfaced concerning a closed meeting of the Student Government Association Coordinating Committee last Thursday.

The meeting moved into executive session to discuss alleged misuse of funds by SGA Budgets Committee Chairman Gil Penchina. Penchina said he was testing the system to see if violations were possible and point them out.

The move into executive session barred anyone, including the Collegian, from the meeting.

Collegian Editor in Chief Pedro Pereira said this was a violation of the Massachusetts open-meeting law, and has asked the Hampshire County District Attorney's Office to investigate the case. [Related story, page 16]

Pereira's complaint is that Robert Fadel, who presided over the meeting, did not follow the specific procedure to enter into executive session.

The SGA follows Robert's Rules of Order, a set of rules for meetings of governmental bodies. These rules contain no provisions for entering into executive session. There are also no rules in the SGA constitution or bylaws to cover open meetings or executive session.

State law requires a specific reason be stated for the move into executive session; a roll call vote be taken; and the person involved be asked if he would like the meeting to remain open. Pereira said these steps were not taken.

But the law applies only to "governmental bodies" as defined by state law, and some area lawyers and student government officials say the SGA is not a governmental body as defined by state law, therefore the law does not apply to it.

Attorney Michael Pill said, in his opinion, the SGA is not a governmental body as defined by the state and does not fall under the open meeting law.

Pill said the SGA "exists within the framework of the University," and is not a governmental body. "A case like this has not been decided conclusively by any court in Massachusetts," Pill said.

State law defines a governmental body as "every board, commission, committee or subcommittee of any district, city, region or town, however elected, appointed or otherwise constituted."

Shari Silkoff, SGA co-president said: "I would say we are a governmental body. However, if people want to get technical, our constitution has never been approved by the Board of Trustees, therefore we are not." Silkoff said she thought Fadel had done nothing wrong in calling the executive session.

The SGA constitution has not been ratified by the Board of Trustees, but Pill said this would not make a difference.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice agreed: "According to the way the Board of Trustees and the University looks at us, we're not a governmental body."

Said Pereira: "If the district attorney's office decides that they are not a governmental body then we have a more serious problem - who are they accountable to?"

Pereira said he had asked for the investigation because he believed the open meeting law had been violated. "Since no minutes were taken, we want to make sure procedures were followed.

About Fadel's allegedly not following the open meeting law Orefice said: "I don't think it's fair to fault him for not knowing the exact letter of the state law."

Fadel, SGA speaker, said he was concerned that the issue of alleged student fund misuse by Penchina had been overshadowed by the open meeting controversy.

"We're being up-front with what's being done with the funds," Fadel said. "I'm not going to take it personally, but I think the issue was taken too far."

Senator Howard Dreyfus expressed his opinion on the controversy: "I really don't know if I see the necessity of going into executive session, but I feel the Collegian has made a larger deal out of it than it is."

Senator Todd Lever expressed a similar concern, saying it was appropriate to move into executive session to protect the coordinating committee and the integrity of Gil Penchina.

Ex-attorney general discovered trespassing in his former office

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police late Tuesday night found former Student Government Association Attorney General Bill Collins trespassing into the office he once occupied.

Executive Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson said, "To the best of my knowledge there were no charges." He also said the case is closed, and police are not conducting an investigation.

Around 11:09 p.m. police responded to the call which came from SGA Co-president Shari Silkoff.

When officers arrived at the attorney general's office, "Collins was in possession of a key that he refused to surrender to police," Hilson said.

Collins, whose term as attorney general expired in the spring, said the key was lent to him by one of his former assistants who still works in the office.

Silkoff said the office of attorney general is currently vacant, and SGA officers have tried to retrieve the keys to the office that are in the possession of Collins' assistants.

Hilson said the police ordered the locks recored at the request of Silkoff.

Silkoff said she had originally requested the locks to be recored in June, and the police informed her during the incident that an emergency request would be seriously considered because of the original request.

She said she and other student government officials were looking into filing charges against Collins with the UMass police and/or the Dean of Students Office.

There are complications concerning where the charges should be filed because Collins' status as a student is in question, she said.

Collins, editor in chief of the Minuteman newspaper, said he was in the office, so he could make phone calls, something he can not do from the Minuteman office because the paper has no phones.

The paper used to use Republican Club phones before the Student Activities Office had them shut off after the Club was kicked out of the space.

Silkoff said she realized Collins was on the phone when she noticed a line lit on the phone in her office. She had a suspicion it was Collins, so she walked to the attorney general's office where she found the door open, she said. Without going to the office she could hear Collins' voice, she said.

Collins contradicted Silkoff's statement. He said she knew he was using the phone because she was listening to his conversations via a phone in the president's office. The phone system on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building is set up so this is possible.

Silkoff and Collins have a history of opposing each other. Most recently Collins spearheaded an attempt to block Silkoff and her co-president Jason Rabinowitz from holding the office of SGA president.

CLOUDING UP — Hurricane Gilbert, which battered the resorts of the Yucatan Peninsula yesterday with 160 mph winds and torrential rains, is sweeping toward the United States. Thousands of Mexicans fled coastal areas for shelters inland.

Yesterday, residents along the Gulf Coast of Texas, 560 miles to the north, stockpiled food and supplies and prepared to evacuate. Robert Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center in Florida, said early yesterday he expects Gilbert to make landfall on the Texas-Louisiana coast in 36 to 48 hours.

Report: Public schools in gloomy financial state

BOSTON (AP) At its first meeting of the 1988-89 school year, the state Board of Regents heard a gloomy assessment Tuesday of the operating budget used to run the public higher education system.

All things are not rosy. The thorns this year are particularly big," said Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer, calling the current $752 million appropriation "one of the most difficult operating budgets" in his experience.

In a report to the board, which sets policy for the state-wide system, Joseph Finnegan, the vice chancellor for fiscal affairs, told the Regents that the system will need at least $67 million, and probably $100 million, in next year's budget to keep the system sound.

Finnegan produced figures showing that the higher education budget increased from $560 million in fiscal 1985, to $626 million in 1986, to $722 million in 1987.

But in fiscal 1988, which ended on June 30, appropriations rose to just $735 million, after the Dukakis administration forced $20 million in savings through year-end "reversions."

The current budget for fiscal 1989 is $752 million, which Finnegan said represented the first decrease he could recall, compared to the original 1988 figure of $755 million.

Finnegan said the chancellor's staff has identified some $36 million in "critical needs" along with a $22 million inflation adjustment and $9 million needed because a government accounting practice demands budgeting for a "53rd week" in fiscal 1990.

Those considerations alone, he said, mean the regents must be prepared to fight for an increase in next year's budget of $67 million. With rising energy costs and other priorities, the need could be at least $100 million more.

That pent-up demand for spending drew some sharp questioning from Regent Joseph Henson of Prime Computer.

"Aren't we just kidding ourselves?" Henson asked, suggesting that current spending amounted to "rolling forward" obligations in hopes that the budget improves. "This is just delaying dealing with the situation."

"We are rolling ourselves into a problem in fiscal '90," Finnegan agreed. He suggested that one budget goal for next year would be a figure of $788 million, an amount, he noted, that was endorsed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for the current year before state revenues turned downward last spring.

Gunman holds 11, frees them unharmed

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A gunman took 11 hostages at a military recruiting station Wednesday but freed them unharmed hours later after two radio stations agreed to air a statement asserting his goal was "peace in Lebanon."

He surrendered moments later, shortly before 2 p.m. No one was injured.

The unidentified gunman, who had described himself as "a local person of Lebanese descent," was armed with an AK-47, an automatic rifle that is standard issue in Communist countries, said police Lt. C.M. Schesventer.

Police negotiated by telephone with the man, who had claimed two armed companions, but police learned from freed captives there was only one gunman.

The 11 captives — nine military personnel and two civilians — included a high school senior enlisting in the service, said Schesventer.

Hostages began coming out, alone and in pairs, about every 10 minutes shortly after radio stations WRNL-AM and WRXL-FM twice aired a message at the gunman's demand around noon, said Marianne Jennings, news director at the station.

"There is a hostage situation at the Tuckernuck Square Shopping Center," the statement read. "There have been no injuries. Negotiations are proceeding. The hostage takers have so far been cooperative. They're holding an undetermined number of people. The hostage-takers goal is peace in Lebanon."

Benefits of TV disclosed

UMass study: tv may help kids

By JOYCE GRADY
Collegian Correspondent

A study conducted by University of Massachusetts Psychology Professor Daniel Anderson contradicts the popular belief that television viewing is harmful to children.

The research done by Anderson and graduate student Patricia Collins was produced for the Department of Education, and addressed the concern that television was hampering children's intellectual capabilities. After extensive researching however, Anderson claims the opposite to be true.

He said the idea of television as "a medium totally mesmerizing and engrossing with no thought taking place" is wrong.

"There are a number of studies that show children actively engage in attempts to understand the (TV) program," Anderson said. "When children talk about TV, a lot of the discussion is what will happen next and the plausibility in real life."

His report shows little evidence supporting the idea that television displaces other intellectual activities. He said he found that before television came along, only a third of children engaged in reading as a leisure time activity, and today, that number remains the same.

The report states that homework is often done with TV viewing. "There is no evidence that homework done during television viewing is of lower quality than homework done in silence," the report says.

The report also contradicts the popular belief that television slows down the learning process. In fact, the report states television can help increase attention-focusing capabilities, and educational programs can help to increase vocabulary skills.

Violent programming, however, can decrease attention and perserverence in problem solving, according to the report. Television, therefore, must be used wisely, he said.

LSC arguments presented in Boston

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

It may take as long as six months before the First Circuit Court of Appeals issues a ruling to decide the fate of the Legal Services Center at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst.

During a hearing in Boston yesterday, attorneys from both sides had 15 minutes to present their arguments and answer questions from the judges, said Joanne Mei, chairwoman of the LSC governing board.

According to Mei, the panel of judges was very scrutinizing in their questioning of the lawyers.

"Both lawyers were asked heated questions by the judges," Mei said.

She said there is no way of knowing how the judges are going to decide and all there is to do now is wait.

At issue is whether the LSC should have the authority to represent students in court, a power the Board of Trustees granted the center in 1975.

In the summer of 1986, the board revoked the power from the center, then called the Legal Services Office, to represent students in cases against the University and in August of 1987 abolished all forms of representation altogether.

The office was then renamed the Legal Services Center and had the power to only give free legal advice, which it still does today.

Student leaders then filed a lawsuit against the administration and the Board of Trustees, claiming the trustees' decision was an infringement on their constitutional rights. Boston US District Court Judge Joseph Tauro ruled last fall the case did not warrant a trial.

Compromise sought on code's wording

It is back to the drawing board for student leaders and administrators for further discussion of revisions for the Code of Student Conduct at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Agreement couldn't be reached on the wording of some passages in the CSC at yesterday's meeting of the Committee on Academic and Student Affairs, one of 2 committees of the Board of Trustees, according to Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice.

Orefice said most of the problems arose because William Searson, chief council to the board, didn't like the proposed language of some passages, even though agreement between the students and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson has been reached.

Orefice said between now and Monday, the student leaders and Madson will be ironing out the wording of the revisions. She said, "We know what we want to say, it's just a matter of wording it so it can be acceptable to Mr. Searson."

The Executive Committee will meet at the Amherst campus Tuesday and the problems have to be worked out by then, so the CSC can go before the board for approval, Orefice said.

Orefice said most of the members of the committee were very surprised to find out the CSC has already been printed and is in the process of being distributed throughout the campus before being approved by the board. The board is supposed to approve all University policies.

But Chancellor Joseph Duffey said because the board delegates some of its powers to him, he could institute some policies before bringing them to the board for approval.

Theft-plagued market seeks security

The People's Market plans to increase its security in reaction to thefts occuring there last semester and most recently, this weekend.

The market's safe had been broken into sometime over the weekend, and employees reported to police that $75, left on Friday, had been taken by Monday.

As an employee explained, since only five of the 25 people needed to run the establishment are working, it is hard to keep strict security.

Last semester, the market's register was robbed of $75, prompting employees there to purchase a strongbox that was also stolen a short time later.

This semester, the market purchased a safe from another establishment to stop the flow of money leaving the business nocturnaly without permission.

Unfortunately, the combination to the safe was never changed, which, it is speculated, might have made the weekend's theft possible.

The People's Market is now changing the combination to the safe and the locks on the doors leading into the store's office.

"We're not concerned with placing the blame on anyone right now, just with fixing the problem," said an employee.

Dilemmas face engineering society

Lack of funds and understanding

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Society for Responsible Engineering members don't have to be engineering majors, but potential members haven't caught on to this fact yet, according to a co-founder of the society.

But, that isn't the only obstacle the society has found in its eight-month existence, said Bob Engel.

Engel said because he and co-founder Pratip Dastidar are graduate students, they were only allowed to form a graduate student organization, so the society could not receive undergraduate funding.

Regardless, undergraduates can join the group, Engel said.

Engel also said the group's intent is misunderstood.

"We have a problem with the name of our group. It immediately brings out people's perception of what the word responsible means and that's a negative connotation to most people at this point. Responsibility should have a positive connotation," he said.

Engel said people associate the word "responsible" with the environment, which is only one issue that concerns the group.

"If some chemical leak occurs," Engel said, "then the people in the neighborhood are concerned with their health and their environment and so they jump on the environmental issue. However, they have not taken into account all of the technology that's going into the company. Why is the company there? Why is it producing what it's producing?"

The society receives $1,000 in operating money from the Graduate Student Senate.

The organization wants "to bring forward ideas from within the engineering community on and off campus about the responsibility that can be associated with technology and the policies for its application," according to a recent news release.

Engel said the society aims to form an accredited program at the University of Massachusetts that will incorporate a variety of disciplines.

The society, he said, "is a forum for discussion and we don't know what the correct outcome of all this is. So, if we pull in people from economics, from philosophy, from engineering, from physical sciences, we'll get a very broad, diverse group of opinions. And from that we can come out with all the topics that should be involved if a structured program were to be formed."

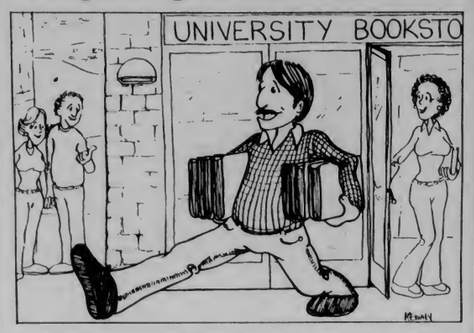
A similar program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology serves as the society's model, Engel said. MIT's Technology and Policy Program was started 12 years ago by Professor Richard de Neufville, whom the society has invited to speak at UMass on September 28. Engel said Chancellor Joseph Duffey and Provost Richard O'Brien are helping the society bring de Neufville to campus.

The organization will receive office space in the Student Union building, Engel said.

Last semester the group had a "core" membership of 12 to 15 students, but about 60 people have expressed interest in joining, he said.

"No matter whether you're an engineer or someone in technology, the humanities or the social sciences, if you don't understand the problems of what's going on in society, how can you make a judgement about whether it's good or bad," he said.

Rely on your textbooks



It's the beginning of a new semester ... This time you're going to do it right. This time it's a 4.0, or maybe a 3.5. This time you'll keep up with the readings.

And the way to keep up is to buy your own textbooks. They're always there when you need them, not just when a friend or the library can loan them to you.

DEAN'S LIST, SPRING SEMESTER 1988

Congratulations to those of you whose names appear below. You have earned a place on the Dean's List by your outstanding academic performance. This honor is accorded to students who achieve a semester average of 3.5 or higher with twelve or more graded credits. Since fewer than 15% meet this high standard, it marks significant accomplishment. Providing the opportunity for academic achievement is the University's highest priority and I am especially pleased, therefore, that you made the most of that opportunity. Your success is a source of pride to the entire University community.

Joseph Duffey, Chancellor

PRESS RELEASES

The Office of Public Information will issue a press release about your Dean's List achievement to your hometown newspaper if you are a Massachusetts resident. Out of state students please pick up a press release form at 200 Munson Hall.

The Dean's List was prepared by Student Affairs Information Services in cooperation with the Registrar's Office. It is based on grades recorded as of August 2, 1988. If a change occurred after that date, please contact the Information Data Bank, 227 Whitmore, 545-1555. REMINDER: GRADED CREDITS ONLY ARE INCLUDED, NOT PASS/FAIL CREDITS.

Lighten your load this semester by carrying an extra unit.

Even if you're up to your eyebrows in homework, you needn't carry the world on your shoulders.

Not with a Macintosh® computer on your desk.

Think of an assignment that weighs heavily on your mind right now—say, a term paper. With Macintosh, you can bring instant order to the jumble of notes, scribbles, quotes, and excerpts that'll go into your paper. You can quickly draft an outline, change the order of topics, and jot down related ideas at will.

Then you start to write. You don't like the way you phrased a paragraph? No problem—try something new, without erasing or retyping a word. Want to move the second page of your first draft to the tail end of your last draft? It only takes a few seconds.

With Macintosh, you can also have your paper proofread in a minute or two. And you can illustrate it with professional looking drawings and graphs, even if you don't know a T square from a T bird.

And here's the clincher. You can learn to do all of these things—and more—in less time than you might spend studying for a Monday morning quiz. Starting Sunday.

If you don't believe it, stop by the location listed below and see for yourself. You'll leave carried a

F.C. Pohaku featured in shows for all-ages at L'Oasis

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

L'Oasis nightclub in Northampton was hopping last Saturday when Boston's Bim Skala Bim played to an all-ages audience of about 200 ska fans from 6 to 9 p.m. That the club is catering to more than just the drinking crowd is a significant plus. The gig was a reminder of last July's show (300 fans of all ages) at Northampton's Center for the Arts to hear Bim and two other ska bands kick it in to benefit the "CIA on Trial project."

L'Oasis is doing it again this Saturday with F.C. Pohaku from 6 to 9 p.m. This local trio plays a fusion of reggae-funk-rock and they say it'll be a real party scene. Band-members are Jon Caban on guitar, John Cruz on Bass, and Doug Ranieri, drums. "Pohaku" is a Hawaiian term meaning "rockin' good time."

Also, F.C. Pohaku will be headlining at L'Oasis both Friday and Saturday for the over-21 crowd. This is their kick-off gig of the season.

'M' is for mouth

Here he is, Mr. Veep

The contestants were excited and apprehensive. Who would be picked? They came from every state in the Union. Hopefuls who wanted the honor, the glory, the glamour of the grand prize. They had been told looks had nothing to do with it, but they knew it was all a lie. Looks had everything to do with it. Especially this year, the Year of the Gender Gap.

Pamela McCarthy

Then, the announcer asked for the envelope. The drums rolled, but the beats of the contestants' hearts were much faster. "And the winner is . . . Dan Quayle!!"

This is more reality than spoof. Unfortunately for the American people, we have turned the democratic process into a Mr. Veep contest. At least, according to certain politicians, it has more to do with looks than ability.

I have nothing against Quayle personally — he's your typical crafty politician. One of the reasons Bush chose Quayle is his looks. This joker thinks he can close the gender gap by having a physically appealing running mate. George, have I got news for you.

I don't think Quayle is that good-looking. He wouldn't break any mirrors, but I hardly would buy any pinup posters of him. If Bush actually thinks a good-looking vice president will get him elected, he should run with Dolph Lundgren or Tom Cruise. I can see it now: some stud at the inaguration in tight jeans and a muscle shirt grinning stupidly at the cameras. Maybe we should have an incredibly stupid, unambitious, pretty-boy V.P. That way, he'd never have a shot at the presidency, and we wouldn't have to deal with another weenie like Bush. Before you know it, they just might have pinups of political candidates. This means we could either have a good laugh at their expense (so what else is new?) or we'd need some physically appealing men. This means most hopefuls would be knocked out of the race. Good-bye Bush, Quayle, Dukakis, and Bentsen.

How much do you want to bet candidates have suddenly discovered fashion in an effort to win the race? I can see the profit potential in this. "The mousse of the successful male" can be Danny's line for a commercial. Maybe he could even pose for Soloflex. Unlike the original poster, however, more than his head should be covered.

Forgive me for my naivete, but I thought political candidates were selected for ability, not looks. These people are running our country. Personally, I don't care if these guys look like the elephant man. I'd rather have an ugly, milk-toast person in office who will get things accomplished than some pretty little grunt whose second language is double-talk.

If we are supposed to vote for people because they are pleasing to the eye, then I think Christie Brinkley or Jerry Hall would have made it long ago. Here I was, thinking men had it easier because they weren't judged by their appearance. Guess not. Women have battled this hang-up for years. Now you want to be judged because of your looks? That's not only stupid, its masochistic.

It seems so liberal and understanding of Bush. "Let's close the gender gap. Let's get women into the Republican Party. Let's find out what women want in a candidate."

I'll tell you what women want in a candidate. We'd like someone who has a brain. Someone who is fair. Someone who has earned the position through hard work and effort. As far as issues go, I'm a little lost, because each woman has her own views. Someone who has conviction and integrity would be nice. I never thought that was asking for much, but I suppose it is.

I was a little knocked off balance by Bush's warped reasoning. Brace yourself George, I've got a shattering revelation for you: women don't vote with their hormones. We do have brains that we like to use. If this is his idea for closing the gender gap, then the GOP has less hope for it than I thought.

Just my opinion

The Annex: a battle zone

"We did not see anyone the villages or in the fields, some of which were pocked with shell craters. There was no sound but the infrequent cries of birds and the hissing of rain through the trees. At point, Lance Corporal Cowe walked delicately - like a man walking through a minefield. And that's what the trail was, a long, narrow minefield." — Phillip Caputo, A Rumor of War.

Peter Leon

The feelings of this veteran of the Vietnam War echoed my feelings as I was in the Text Book Annex. I was buying just nine books, all paperbacks. While there I spent a mere ten minutes finding my books, pushing passed many angry hot people, another twenty minutes in the shortest line I could find (read: really long). It felt like I was walking on a tight rope, one slip and it would be over. I slipped, I hit a mine on this field, I found I had to pay $110.00 for these nine paperback books

Many of my professors mentioned they had tried to limit the number of books we needed to buy because they knew books were getting more expensive. I find this very conscientious on their part and I am grateful. At least the faculty is on our side.

Also a note to those science students who buy those 20 pound books for $50 a pop. I feel bad when you spend $200-$300 a semester, it's not fair, but at least you get huge books full of facts and formulas, I don't.

Case and point: I spent $14.25 on L'Etranger (The Stranger) by Albert Camus. It is a classic and is available for about $5 in English. The book I know will be helpful to me in learning to read French, but I might have trouble enjoying it having paid so much for so little — it being only 100 pages.

Now maybe, I thought, it was printed in France or even in Canada. This would mean shipping charges and taxes on it would be high. I looked on the back, and guess were it was printed — New Jersey. A lousy 4½ hour drive away. Not a great distance to ship a book, and though most would like to think of Jersey as a foreign country, it isn't.

Another sentiment I felt, inspired by Caputo, was fighting for my life. But instead of getting shot at, my wallet was the victim. And as it was in the Vietnam War the people running the show seem to be as dangerous as the enemy.

The administration, my ally in getting an education, did nothing to help me with this problem. By instituting the Undergraduate Academic Fee I got to spend money that I would usually spend on books on something else. So then I had to rework my budget and found the only thing that had any leeway was my food fund. Guess it's another semester of Mac & Cheese.

It occurred to me that if the University were to buy the books, instead of the Text Book Annex (the enemy), a private company out to make huge profits off students who have nowhere else to go, we could save gross quantities of money. It can't be a new idea to put the buying power of the largest public university in the state behind the students — to save the students money. The University could set up another department called "Book purchasing," buy the books and sell them to students, only charging enough to cover the cost of books and run the department.

Consider that we buy an average of three books per class. That's 15 books per semester. Multiply that by the number of undergrads — 19,750 — and it comes to 296,250 books per semester.

Maybe the administration would like to help us this time. Aren't we all sick and tired of fighting a no-win scenario.

Feminist vandalism cowardly and sexist

It's a sad state of affairs at the University of Massachusetts when the moral debate on feminism is reduced to its main proponent to cowardly vandalism.

Why praise as intelligent the statement "dismember the boys club," spray painted recently on Delta Upsilon's property? Where does the word intelligent apply to the proposed solution of educating men (not boys) about sexism by castration?

The militant, radical stance adopted by the group who vandalized our fraternity house does more to foster opposition to the feminist agenda than it does to create a desire to break down society's stereotypes.

Feminists say the graffiti was a straightforward way to have their ideology crammed down your throat. They said if you didn't want to read it, you could avoid it. They assert the media and society at large are the most prevalent crammers of ideology. But Delta Upsilon controls neither the media or society at large. We don't dictate what's attractive. We're students, we're men, and we don't force ourselves on anyone.

That is why this incident, which occured early in the month, is particularly disturbing.

Should anyone take issue with what we've done, or what we stand for as a fraternity, we welcome intelligent debate. But we will never present our views in the dark of night while our counterparts sleep.

Michael Acker

Feminists would be surprised at how open and receptive we are to the issue of equality. But there was no desire for equality in their message.

What was the best solution the vandalizing group, who refused to identify themselves, could come up with? Violence. And what is implied by their message? They do not seek to end sexism; they want the same inequality and oppression, but they want the roles reversed.

Vandalism is terrorism, but at least in Beirut, those involved have enough faith in their position to claim responsibility.

Fraternities do not tolerate discrimination of any kind — racial, sexual, or religious. We do, however, represent a concentration of the leaders, policy makers, and voters of tomorrow. When we leave the Valley, we will bring what we've learned to the outside world.

We will remember that equality was not sought; we will remember that no intellectual proposals were submitted to reshape society's institutions to be less sexist. We will remember instead of treating us as equals in a dialogue, we are referred to as boys (a term that if reversed, and a woman was called a girl, would be met by a 45 minute harangue by any feminist worth her salt).

I am shocked and disgusted that in an academic atmosphere, and on a topic of importance to society, the most courageous stand feminists could muster against sexism is a sweeping condemnation of fraternity men, calling for our castration, and presented to us while we slept by skulking about in our back yard like a common criminal. How has your cause been helped?

Michael Acker is president of Delta Upsilon Fraternity

They said it. . .

This much can be said for Stevie Nicks's solo career: it won't suffer for lack of material. "I have about 50 songs form the last two years," she reports. "And if you want to go back through the archives, I've probably got another 300." Nicks is now wading through some of those songs with producer Rupert Hine, selecting tracks for her fourth solo album, which she hopes to release early next year. — Rolling Stone

Keith Richards refers to the core of the musicians who play on his new album — Steve Jordan, Waddy Wachtel, Ivan Neville and Charley Drayton — as the "expensive winos." "That's our name," he says, mainly because I caught three of them drinking a bottle of Lafite - Rothschild on a break behind the drum kit. I said, 'What am I workin' with, a load of winos?' And they said, 'It's Lafite - Rothschild, man. We're expensive winos!' So the name stuck . It's our code name for the unit,the basic band for this."

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Necessities/Necesidades offers shelter and support

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Women are often afraid that if they take action their abusers will become even angrier and more violent, said a volunteer coordinator at Necesidies/Necesidades, a Northampton agency for battered women.

"Their fear is real," said Mary Johnston of Necessites/Necesidades, "the danger is extremely real and women are killed."

The community needs to take more responsibility, she said, "if you hear someone screaming, call for help. Don't walk away because it's a domestic affair. Don't ignore a black eye and don't believe an excuse you know isn't true."

Necessities/Necessidadas offers many services to women trying to escape from batterers. A shelter and a "safe home network" are available for women who need a safe place to stay immediately. The shelter provides counselor advocates who can help women "get back on their feet," she said.

"The shelter holds three women and their children and is always very full," said Johnston. "We also have a safe home network made up of families that offer temporary shelter for one to four nights within the community."

The safe home idea is to get the community involved, Johnston said. "We are always looking for volunteers and especially need more lesbian safe homes as well as Spanish speaking safe homes."

Families or other interested parties who want to offer a safe shelter to women should contact Helen Harrison at Necessities/Necesidades at 586-1125.

In addition to immediate assistance, the agency helps women find housing and aid from the Department of Social Services.

"Most women who come out of a battering situation come out with no money and need help going through the system to get on welfare or get a housing subsidy," Johnston said. "Women become fugitives, even though they're not commiting the crime."

Child advocacy is offered to help children adjust. "Children also come out needing a lot of support," she said. "We try to spend a lot of one-on-one time with children. It's a big transition living in a shelter, changing homes or schools."

"They may miss their fathers, they may be witnesses or victims of violence themselves, and their mothers are often having such trouble themselves that they have little time to also deal with what their children are going through," she said.

In addition to temporary shelter and help with social services, Necessites/Necesidades offers support groups for women who are or have been battered. The groups are scheduled to resume the end of September and a lesbian support group will be offered for the first time this fall.

Legal advocates are also available and a large information and referral service can help women get lawyers who will take cases free or do work for a lesser fee, Johnston said.

Legal advocates are trained staff or volunteers who are well informed about the specific issues of women in battering ralationships and can accompany women into court, Johnston said. "We often know more than the police or the courts and can tell them about their rights and responsibilities."

An emergency restraining order known as a 209A can be obtained as "protection against abuse," said Johnston. "You can get a restraining order if you have been physically assaulted, threatened with physical assualt, or sexually abused," she said

Once a restraining order is issued, the abuser is served papers and a five day hearing is set. At the hearing it is determined what the order will encompass.

"You can get a refrain from contact, temporary vacate order (to get the abuser out of the home), a temporary custody order, a monetary compensation order, a stay away from work, a police escort to get your things, and anything else you need to feel safe," she said.

"You do not need a lawyer to get a restraining order," she said. "It is a civil complaint and anyone has a right to get one."

But, they only work if the batterer is scared enough or law abiding enough to respect it, she said. "If the batterer has no respect for the law then you are dependent on whether or not the police will respond to a violation."

"They (the police) don't always respond," Johnston said, "and they don't always respond quickly enough."

"Some women will tell you a restraining order might as well be a piece of toilet paper," she said.

CANDLELIGHT — Several hundred people turn out to bring attention to the plight of battered women at a candlelight vigil in memory of Virginia Ferrer Tuesday night in Pulaski Park in Northampton. Ferrer was murdered Friday night in Turners Falls.

■ Women and alcohol: the facts

The following information is provided by the Women's Alcohol Program in Cambridge, MA.

- Two-thirds of adult American women drink.
- Conservative estimates report that women comprise one-third of the nation's problem drinkers.
- More young women are drinking today than a decade ago.
- Female alcoholics are at high risk for abusing other drugs.
- Black women are more likely than white women to abstain from alcohol, but among those who drink they are more susceptible to alcohol problems.
- Women may become more intoxicated than men on the same amount of alcohol even when having comparable body weight. This is due to men having more muscle tissue which contains the fluid to dilute alcohol.
- Depression may co-exist with alcoholism among some women.
- A double standard still exists for drinking behavior. Drunkeness in women is judged more harshly than it is in men.
- Alcohol appears to have a greater effect on a woman at the beginning of her menstrual period.
- Medications containing estrogen such as birth control pills may slow down the elimination of alcohol from the body.
- Alcohol combined with drugs including over-the-counter medications can have a multiplying effect that is unpredictable. Particularly dangerous is combining alcohol with tranquilizers or sleeping pills.
- To avoid possible birth defects the Surgeon General of the United States has recommended that women not drink at all during or when anticipating pregnancy.
- Women with drinking problems suffer from low self-esteem, —significantly more than men.
- Employed married women have higher rates of problem drinking than either single working women or housewives.
- The stigma surrounding female alcoholism problems lead women to be protected by families, police, friends, and employers. This often delays or prevents women from getting treatment.

■ Drinking and drugs, the effects

If you drink and take drugs, the consequences may be more serious than you think. The following is information produced by the Women's Alcoholism Program in Cambridge and is not meant to replace the advice of your family doctor or pharmacist.

ANALGESICS, NARCOTIC - (Demerol, Darvon, Dilaudid, etc.) When used alone, both alcohol and narcotic drugs cause a reduction in the function of the central nervous system. When used together, they may lead to loss of effective breathing function (respiratory arrest). Death may occur.

ANALGESICS, NON-NARCOTIC - (Aspirin, APC, Pabalate, etc.) Some non-prescription pain relievers can cause bleeding in the stomach and intestines. Alcohol also irritates the stomach and can aggravate the bleeding.

ANTIALCOHOL PREPARTATION - (Antiabuse, Calcium Carbamide) Use of alcohol with medications prescribed to help alcoholic patients keep from drinking results in nausea, vomiting, headache, high blood pressure and possible erratic heartbeat and can result in death.

ANTICOAGULANTS - (Panwarfin, dicumarol, Sintrom, etc.) Alcohol can increase the ability of these drugs to stop blood clotting, which in turn can lead to life-threatening or total hemorrhages.

ANTICONVULSANTS - (Dilantin, Diphenyl, etc.) Drinking may lessen the ability of this drug to stop convulsions in a person.

ANTIDEPRESSANTS - (Tofranil, Pertofrane, Triavil, etc.) Alcohol may cause an additional reduction in central nervous system functioning and lessen a person's ability to operate normally. Certain antidepressants in combination with red wines like Chianti may cause a high blood pressure crisis.

ANTIDIABETIC AGENTS/HYPOGYLCEMICS (Insulin, Diabenese, Orianase, etc.) Patients taking any of these medications should avoid alcohol.

ANTIHISTAMINES - (most cold remedies, Actifed, Coricidin, etc.) Taking alcohol with this class of drugs increases their calming effect and a person can feel quite drowsy, making driving and other activities which require alertness more hazardous.

Day care demand skyrockets at UMass

By HOLLY ANGELO
Collegian Correspondent

The child care demand at the University of Massachusetts is so great that pregnant women are reserving space in advance for their unborn children.

The waiting list for UMass faculty and student child care is extensive and centers are finding it increasingly difficult to place children, according to Neil Brigham, director of Grass Roots Day School, one of two facilities on campus.

Nancy Birtwell, a supervising teacher at Grass Roots said the facility cannot keep up with the rising needs on campus.

"We're not even coming close to meeting the need," she said. "We need more services to children, period."

Birtwell said the building is not insulated for the winter and the University is billed heavily in order to compensate for this. "The oil bill is high because there's no insulation."

Spring time at the school is easier because the children can spend time outdoors, she added.

Brigham said the school needs to install more facilities, for the children, it only provides four bathrooms for 44 children.

"It works out okay, but we could use another one downstairs," he said.

University budget cuts have affected the already sparse staff by decreasing employee funding, Brigham said.

"The budget cuts have decreased the amount of staff here," he said. But, "with what we have, we're offering a quality program."

The Grass Roots staff consists of eight supervising teachers who care for 44 children five days a week. One UMass student teacher arrives three times a week to assist the supervisors and work with the children.

The recent enaction of the Higher Education Capital Outlay bill provided UMass $110,000 for the planning and design of renovations for child care facilities.

Brigham said a planning agency had visited the school but, Birtwell said "we won't be seeing anything until the 1990's."

Barrence, Berryhill headline weekend

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Correspondent

Kicking off the weekend's entertainment is screamer Barrence Whitfield and the Savages at 8:30 tonight at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton. The Time Beings open and it only costs $6.00. Friday night catch rockabilly greats Frankie & The Premiers and Saturday Jack Smith & The Rockabilly Planet.

For something a little different and more decadent try Live Skull on Sunday night with special guests, the BBQ Killers at Sheehan's. It's five bucks and something to do besides study on a Sunday night.

But, there is life beyond Sheehan's. Tonight is Smith College's premier gig of the Thursday Night Club with The Vestrymen. It's free, at the Davis Centre, and beer and wine will be served to those who qualify. Likewise, at the Hatch, catch the premier gig from a promising band by the name of Zocalo. The advertisement for this one reads, "Get down and dance to the funky rock'n' roll sound of . . ." Decide for yourself, it starts at 9 p.m.

L'Oasis in Northampton will be featuring two all ages shows with F.C. Pohaku on Friday and Saturday night. Tonight it's Saylyn, a calypso, reggae band.

Rhino Records' (The Residents, Snakefinger, Renaldo Loaf) and the Iron Horse welcome newcomer Cindy Lee Berryhill tonight. She'll be playing two sets of hits from her debut album, "Whose Gonna Save the World?" which is currently enjoying critical success on the east coast. Tickets are $6 at the door.

Hipsters will seriously want to check out Jim Carroll on Monday. He'll be reading selections of his written work, and will not be playing with is band. The author of the "Basketball Diaries," and "Forced Entries," will give two performances at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $8.50 in advance and $9.50 at the door. Both shows are part of the Iron Horses' New Wave Cafe series.

Those who were impressed last week with the Michael Gregory Band will have another chance to see him at Katina's in Hadley tonight. House rules admit 18-20 year olds with I.D, and drinks for those who qualify. Tickets are $6. Tomorrow at the same venue, Eliminator: ZZTOP Until You Drop! may make people wish they'd come a day later to see In The Flesh on Sunday. All bands start at 9:00 p.m. sharp.

Open-meeting letter reaches D.A.

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Hampshire County District Attorney's office received a letter today from the Collegian asking for an investigation into a possible violation of the Massachusetts open meeting law.

The letter, sent from Collegian Editor in Chief Pedro Pereira, asks the district attorney's office to investigate the procedure used to move into executive session at a meeting of the SGA Coordinating Committee last Thursday.

The committee moved into executive session, which requires that all non-members of the committee leave the room. Executive session was invoked to allow for discussion of what SGA leaders have described as a "sensitive internal issue."

State law requires several steps to be taken before a move into executive session. The meeting's presiding officer must state a specific reason for moving into executive session and a roll call vote must be taken. If the session will address the dismissal or performance of a public official, the person involved must be asked if he or she would prefer a session open to the public.

Pereira maintains Robert Fadel, who presided at the meeting, did not follow the above criteria, unfairly barring the public and the Collegian from a meeting that should be public record.

Steve Samolewicz, director of public rights in the district attorney's office, said he could not make a statement about the legality of the move at this time.

"The issue right now is whether the SGA is a governmental body as is defined under the open meeting law," Samolewicz said.

The open meeting law defines a governmental body as "every board, commission, committee or subcommittee of any district, city, region or town, however elected, appointed, or otherwise constituted."

All that was left was for Cox to secure her shutout which was a relatively easy job considering she only had to handle five shots in the entire half.

Though the score does not indicate it, UMass, as Hixon predicted, was given a much sterner test then in last week's game with Springfield.

BC limited the Minutewomen to 21 shots, twenty fewer than the Minutewomen picked up in the Springfield game when they recorded 41. It was the second game in a row that the Minutewomen had allowed less than 10 shots.

Water polo gears up for season

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Autumn has settled on the University of Massachusetts and with it comes the traditional fall sports schedule of football, soccer, field hockey, tennis, water polo.

Wait a minute. Water polo?

You read it right. Coach Russ Yarworth of men's swimming fame is putting together a varsity water polo program that looks to become as powerful as his men's swim team.

"This is a building year," said Yarworth, "but these guys are a young team and will be around for a while. Once they come together as a team, they'll really start to click."

Indeed, with all the redshirts he's had, Yarworth figures to lose only two players over the next two years in addition to the fact that this year's freshman class was a bumper crop of talent.

"With two new goalies, we're set for the next four years (and) they really push (second-year starter Pete) Koback to work harder," Yarworth said.

If last year is any indication of the team's abilities and its future, consider this. In '87, its first year of varsity of play after a lengthy stint in club status, the team finished 12-8, putting them third in New England and 10th in the East. This year, the team believes that with some hard work they could finish second in the East and possibly gain a berth in the nationals.

"We might not get the record we had last year," Yarworth said, "but we play a much tougher schedule." Both factors are weighed in the rankings, so despite a potentially worse record, UMass could end up with a higher placing.

Not that the team isn't rising to meet the challenge.

"These guys have worked really hard to improve," Yarworth said. Physical condition is a big factor in water polo. The pool used is 20 x 30 meters with goal nets at the far end. Regulation pools are all deep, requiring players to tread water constantly when not sprinting up and down the pool as the ball changes hands.

Along with the goalie Koback, the main starters look to be drivers Scott DeLuca and Adam Feldman (both freshmen), junior Brian McIver and freshman Alex Yelensky in the offensive holes, and sophomore Jon Miller and junior G.T. Ladd in the defensive holes. But UMass figures to have a lot of help off the bench.

"This is more depth than we've ever had before," said graduate assistant Jim Boudreau, last year's leading scorer.

"I'll remember his performance for the rest of my life and when another corner has a great game, I'll say, 'That reminds me of what Amos did in 1988.'"

And now the whole nation will know about it.

Extra Points: Defensive tackle Kevin Murphy, who had to come out of Saturday's game, he re-pinched a nerve in his neck and is out for the season.

"I know Kevin's extremely disappointed but there's no sense sending him back out there just so he can re-injure himself," Reid said.

"Football is a sport for tough people who want to challenge themselves physically and mentally. But to send Kevin back out would not fit the definition of football."

Men's tennis slips by UNH in opener

By JIM CUMMINGS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team won five of six singles matches and one of the three doubles to gain an opening day victory over the University of New Hampshire, 6-3, yesterday on the Upper Boyden Courts.

Coach Manny Roberts was pleased with the team's effort and was happy to find that his top two players, seniors Brian Gable and Joe Desormiers, look to be as impressive this year as they were last year when they finished second in the New Englands as a doubles pairing.

"They're simply amazing both in singles and doubles," said Roberts of Gable and Desormiers, who won their individual matches easily.

Gable won, 6-3, 6-2 and Desormiers coasted to a 6-1, 6-2 straight sets victory. The two then combined to win their doubles match, 6-3, 6-3.

Other impressive performances were turned in by sophomore Rich Stone, who lost the first set and came back to take the match, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2, senior Chris Johnson, 6-4, 6-0, and freshman Paul Audet, who won a grueling 7-5, 6-4 match.

Roberts said he was happy with the freshman's performance and his stamina.

The second freshman starter, Kevin Newman, was handed the only singles loss for the UMass team, 6-1, 6-2, but this did not worry Roberts.

"Newman needs more experience and should come into his own by mid-season," Roberts said. "We'll work him hard in practice and he'll play well for us."

With the team victory insured after the singles matches, Roberts decided to put together some new combinations for his second and third doubles pairings. Neither the team of Stone and Johnson, which lost 7-5, 6-4, or Humberto Soto and Gary Goodman, 6-4, 6-4 losers, had ever played together. Roberts said he felt the Stone/Johnson tandem would win when he put them together, but added he was not disappointed in their play.

"Both doubles teams were only one or two service breaks away from a victory and looked strong together," Roberts said.

Desormiers said, "This

The offense of the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, frustrated throughout most of Sunday afternoon's sumo snoozfest with the University of Maine, erupted early and often against the University of New Hampshire yesterday afternoon at Boyden Field.

The 3-0 win was the second consecutive strong performance for the undefeated Minutemen, who now head into a pair of Atlantic 10 showdowns over the weekend.

UMass pounced on the visiting Wildcats immediately. With just 1:47 elapsed in the game, sophomore midfielder Peter McEvoy rocketed the ball into the upper left corner of the net to give the Minutemen a 1-0 lead.

Steve Cesnek stretched the lead to 2-0 with an unassisted goal at the 13:26 mark. Cesnek steered through the UNH defense, then powered the ball past goalie Eric Stinson into the same upper left corner of the net burned by McEvoy's blast minutes earlier.

The Minutemen continued to pound at Stinson through the rest of the first half, though they were unable to break the plane. The same UMass offense that struggled against Maine unleashed 11 first half and 19 shots total yesterday.

"We were much more dangerous," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "I was much happier with that."

Cesnek opened the second half with a repeat performance of his previous goal, streaking free along the right side and sliding the ball past the diving Wildcat goalkeeper. With the score now 3-0, and the outcome of the game secured, Cesnek's pursuit of his third goal of the game and the defense's second consecutive shutout crusade kept the crowd in the stands.

Cesnek came within one head fake of notching the season's first hat trick. With 18:18 left to play, the junior forward broke in alone 20 feet in front of the net. Reserve goalie Dan Fiore read his mind, and intercepted the ball with a diving effort just inside the left goalpost. Cesnek was seated soon after, as Gettler seized the opportunity to play the bench.

Freshmen Brett Anthony and Scott Jacobs saw their first action, and earned Gettler's attention. "They did well," praised Gettler, "I thought those guys picked us up off the bench."

Gettler also reserved special praise for McEvoy, who was largely responsible for the UMass's midfield dominance. "McEvoy, at the beginning of the second half, really settled us down. He was a calming influence on the team."

The defense, meanwhile, continued to hold firm. UNH's top scoring threat, Scott Brennan, managed to squeeze free for just three shots all afternoon. "I really don't think they got any real good scoring opportunities," said Gettler of the visiting offense.

The closest the Wildcats came to scoring was a Jess Wehrwien rebound drive with three minutes to play. Minuteman goalie Sam Ginzburg smothered the ball, however, preserving the shutout.

Free Kicks: Ginzburg has been called upon to make a mere ten saves in the last two games . . . Anthony found the only mud puddle on campus, located in the deep southwest corner of the field, on a sliding cross kick late in the game . . . next up, the Minutemen will host Atlantic 10 rival Temple, Friday afternoon at 3 p.m.

UM dumps Eagles, 3-0

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team answered one very important question last night when it whipped Boston College, 3-0, at Chestnut Hill.

Yes, the Minutewomen can play on artificial turf. That fake stuff doesn't bother them.

"I'm glad we played well on turf," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "That was important for us. We have a game coming up in Springfield with Michigan on that same surface."

UMass, now 2-0, will play two games at Springfield this year which are designated as home games. The reason being that both teams they play (Michigan and the University of Toledo) have to make a long trip and can't afford to have the game rained out.

Once again, the UMass defense looked superb as it only allowed the Eagles six shots on senior goaltender Cindy Cox.

Cox registered six saves and took one step forward in solidifying the No. 1 goalie position. She is now 2-0 with an 0.50 goals-against-average.

The first priority in the Minutewomen's gameplan last night was to draw penalty corners and execute them efficiently.

That, they did, and whatever Hixon told them before the game must have sunk in right away because at 3:00 of the first half UMass drew a corner and senior co-captain Pam Bustin responded by drilling a ball past BC goalie Wendy Carter to give the Minutewomen a 1-0 lead.

It was the midfielder's first goal of the season. Senior co-captain Ruth Vasapolli and junior Bernie Martel assisted on the play.

UMass plays its home games on grass, at Totman Field. But Bustin apparently does not mind the fast turf.

For at 33:15 of the first, she collected her second goal of the game and gave UMass a 2-0 lead with a blast from about 25 yards.

BC had to have been shaking their heads as the first 35 minutes came to a close with UMass sporting a 2-0 lead, having limited the Eagles to one shot.

The Minutewomen had BC on the ropes but started to let up a little at the start of the second half. That caused Hixon to make one quick change.

Junior Carol Smith and senior Julie Stuart switched positions, Smith going to centerback and Stuart to sweeper. After that move, UMass cruised.

Junior Kathy DeAngelis knotched her second goal of the year just past the half way point of the second half, at 18:30, to give the Minutewomen a commanding 3-0 lead.

Volleyball gets sweep of Central Connecticut

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Height can be a big advantage in volleyball, but when you don't know how to use it, it doesn't do much good.

On paper, the Central Connecticut volleyball team was a taller one than UMass (an average height of almost 5-foot-8), but the relative youth of the team turned out to be a detriment, as the Minutewomen rolled to a 15-3, 15-7, 15-7 sweep of the Blue Devils last night at Totman Gymnasium.

"They've still got the big kids, but they're real young," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "It just wasn't as intense as I thought it would be."

That lack of intensity didn't help UMass much. It made it somewhat easy to accomplish what they had to do. Without the challenge, the Minutewomen weren't able to work on some of the trouble areas that have been bothering them.

Blocking had been a problem in the season-opening win over Hartford on Sunday. The Minutewomen had recorded only three blocks in that match, and could only equal that number last night, but without a potent attack to defense, there wasn't much blocking to be done.

"We didn't really have to (block) against them," Ford said. "It wasn't a true test for us."

Ford also had moved most of her players back into their normal positions, but the results weren't immediate.

"I thought we'd click, but we didn't," Ford said. "We kept missing some shots, and making errors."

One player who did perform well was senior middle blocker Juliet Primer, playing in her first match of the year.

"Juliet played well in her new position," Ford said. "She did a good job in the middle.

Statistically, the Minutewomen were led by sophomore outside hitter Nancy Sullivan, who had nine kills, followed by Primer with eight. Senior outside hitter Julia Smith and senior middle blocker Barbara Meehan each had seven.

Junior setter Karen Ferguson had 21 assists. As a team, the Minutewomen made 43 digs.

Amos receives national honor

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

As a unit, the University of Massachusetts football team got off to a great start Saturday by beating the University of Maine, 45-42.

They didn't do bad individually, either.

Senior cornerback Garrick Amos was named National Division 1-AA Defensive Player-of-the-Week by the National Sports Network.

Amos had seven tackles against Maine, and broke up three passes. But the play that probably won him the award came with 1:26 left in the game.

Maine quarterback Mike Buck faded back to pass on a first-and-25 from the UMass 44. With plenty of time to scan the field, Buck finally threw to Jeff Knox. Amos dove and knocked the ball down at the last second.

Three plays later, Buck threw an interception and the Minutemen were 1-0.

"It was an awesome performance," UMass head coach Jim Reid said of Amos' game. "It may be unfair to say, because the game is so fresh in my mind, but in 14 years, I can't think of another game where the cornerback stuck out the way he did."

UMass faces UVM today in home opener

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy has coached in a game here at UMass before, when his former team, Central Florida, played in last year's Final Four at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

But today, Rudy will get his first exposure to the real home of the Minutewomen, Boyden Field, when his team hosts the University of Vermont in the first home game of the year.

UMass has started its drive toward another possible Final Four appearance in good fashion with a 2-0 record, having beaten Rhode Island and Rutgers to capture the Rhode Island Tournament last weekend.

"It was good to see the things that we worked on functioning under game conditions," Rudy said.

But tomorrow, the Minutewomen may have some trouble generating offense against a stingy defensive team like Vermont.

"Vermont's strengths are their defenders and their goalkeepers," Rudy said. "They could have as many as 11 players in the box. They're plan is to bunker and counter-attack," Rudy said.

In layman's terms, that means that Vermont tends to sit back and play defensive, to gain control and then try to push the ball upfield. Rudy will try to break that pack defense with a lot of flank play and by playing a short game off corner shots.

"The drawback to that game is that the ball bounces out, creating a lot of rebounds," Rudy said. "We could get a lot of second and third shots."

That will put a load on the shoulders of the UVM goalkeeper, senior Jen Starr. She played a starring (excuse the pun, please) role in a recent game against the University of Connecticut, shutting the Huskies down for 97 minutes before finally relenting in an overtime loss.

"She's great in the air, and we're not, really," Rudy said. But Starr and her teammates will have to be better than they were last year. The Minutewomen traveled to Montpelier and did a real number on the Catamounts to the tune of an 8-0 pasting.

Sox still rolling

The Bosox keep rolling toward the playoffs. Mike Greenell hit for the cycle to lead the Sox to a 4-3 win over the Orioles. The magic number is now at 13.

Committee chairman resigns

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

The Budgets Committee chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate resigned yesterday amid questions of his motives for misusing student funds over the summer.

"I blew the whistle, and whistle blowers are always kicked out for the problems they create," said Gil Penchina, who claims the misuse of monies was a test of financial safeguards within the student government.

At a Coordinating Committee meeting last week, Penchina admitted to misusing money from the Student Activitees Trust Fund, including putting extra hours on his pay slip, and using student money to make photocopies for his personal use.

"I blew the whistle, and whistle blowers are always kicked out for the problems they create... It was like 'Stick around if you want, but we're not going to let you do anything except collect a paycheck'."

--Gil Penchina

Committee members said they have no way of knowing if Penchina was conducting a test or creating an alibi for his actions, because he failed to let anyone know of the test, except for a former Budgets Committee assistant.

Because of that, the committee members said they had no choice but to call for Penchina's resignation.

Co-President-elect Shari Silkoff said whether Penchina's actions were a test is irrelevant. "It's the fact that he was misusing money," she said.

But Penchina said he could not tell anyone in student government or in the Student Activities Office because they were the ones he was testing.

SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins said committee members knew about his personal photocopying early in the summer and Penchina agrees they had asked him periodically to repay the money. Filkins said committee members had been discussing what actions to take this fall before Penchina announced it was part of his so-called test.

Other misuses of monies by Penchina have not yet been documented. Penchina said he had transferred money from a frozen account and received extra hours of pay. Filkins said she did not have any record of these actions although she would be conducting a full investigation.

The statement by Penchina misusing student monies violated the trust among student leaders, committee members said.

SAO banned him from looking at office records, which are necessary to conduct audits, Penchina said.

"It was like, 'Stick around if you want, but we're not going to let you do anything except collect a paycheck,'" Penchina said.

Speaker of the Senate Robert Fadel agreed: If Penchina hadn't resigned he would have been "a lame duck budgets chairman."

"I think it's unfortunate that Gil was put in a position that for his integrity and the system's integrity he had to resign," he said.

Gilbert continues destructive path

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press

CANCUN, Mexico — The most intense hurricane on record surged toward Texas yesterday after battering the Yucatan Peninsula with 160-mph winds, leveling slums, pummeling posh resorts and forcing tens of thousand to flee.

Hurricane Gilbert, which has left nearly one in four Jamaicans homeless, slackened somewhat as it swirled over land, but the storm was beginning to gain strength over open water as it moved toward the Gulf Coast with sustained winds of 120 mph.

The storm was headed west northwest shortly before noon EDT, said National Hurricane Center director Bob Sheets. It was moving at 15 mph and dumping up to 10 inches of rain.

"The area that we have the most likely possibility that this hurricane will make landfall is in the northern part of Mexico or the southeastern, southern part of Texas," he said.

As of noon today, the center of the storm was near latitude 22.2 north and longitude 92.3 west, or about 410 miles south east of Brownsville, Texas.

Brownsville was given a 21 percent probability of being hit, though a hurricane watch was in effect along the entire Texas coast as well as the northeastern Mexican coast from Tampico.

Earlier this week the storm struck the Carribean, ravaging Jamaica, the Dominican Republic, the Cayman Islands and Haiti, killing at least 19 in Jamaica and five in the Dominican Republic.

Haiti declared a state of emergency across its southern Peninsula, where at least 10 hurricane-related deaths have been reported.

The storm, about 450 miles wide, hit the Yucatan coast at dawn Wednesday, thrashing beaches with 23-foot waves, uprooting trees, knocking out electricity and water supplies and severing telephone lines.

Mexican officials reported at least seven injuries. There were no reports of deaths.

Gilbert battered the provincial capital of Merida and the gulf port cities of Puerto Progreso, Campeche and Ciudad del Carmen, closing air ports and roads and knocking out communications and power and innundating streets and highways.

Duffey offers solution for constitution worries

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

After numerous failed attempts over the years, administrators and student leaders are taking a different approach in getting the Board of Trustees to ratify the Student Government Association constitution.

Chancellor Duffey said instead of taking the usual route and presenting the constitution itself for approval, a proposal for an SGA charter is being scheduled.

"A constitution defines how the SGA does its business," Duffey said. "A charter defines the role of student government."

Duffey said problems with past attempts to ratify the constitution usually arose because William Searson, general counsel for the trustees, had problems with certain passages.

Any documents or policies that go before the board go through the counsel first. The counsel's job is to protect the trustees from liability.

Searson did not return numerous phone calls from the Collegian.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said both the student leaders and the administrators were getting frustrated because the issue has never made it to the full board, so Duffey's proposal of a charter was a welcome greeting.

"He [Duffey] thinks it's very important for us to have a constitution because he thinks the SGA is a valuable asset to the University," Orefice said.

House passes stiffer drug penalty

Zero tolerance message sent to recreational drug users

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House anti-drug initiative is moving toward a zero tolerance policy, as lawmakers tack on amendments that stiffen penalties for recreational drug use.

The House sent its latest message to drug users Wednesday, passing an amendment that would subject anyone possessing "personal use" amounts of illegal drugs to civil penalties of $10,000 per violation.

The vote was 293-115, with 128 Democrats and 165 Republicans supporting the proposal. There were 112 Democrats and three Republicans in opposition.

As House members began wading through changes to the drug bill last week, they signaled that any drug use was in tolerable. In the first test of this policy, lawmakers voted 335-67 for an amendment that would deny many federal benefits to those convicted of two drug offenses, including possession.

Still to come is a proposal that would deny states a portion of their federal highway money if they fail to take away driver's licenses of those convicted of one drug offense. The initial conviction would bring a six-month suspension, while repeat convictions within a five-year-period could bring revocation for a year.

"The theme of this year's drug bill is user accountability," Rep. Hamilton Fish, R-NY, said in support of the civil fines amendment sponsored by Rep Mickey Edwards, R-Ok.

The overall anti-drug legislation would add some $2 billion to the $3.9 billion federal effort to combat illegal drugs. It includes money and programs for law enforcement, educations, treatment, rehabilitation and virtually every other avenue to try to stem both the supply of drugs and demand for them.

The House likely will complete the legislation next week. The Senate has yet to begin consideration of its own major anti-drug bill.

The civil fines envisioned in the Edwards amendment would not replace current criminal penalties for possessing marijuana, cocaine or other drugs that would trigger the civil penalty.

In the major difference between civil and criminal cases, a defendant in civil proceeding needs only to be found guilty by "clear and convincing evidence." This is a far easier burden for the government than the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard it must prove in a criminal case.

In assessing the penalties, the Justice Department would take into account an individual's income and net assets.

After a penalty was proposed the defendant could ask for an administrative hearing and also could appeal to a federal court.

Supporters of the civil fines said their amendment was needed to enforce such a policy, because overburdened prosecutors and overcrowded prisons cannot handle crimimal cases involving "personal use" possession cases.

Former aide recommended ousting Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House aide said yesterday he raised the possibility of temporarily removing President Reagan from office under the 25th Amendment during the Iran-Contra scandal because the president was inattentive, inept and lazy.

The aide, James Cannon, said he brought up the subject in a 1987 memo to Howard Baker Jr., who was just replacing Donald Regan as White House chief of staff. Cannon said he rejected the thought after seeing Reagan and finding his condition was just "dandy."

Cannon said he had interviewed 15 or 20 staffers left from the Regan regime and that "not all but most said in one way or another that the president was inattentive, that he had lost interest in his job."

Cannon said, "I was skeptical about that, but nevertheless the number of people that told me about this was such that I felt I had an obligation to raise (it) with Sen. Baker."

The 25th Amendment, added to the Constitution in 1967, provides the president may be removed if the vice president and a majority of the cabinet declare him "unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office."

White House Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, talking to reporters at his daily briefing, said, "I saw the president every day, talked to him a lot. There's nothing to this. This is fiction by staff people who for their own reasons chose to say this, and it was dismissed immediately by those who heard it. It was never taken seriously."

Fitzwater said the president was aware of the Cannon report "and he takes it all in stride."

Storm rocked NE this week in '38

BOSTON (AP) — Nobody witnessed the monster's mid-September birth somewhere in the tropical Atlantic Ocean.

The time was 1938, long before weather satellites and frequent transoceanic air traffic. Nonetheless, the meeting of light, humid breezes over tepid seas at 15 degrees north latitude was to bring days of misery and death to unsuspecting New England.

A Brazilian freighter was probably the first to report the juvenile offender near the Leeward Islands. Later, two more ships plowed into strong winds and seas in an area north of the usual track of storms known to the Caribe Indians as "huracan," or evil spirit.

Growing stronger on this wayward path to adulthood, the storm moved northwestward, skirted the Bahamas and drew a bead on New England.

Persistent September rains there had lain a soggy carpet of river flooding rains. For those who had jobs on the dreary, Depression-era day of Sept. 21, it meant another slosh to work. This Wednesday however, would be unlike any other.

At 7 a.m., the storm passed Cape Hatteras. Forecasters armed with the primitive tools of their day noted falling barometers and hoisted storm warnings all the way up the coast to Eastport, Maine. Ships in the danger zone that might have reported on the storm scurried to port. In their wake, up an empty corridor, came the storm at ramming speed.

Atlantic City, NJ, winds shifted into the north and jumped to 55 mph. moderate rains and rapidly falling barometers indicated something big was moving just over the eastern horizon. Alarmed New England meteorologists marked this and their own precipitous pressure drops and issued the first warning for Boston at 2:30 p.m.

"A tropical hurricane is now in the vicinity of New York," and the forecast said. "Precautions against high winds, high tides and heavy rain should be taken throughout the area reached by this broadcast."

Traveling northward at 60 mph, the storm crashed into central Long Island. The barometer at the Coast Guard station in Bellport fell to 27.94 inches at 3 p.m.

To the east, the Connecticut and Rhode Island shores were buried by wind and wave. Gusts topped 100 mph before instruments were knocked down. Whole communities were washed away. People and animals clinging to roofs and fences were swept inland.

JUST LIKE MY SHIRT — Brothers from Pike work at embellishing their house.

By ED REYNOLDS
Collegian Correspondent

Fraternity row at the University of Massachusetts is cleaning up its act.

In an effort to raise morale and foster unity, many of the fraternities and sororities on North Pleasant St. have been performing cosmetic surgery on their houses. After spending a great amount of time and money on these projects, they are happy to find their work has been noticed.

As part of their restoration, Pi Kappa Alpha has resodded their lawn, laid down a new sidewalk and set up fences and bushes. Most of the construction and all of the maintenance has been handled by the brothers. The work that was started last semester and continued through the summer has profound changed the house.

"We've received a lot of positive feedback from the police, the mailman and the sororities," said Pike Brother Brian Howard.

At Lambda Chi Alpha the work has been going on for more than a year. They spent $28,000 to have the house resided and insulated. They also contracted a brother, Sean Byrt, to repave the driveway and repaint the front proch.

"I live in a more presentable, cleaner environment," said David St. Pierre, a fraternity brother. "A place I can be proud to live in."

President Steve Ilmrud says he hopes this will "give the frats a second chance and draw more enthusiasm to the Greek Area."

By the looks of things, it already has, and the school administration and community in general are overjoyed Fraternity Row is on the right track.

"Everybody appreciates it," said Chancellor Joseph Duffey, adding that the Greeks at work deserve recognition and praise.

He said the work "represents an effort to portray a better image, and that's good."

Jim Langley, a University spokesman, referred to Fraternity Row as a "main corridor of the University." He said it "leaves a great impression on how people percieve the Greek Area."

He added he is "very happy to see the transformation."

Also impressed was Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia. After seeeing the Pike grounds, he "wondered if they sold the house." He expressed concern that the lawn stay clear of beer cans, tire tracks and other vandalism, but added he hoped "some residents in town will take notice and do something with their properties."

Maia said he considers Greek life "a part of college life and a great tradition."

Radon levels in Hampshire homes on line with statewide test results

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Homes in Amherst keep pace with the statewide average of susceptibility to cancer-causing radon gas, according to experts in the University of Massachusetts Environmental Health and Safety Department.

A recent study by the Department of Public Health said 23 percent of the homes in Hampshire County contain a level of radon the Environmental Protection Agency says is worthy of concern.

John Stobierski, spokesman for the Department of Public Health, said nearly one in four of the 1600 homes tested in Massachusetts was found to have four or more picocuries per liter of air, which the EPA says could be dangerous. Picocuries measure the amount of radioactivity emitted from nuclear material.

Radon is an odorless, colorless gas that can seep into a house from any opening below the structure, such as cracks in the foundation. Once in the house, the gas stays trapped unless the house is ventilated. Radon, which can also seep into water supplies, has been targeted as a possible source of lung cancer.

According to one expert at the University of Massachusetts, though, there are many more serious health threats.

"I don't particularly think it's a big thing," said James Tocci, Radiation Safety Officer at the UMass Department of Health and Safety. He added smoking was a far greater cause of lung cancer.

"There are a lot of scientists who challenge the EPA's level of four picocuries as the level at which to mitigate [eliminate the problem]," he said. "The question is how can you set a level at which the amount is dangerous."

Tocci said mitigating could be done in one of two ways. A homeowner can seal up leaks in the basement or foundation using caulk or cement, or ventilate the area to move radon to the outside air.

Tocci said before you begin to eliminate radon you have to determine if radon is there.

He said this can be done by obtaining a test kit from a radon screening company. The cost of a test kit is about $25.

One company in Amherst that does radon testing is KSE Incorporated, according to Jim Kittrell, president of KSE and a former professor in the UMass chemical engineering department.

The homeowner is instructed to leave the cannister open in his home for two to seven days. The cannister is then sent back to KSE and analyzed for the prescence of radon.

"The homeowner contacts us, wishing to have the radon level evaluated," Kittrell said, adding KSE would send the homeowner a small cannister containing charcoal.

Kittrell said KSE then contacts the homeowner with the results, and if necessary, gives advice on how to correct the problem. He said the company does no actual repair, but can refer the homeowner to a contractor.

"We don't feel it's ethical to do both the testing and the repair," Kittrell said. "There's an obvious conflict of interest there." He said the average cost of repairs was about $1,000, ranging as high as $3,000 and as low as a few hundred.

He said hundreds of the kits had been ordered in Amherst. KSE's kits and consultation cost $30. Kittrell said response had gone up since the Department of Public Health had released its latest study.

"One of the things we are troubled about is that when a story like this breaks, there is a flurry of activity, then it slows down," Kittrell said.

Kittrell said the company does not release the addresses of houses found to have radon, but that Amherst was keeping up with the state average of one in four houses.

Kittrell and Tocci agree there is no pattern to where houses with radon will be found.

"The only way to check for a high radon level is to check every single home," Tocci said.

Kittrell added some neighborhoods have a frequency of occurrence higher than others.

Tocci said breathing radon gas causes no immediate danger, but when radon starts to decay, it breaks down into harmful agents that attach themselves to the lungs, and emit radiation. If enough of these agents, or alphas, are emitted, they can cause lung cancer.

Tocci said radon is formed when uranium decays. He said that though there is no pattern to where radon will show up, rocky areas are slightly more susceptible because they contain more uranium.

Campus registration urged

Democrats optimistic for November

By SUZETTE HUNTE
Collegian Correspondent

Working for the success of the Dukakis-Bensten ticket is very important to the University Democrats, but it is not their primary concern.

According to Jeff Cronin, co-president of UDEMS, "Above and beyond all else, our main concern is to encourage students to get involved in the voting and political process on campus."

The group, located in room 423 of the Student Union Building, is a non-profit registered student organization whose purpose is to inform the University community about the Democratic party.

There are presently 20 active undergraduate members, but because of an influx of volunteers last week, membership is expected to exceed 50 this year.

One of the UDEMS most recent efforts has been their voter registration drive organized my Michael Griener, the organization's co-president and Western Massachusetts coordinator.

"Mike's voter registration drive was very, very sucessful," said Bob Johnson, vice-president of the UDEMS.

Griener has worked in the past with the Amherst town clerk to get registrars to come to UMass to increase the number of students who register to vote on campus.

"Students as an age group vote less percentage-wise than any other group nation-wide," he said. "We want to make sure that students, along with understanding the issues, get out and vote."

Griener, in an attempt to bring the ballot box to the voters, is also trying to get a box in the Hampden Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area. Southwest, with nearly 5,000 people in a quarter-mile area, is one of the most densely populated areas in the world.

The successful completion of the Griener's project would include Southwest in Precinct 10.

Another concern of the University Democrats is voter education.

"When thinking about the upcoming elections, people tend to have a lot of excitement about the (Democrat and Republican) tickets and a lot of fear," said Cronin.

The University Democrats are working to arrest these fears with information, not only about the Dukakis-Bensten ticket, but the entire Democratic slate, including incumbents John Olver (State Senate) and Stan Rosenberg (State House of Representatives).

Scheduled for sometime later this month, the UDEMS have organized a round-table discussion for students with Rosenberg. The discussion is designed to enable students to get to know Rosenberg while voicing their concerns, views, and opinions.

The group has also organized a debate on Tuesday, Nov. 1 between Griener and W. Greg Rothman, head of Students for Bush. "The general issues involving the two campaigns will be discussed," Greiner said. "Basically the audience — the students — will define the flow of the debate."

The UDEMS will also be assisting the Massachusetts Free Press, a Democratic-oriented paper. The first issue will be released during the first week of October.

Partially tested blood products wrongly released by Red Cross

WASHINGTON (AP) — An internal review of the Red Cross's blood service regions indicates that more than 2,400 blood products were released improperly over a six-month period — 518 of them without complete testing for deadly diseases.

"The review found no indication that any Red Cross center issued blood for transfusion that had a confirmed positive test for AIDS or hepatitis B," said Dr. S. Gerald Sandler of the Red Cross blood services told a news conference Wednesday.

Despite this, he noted that the 518 blood products had been issued before all record checks or testing had been completed.

That information was not known at the time of their release, and the products should not have been released, Sandler said.

Dr. Ernst R. Jaffe, chairman of the organization's Blood Service Committee, meanwhile, announced that the Red Cross, in compliance with the recommendations of the its review board, signed a voluntary agreement with the Food and Drug Administration to help avoid such errors in the future.

"Less than a year ago Red Cross discovered that the increase in number of tests conducted and blood samples quarantined also increased the potential for human error," he said.

Following the release of properly tested blood products at facilities in Washington, DC, earlier this year, the Red Cross committed itself to "a national zero error goal and launched a nationwide review" to determine the extent of these mistakes and to develop ways to reduce their potential, Jaffe said.

Suspect pleads innocent to conspiracy

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Richard M. Zagranski has pleaded innocent to a new grand jury indictment charging him with conspiring to murder case against him.

The indictment also charged Zagranski with intimidation of a witness in a case against one of his alleged co-conspirators. He also pleaded innocent to that charge Wednesday in Hampshire Superior Court.

Zagranski, 24, of Chicopee is facing trial for the alleged murder of Michael R. Molin, 30, of Granby, who was killed on Feb. 19 in Amherst in what prosecutors say was an argument with Zagranski over a $500,000 land deal.

Zagranski and two other men that he met in the Hampshire County Jail have been charged with plotting to force a witness to write a letter claiming he killed the victim and then to murder the witness.

Republicans cause board angst

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Despite the appearance of Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, at last night's Board of Governors meeting, the main topic of discussion was once again the Republican Club.

The issue surfaced at the meeting when two board members expressed displeasure with the decision of the BOG Executive Committee to give space to Students for Bush. The Minuteman newspaper will share office space with Students for Bush.

The Club was removed by the board at the end of last semester because of alleged harassment, but continued to occupy the space because they felt the board's decision to remove them was unfair.

Gov. Tim Gloster said he would submit a motion to remove Students for Bush from its office space. He said many of the members of Students for Bush are the same as the Republican Club, therefore a sanction has not been imposed on the Republicans.

Gloster said other groups had been waiting for the space before Students for Bush.

"The board has conceded to the demands of the right," Gloster said. "We threw them a bone to make them shut up. To [board chairperson Eric Nakajima's] credit, tensions have eased. But at what price? Have we created an environment in which harassment is more likely to occur?"

Gov. Christina Bolton also objected to the move, and the process used.

"I think it's just ludicrous that we got all the harassment charges and we just slap them on the wrist . . . and nothing is happening," Bolton said. "We basically haven't done anything."

Nakajima said given the tensions in the past involving the Republican Club, both reactions were understandable, but he said Gloster's motion to remove Students for Bush would be a mistake.

"I still believe very firmly that the work of the executive committee was good and that work can result in a better community and a better situation for all students," Nakajima said.

Gov. Bill Hewitt applauded the decision concerning the Republican Club. "I'd like to congratulate the Executive Committee," he said. "I think it was blasphemous what happened to the Republican Club."

Nakajima said at the close of the meeting that he thought the board could work on more important issues than the office space of the Republican Club.

Campus Center Director Bill Harris showed support for Nakajima, saying he had handled the issue well.

"The fact that you're bringing this up is really getting us nowhere," Harris said.

In other business, Rosenberg appeared to ask the board to solicit Campus Center restaurants to participate in "A Piece of the Pie," a fundraising event scheduled to take place Wednesday, Oct. 19. Participating restaurants will be asked to donate 10 percent of their receipts to a Western Massachusetts food bank.

Harris said it may be a problem for Campus Center restaurants to take part because they operate on a "break-even" policy, not seeking to make a profit.

Rosenberg said the planners of the event could work with Campus Center administration to work out an arrangement.

Some advice for Mike and George

A blue suit to oblivion

Michael Dukakis. Less than three months ago, the name meant competency, economic promise, and an escape from the unethical Reagan-Bush White House.

Three months later, it's become painfully obvious to Duke watchers that their man has failed to touch the US pulse, an inability that has put him behind George Bush in the polls, and may be an indicator of a Bush victory in November.

David R. Mark

Watch the television and you'll see anti-abortion protesters at a Dukakis press conference in Chicago. Watch the television and you'll see people at a St. Louis rally protesting Dukakis' killing of an anti-bestiality statute (while he was a Massachusetts state representative). Watch the television and you'll see everything at a Dukakis event. Everything but Dukakis.

What happened? The Dukakis campaign was rolling along, 17-point-lead and all, on the theme of 'Our guy is competent; Bush will gaffe eventually. Everything is fine."

And poof, the lead was gone.

The problem? People don't know enough about Dukakis to vote for competency alone, and like others before him, the first gust of dissent has blown Dukakis over.

Not two years ago, it happened to Presidential Candidate Joseph Biden. He plagiarized, a forgivable offense, but because he had no well-known history to fall back on, he was forced out of the race.

Supreme Court Nominee Douglas Ginsburg had a similar problem. He smoked pot, again a forgivable offense, but because he too had no well-known history to fall back on, he was forced to withdraw from consideration.

Consider what happened when news first came out about Republican Vice Presidential Nominee Dan Quayle. His National Guard service during the Vietnam War and possible affair with a Playboy bunny were minor. Nonetheless, with little to fall back on, the indiscretions almost forced him out of the nomination.

Now this inability to fall back on anything is plaguing Dukakis. But Dukakis supposedly has plenty to fall back on. By now he should be so well-known that something as small as Pledge of Allegiance propaganda won't put him in a permanent quagmire.

But Dukakis is in trouble, and must do something, and fast.

Instead of relying on Bush gaffes, Dukakis must go on the offensive. What about 'voodoo economics?' Isn't this one of the largest flip-flops of the decade? Other well-documented flip-flops include his speaking against China's inclusion in the UN and then turning around to become ambassador to China, and his reversal on abortion.

Bush recently told voters Dukakis can't decide where he stands on the Strategic Defense Initiative. It's time Dukakis returned the favor.

Dukakis must also learn to appear more human. Dukakis wears the same blue suit when he's at a political conventions as when he's at a hog show. Will someone get the man a short-sleeve shirt? One classic tale of Dukakis' suit is when, on a hot Arizona day, the Duke played catch on an airfield, suit and all. Supposedly campaign aides rotated as the person Dukakis threw to, because none of them could last in the heat.

That should tell us something about the Dukakis of old. A Duke that looks more like you and me, dress and all, is the Duke you and I are more likely to vote for. The Duke always in a blue suit is headed for oblivion, not the White House.

That's just two things. There are plenty of others. But if Dukakis is to win in November, he has to change soon, because competency alone isn't enough against a gust of dissent.

Benefits of Greek scene

The University of Massachusetts offers many exiting extracurricular activities. One of the most rewarding is the fraternity and sorority system.

Fraternities and sororities are the best places to meet people and party, but they are much more. The Greeks offer excellent leadership opportunities, and lifelong bonds of friendship. Just as important, Greeks have a higher Grade Point Average than the rest of the campus.

The Greek Area can help make an overwhelmingly large University seem smaller. There is a lot of interaction between the different fraternities and sororities; exchanges, athletic events, and pizza parties. These, among other things, offer opportunities to meet and hang out with members of other houses.

Another advantage to going Greek is always having a group of friends to come back to. Knowing that after graduating you will always be able to come back to the place where you spent your college years is a great feeling. Every house in the Greek Area does. When you join a fraternity or sorority you are joining a brotherhood or sisterhood of friends to study with, play ball with, hang out with, and party with.

Rush began for University fraternities on September 13. Rush parties are non-alcoholic and are where University men have the opportunity to meet with the brothers of a fraternity and see if they may like to join. It is often advised to go to as many rush parties as possible, so the rushee will have a better sense of the Greek area. Rush goes on for two weeks, with bids being extended at the end of each week, September 17 and 24.

Asian potrayal bigoted

Special from Office of Third World Affairs

The cartoon "Zero-Sum," by Monte Morin, published by the Collegian, depicts Asians in a stereotypical, distorted, and derogatory manner. The cartoon character, Susan Wu, is not drawn with eyes. Instead, two lines depict her "eyes."

This is a gross distortion of Chinese, Japanese, Korean, and other people who have an epicanthic fold, a fold of skin of the upper eyelid which is longer than other people's.

Throughout our childhood, most of us have been teased by our peers as having deformed eyelids, so deformed that we did not have eyes, but instead, slanted gaps. We see things haven't changed. We can see . . . we have eyes.

We realize Monte Morin may not have drown this cartoon with malicious intentions. In any case, we feel he displayed insensitivity by portraying Asians in this manner. (A better example is shown right.)

We demand that the cartoon "Zero Sum" either be removed from the pages of the Collegian or that Morin stop depicting Asians in this manner.

Sharon Hyun Park
Northeast

Editor's note: 12 others signed this letter. Monte Morin, upon hearing about this and other complaints, changed the cartoon character, Susan Wu. He said the original way the character was drawn did not have malicious intent.

Sexist insert offensive

I don't usually like the inserts in the Collegian. The 'Plus' insert in last week's paper was no exception. I find these inserts are sexist and reinforce cultural stereotypes. They also reflect a materialistic non-thinking commercial 'get yours' mentality.

I am objecting specifically to the photograph of the woman on page nine of 'Plus.' If you compare her to the male models on pages 16 and 17 the difference is obvious. The men look confident; the woman is cute and flirtatious. I know the Collegian has no control over what is printed in these inserts, but they can choose not to run them. The editors should think about if they want to be associated with this garbage.

Geoffrey Feldman
Amherst

The Collegian accepts letters, columns, and cartoons from the UMass community. Submissions should be sent to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass, and include name (no pseudonyms), local address and local telephone number.

The Collegian has recently received submissions from three cartoonists. We appreciate the submissions. However, we need to talk to the cartoonists, and they did not include their telephone numbers. You know who you are, so please come down and talk to David or Pam. Thanks.

Library abusers and money misusers wear thin

Gil Penchina, the Undergraduate Student Senate Budgets Committee chair, says he took student money for his own use to prove that it could be done. Well, I'm sure relieved that we now know people in powerful public positions can steal from us. What's next — proving government officials usually lose sight of their ideals after taking office? Proving the truly needy are usually neglected? Proving the student government is largely ignored by the student population? Proving students drink on weekends? That we sometimes skip class for no good reason? I can't wait to see the rest of the agenda.

The Tower Library already has a few users, two weeks into the semester. That's great. But it also brings to mind the spectre of library abusers.

I don't mean people who spend too much time there. I mean the people who make their lives easier and everyone else's more miserable by ripping pages out of bound periodicals.

People who do this ought to be hung by their thumbs. They should be forced to watch Elvis movies 24 hours straight. They should have their general education requirements doubled.

Nancy Klingener

Most of the people who do this would never dream of more public vandalism, like the spray-painting that recently appeared on the Student Union and Fine Arts Center. But somehow, because the evidence is concealed between two hardcovers, the library abusers think it's okay. They should be forced to sit down and explain why they ripped pages from a bound periodical. They permanently vandalized an expensive resource for what? A paper in sociology th will probably get a BC? That no one will read except some long-suffering TA? They probably don't even read the stolen articles themselves. They probably just use them to beef up the old bibliography. Wouldn't want to actually spend some time in that ugly old tower now, would we?

* * *

The Student Senate's Coordinating Committee outraged some people by going behind closed doors to discuss the Penchina debacle last week. A lawyer told the Collegian that the open meeting law may not apply to the Student Government Association, since their constitution is not recognized by the state. The question then arises: exactly how is the SGA relevant? They have a lot of our money, they have long, useless meetings on Wednesday nights and they give Collegian reporters a good training in screwed-up politics. We, at least, appreciate it, but I recommend everyone at the University check out at least one senate meeting before they graduate. It may be the last time you get to go to the circus for free.

Nancy Klingener is a Collegian columnist

Evidence seized

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — Lengths of rope seize from the home of a murder suspect were similar to the rope used to strangle his enstranged girlfriend in Montague last summer, an FBI chemist testified.

But the same material is used in many types of rope, the chemist told a jury Wednesday in Hampden Superior Court. The testimony by Special Agent Terry Randolph of the FBI Crime Laboratory in Washington, DC, came during the third day of the trial of Gregory Martino on charges of slaying his former girlfriend, Vivian Morrissey.

Martino, 33, of Greenfield, has pleaded innocent to a first degree murder charge. His trial was moved to Springfield because of fears that publicity surrounding the case in Franklin County would result in a tainted jury there.

Martino had lived with Morrissey until a month before her death. Her body was found in the cellar of her home on Sept. 21, 1987.

Prosecutors contend that Martino left two notes at the house to make the death appear to be a suicide, but State Police Sgt. Norman Roberts, who led the murder investigation, said the marks on the victim's neck indicated she had been murdered.

Martino's lawyer, Thomas Merrigan, told the jury in opening arguments his client "had nothing to do with the slaying."

Poet writes about drug addiction

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

When Jim Carroll comes to the Iron Horse Cafe on Monday to read some of his poetry, don't try to find one interpretation of his work. Whatever you do, don't try to find one answer to the question "Who is Jim Carroll?" You'll always get two or more answers.

Carroll's classic childhood journal The Basketball Diaries is a chronicle of a young celebrity jock, and at the same time it's the journal of a celebrity poet. It's a thrilling account of a kid who rocketed through the '60s full throttle, and at the same time it's a harrowing account of a 16 year-old junkie. Carroll kicked the habit some 15 years ago, yet his most recent book - a prose/poetry collection called The Book of Nods - derives its title from the rush produced by heroin.

Then there's Carroll himself. To look at pictures of him is to see a tall, thin, almost angelic looking guy with reddish blonde hair and a soft-spoken model's face. To listen to him during a phone interview is to hear a harsh angry voice thick with the accent of working-class Manhattan — a voice that would break a beer bottle over the head of anyone who called him "angelic" to his face. Yet the voice quickly became friendly and enthusiastic and within two minutes, Carroll was discussing Manichaeism, an ancient religion that taught dualism between good and evil.

"Duality is what makes good art, with things pushing and pulling," said Carroll. "In music, there's formal counterpoint, and it happens in rock'n'roll, too, where you use abstract lyrics, and then go into really clear ones. I like poetry, where five different people can get five different interpretations."

Poetry, he said, is about the duality of the intellect and the heart.

"You've got to see something with your heart," said Carroll. "There's an element to it (poetry) where someone who's virtually illiterate could get something, then go to school and find out ten different other theories from a com lit teacher. But there's always that first time. So you have it again, where the heart and intellect are dualities in themselves."

Despite Berrenger and Winger, movie leaves viewer Betrayed

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

I finally had a chance to see what all the fuss was about. A film playing locally has seen a lot of controversy over its subject matter. No, I'm not talking about The Last Temptation of Christ, which is not in the area (and may never be). The film I'm talking about is Betrayed.

Starting with the murder of a controversial Chicago talk show host, the film moves to the peaceful grainfields of the midwest. Debra Winger is the new gal in town, meeting typical midwestern man Tom Berrenger (Platoon), and his idyllic family. The first hint of an issue is Grandma serving her famous "white" cake. When Tom asks Deb to come with him on "a hunt" soon after, it's no surprise that the prey is a human being. But to the hunters, "he's just a nigger."

They kill the man in cold blood, and as shocked as she is, Winger stays with her man. Why? Because she's F.B.I., and is trying to uncover the large scale plan to assassinate various leaders by these unified groups; nice groups like the Klu Klux Clan, Neo-Nazis, and other folk. These people gather with their kids at a camp where they sing the national anthem around burning crosses and train four-year-olds terrorist tactics. Interesting premise, but the way it's presented is the problem. I won't risk saying that nothing like this exists or could happen, but their plan to take over America is ludicrous.

What gives the film a shade of credibility are the leads. Debra Winger is excellent, showing her usual range and conviction, and Tom Berrenger, even in his most vicious moments, is still at heart, a father. He loves his kids, even if he's corrupted their values at such a tender age. (Some lines the 5-year-old girl says about the "bad" people only make me hope she didn't understand them.) Yet the leads can't save the film as a whole. Director Costa-Gravas (Missing) keeps the people interesting, but the pacing is agonizingly slow, while beating us over the head with the issues. As a friend said to me, "if you don't know the moral of this film by the end, you're brain-dead."

Exactly. Betrayed wants viewers to act against prejudice, but it makes them yawn instead.

Whatever film you see, do it at the nearby mall theaters. Both the Hampshire 6 and Mountain Farms 4 Theaters have reduced their admission price. For students with a valid I.D., the cost is only $2.95., every night of the week. Seriously. And the film experience will soon have a new dimension at the Mountain Farms. They are presently installing Dolby Stereo in two of their four theaters. When completed, the added sound dimension will be something to look forward to.

Young Fresh Ones fun to watch

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Correspondent

Seattle guitar band The Young Fresh Fellows are an oddity.

Sure they can crank it up and stuff — which seemed to be enough for the crowd at last night's show at Sheehan's — but I can't help wondering why they exist. What, if you will, is their raison d'etre?

"Hey dude! They're a fun band!"

Fun seems to be a word invented with gee-tar bands in mind. The Young Fresh Fellows single is called "Everything Is Gonna Turn Out Great." And like everything else in the set, they played it will gusto and energy — a bit like The Long Ryders.

Late in the show, members of Scruffy the Cat turned up after they had finished their gig at The Iron Horse earlier. They looked a bit more hip than the Young Fresh Fellows, but when they got up to jam, they sounded exactly the same.

Scruffy's lead singer Charlie Chesterman laid in front of the stage refusing to join in the fun. If you were in the audience and having a good time, you'd say he was being a brat. But he has a point, although he probably doesn't know it. When the show was over, all that was left were four pools of sweat.

O'Neill's 100th birthday to be celebrated

By LISA KRONLUND
Collegian Correspondent

This year marks the 100th anniversary of Eugene O'Neill's birth. And the UMass Theater Department is joining a nationwide celebration to honor the playwright with his Sea Plays as season-opener for 1988-89.

Sea Plays, performed in the Rand Theater, consists of three one acts that embody traditional O'Neill themes, according to director Edward Golden.

The Long Voyage Home, In the Zone and Ile focus on an "aching and longing for the ideal - coutnrerpoint of illusion and reality," Golden said.

Sea Plays also features two faculty members, Harry Mahnken and Christina Adaire. Over the summer, Mahnken kept busy by performing the lead role in A Saint By Any Other Name in the Atlantic Theater Festival. While he was occupied with the festival, Adaire acted with the Porthouse Theater Company in Ohio.

This will be a "really innovative season" said UMass public relations person Lisa Danforth with three more presentations in the Rand Theater, and two in the Curtain.

In November, Mirandolina, an 18th century farce by Carlo Mirandolina will come to the Curtain. The Rand production will be an adaptation of a play by the French playwright Simone Benmussa entitled The Singular Life of Albert Nobbs, followed by Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice in March. The Merchant of Venice fits into the season's theme of tradition with variation, Danforth said.

"It's one of the most well known, yet infrequently performed plays by Shakespeare," she said.

The next to last play will be the world premiere of Between Home and the Hunted, written by UMass graduate student Dudley Stone. The MFA candidate's piece will be performed in April.

The final performance of the theater department will be Albertine in Five Times in early May. The play is written by Canadian playwright Michael Tremblay, who is more or less unknown in the United States.

Shows in the Rand cost $4 for the general public and $3 for students and senior citizens. Prices for the smaller Curtain theater are $3 for the general public and $2 for students and seniors. There is also a subscription series available at discounted prices. For further information, contact the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511.

Both Sea Plays and Mirandolina have already been cast, but open auditions will be held Oct. 23 and 24 for The Singular Life of Albert Nobbs. Danforth stressed that "we encourage all students to audition." For more information about auditions, check the audition board on the first floor in the Fine Arts Center.

Weekly column to feature area art galleries

By KATHERINE LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Just when you thought that the Collegian couldn't spring another column on you, here comes Art Attack — the latest word on art gallery openings in the area. Hopefully, in the next few weeks I may be able to feature an interview with an artist or two. I am also planning to give you a complete listing of the art galleries in the area, and there are a lot of them.

The fall exhibition season is now underway, so let's look at what's here. Starting from the Student Union Art Gallery, there's an interesting show going on now through Sept. 30.Eleni: Art from the Discarded features sculpture made from things as unlikely as tin cans. Originally an abstract expressionist painter, the Greek artist changed her style between stints as a schoolteacher and the operator of an art school. Incidentally, she will be giving a gallery talk on the 30th at 7:30 p.m. The Gallery itself is open Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Meanwhile, in the Fine Arts Center the University Gallery has three concurrent exhibits running now through October 19. 24 Cubes, the first of these shows, features sculptures by twenty-four artists, all in the shape of cubes. An interesting feature: a neon-lit cube. Artists contributing to this exhibit include Christos Gianakos and Robert Smithson.

The second show, entitled Grids: Selections from the Permanent Collection, is a collection of 20th century American prints, photographs and drawings by such artists as Jennifer Bartlett and Jackie Ferrera. Recurring patterns are used in this show, though they also include grids along with cubes.

German artist Georg Herold is also showing his work at the University Gallery. Besides showing his work from 1986-88, he also has a few sculptures on hand which he worked on during his two months in residency. Later this month, Herold is going to give a lecture on his sculptures. The University Gallery is open Tuesday-Friday, 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday, 2-5 p.m. Finally, Hampden Gallery in Southwest Area is showing paintings by James Hansen until October 5.

On to the other four colleges. Hampshire College's gallery is showing Inside/Outside: Private Art featuring works from both professional artists and "outsiders"(such as women at a shelter). If possible, try to pick up a catalogue while you're there. The statements which these people make are disturbing. The Hampshire College Gallery is open Monday through Friday,10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Sundays,2 to 5 p.m.

Meanwhile, at Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, there are two exhibits until October 27. One, a collection of photographs, is entitled Nine Women Photographers. The second is a group of paintings entitled Small Paintings from the Permanent Collection. If anything, this is a good excuse to visit the campus.

A couple of exhibits at Thorne's Market in Northampton should make you go A.P.E. for a while, if you'll excuse the pun. Worcester artist Elizabeth Rudnick will be exhibiting paintings, monotypes and pastels in a show entitled The Myth of Landscape. Also at the gallery is Northampton artist Heather Howarth, whose collection of drawings is entitled Places in Time. Both exhibits will run until Oct.4. The gallery's hours are Monday-Saturday,9:30-5:30; Thursday nights until 9:30 and Sundays,noon-5 p.m.

Well, that's it for this week. Hopefully, this will begin a successful semester.

■ Carroll

If the word "duality" describes the way Carroll thinks and writes, decisive describes the way he acts. When Carroll talks about his past he doesn't editorialize; he tells it like it was.

Carroll was born in Manhattan in 1950, attended Catholic and public schools until 8th grade. A scholarship to private school introduced him to poetry.

"In my neighborhood, poetry was a sissy thing; I probably would have had trouble if I hadn't done things like play ball. When I got into poetry, I didn't flaunt it. In private school, maybe, but (chuckle) not in the old neighborhood," he said.

Carroll's first book of poetry, ORganic Trains, was published when he was 16, and in 1970, The Basketball Diaries came out.

Diaries came "at a certain age I said I'm going to cut loose and check it all out. Someone once asked me what I thought about drugs, and I said I didn't think about them, I took them."

A second collection of poetry, Living at the Movies, appeared in 1972. After the book came out Carroll kicked his heroin habit. His journal during this period of seclusion would later be published as Forced Entries: The Downtown Diaries. In the early '80s Carroll pursued a singing career; his first album, Catholic Boy, yielded a minor hit single, "People Who Died." 1984 saw the publication of The Book of Nods, and at the present, Carroll is working on two novels.

For Monday's reading, Carroll will read some unpublished poetry while accompanied by guitarist Tamela Glen. Carroll said, "I'm just going to read some new poetry and Tamela will be playing behind it. Also, when I was in California I read from The Basketball Diaries for the first time in a while; I may do that here. A lot of times people say they didn't get as much out of my poetry until they saw me read it. Different phrasing will give a poem a different meaning."

Repeal of city ordinance dimmed by support

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A fourth city council member has voiced support for an ordinance requiring city workers to live in Springfield, dimming prospects for a repeal of the ordinance.

Councilor Kateri B. Walsh declared her backing of the law on Tuesday, joining councilors Mary E. Hurley, William T. Foley and Morris Jones in their support. The repeal needs six votes to pass when it goes to the full council for a vote on Sept. 19.

"I believe in the concept of residency," said Walsh. "I'm not going to vote against the residency (requirement), but I am going to make sure it's enforced."

She spoke to more than 40 people at the council's Administration and Internal Affairs subcomittee. Most of the audience were police officers who favor repeal.

"A man should have the right to live where he wants to live," said Officer Michael Perry.

Proponents of the requirement say it helps maintain a strong tax base and gives city workers an investment in the city's welfare.

Democrats mostly unopposed in primary races yesterday

BOSTON (AP) — Yesterday's primary offered little more than a formality for the largely unchallenged Massachusetts congressional delegation.

Two Republicans battled for the right to face veteran Democratic Rep. Gerry Studds in the fall an Democratic Rep. Brian Donnelly faced perennial opposition from a follower of extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

The rest of the Democratic and Republican primary field, headed by a well-heeled Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and longshot Republican opponent Joseph D. Malone, respectively, had a virtual free ride to the Nov. 8 general election.

Among these candidates were four Democratic incumbents with no major party opposition either in the primary or the fall.

On Cape Cod, Jon L. Bryan, 39, faced Martha Keyes, 29, for the Republican nomination to meet 16-year Democratic incumbent Studds. Both candidates are Barenstable residents.

Bryan, who teaches management and marketing at Bridgewater State College and is a pilot for USAir, was making his first run for political office with a campaign financed largely by $59,000 out of his own pocket.

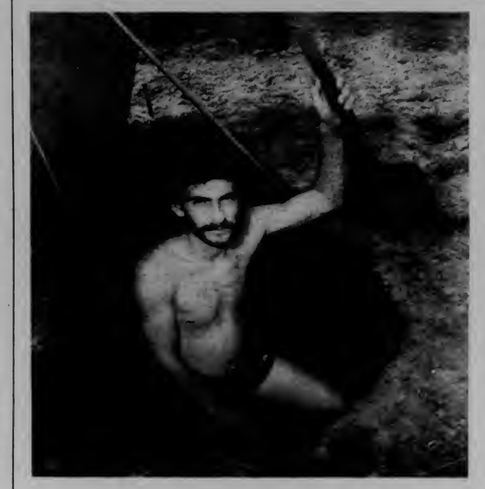
Bryan, considered by GOP officials as a potentially formidable opponent against Studds, criticized Keyes, an English teacher who had raised barely $5,000 for her campaign, for giving Studds credit for some of his accomplishments in Washington. "I wouldn't run against him if I thought he was doing a great job," Bryan said.

Meanwhile, Donnelly, a 10-year Democratic incumbent from Boston with a campaign bankroll of $447,000, faced LaRouche supporter David J. Peterson of Quincy, whom Donnelly beat by a 7-1 margin in the 1986 primary.

Donnelly will face Michael Gilleran, a Boston trial lawyer and Democratic-turned Republican, in the fall.

Only one of Massachusetts' 11 congressional seats is without an incumbent this year — the 2nd District seat being vacated after 36 years by retiring Cemocrat Edward Boland. Springfield Mayor Richard E. Neal, who faced a write-in challenge in the Democratic primary, has no major party opposition for the seat in the fall when he faces independent Louis Godena.

At the top of the ticket, 26-year veteran Kennedy has built a $1.4 million war chest heading into the fall campaign against Republican Malone, the former executive director of the state GOP who is mounting his first political race. Malone, with less than $14,000 in cash according to his latest campaign filing, faced an uphill fight.



Elitism won't stop croquet court salute

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — Smith College plans to dedicate the nation's first collegiate croquet court next week, nearly six months after it opened amid accusations that the school was embarrassed by the sport's elitist image.

"My level of enthusiasm is not particularly high by this time," said Richard B. Young, literature professor emeritus and fund-raiser for the field that bears his name. "The playing court had been around for months."

Smith President Mary Maples Dunn will shoot the first wicket at the Sept. 24 ceremony dedicating the court. Smith's team will give a demonstration of the sport, which evokes images of gentry in white dress hoisting mallets on smooth lawns.

The 105 by 84 ft. manicured lawn is the first regulation croquet court on an American college campus. It was built last year with 16,000 in donations from alumnae and friends, mostly at Young's urging. Before it was built, players had to drive to Lennox some 50 miles away for games.

The dedicating ceremony kicks off a weekend tournament involving New England Collegiate Croquet Association teams from Williams and Colby colleges and Brown University.

The field's first tournament, on April 8, opened to little fanfare at the 2,000-student school. Young said at the time: "I'm told that this court promotes the idea that Smith is elitist. If it weren't, they'd be out business."

The dedication planned for the first tournament was postponed because Dunn was out of town, college spokeswoman Debra Bradley said.

Bradley said Thursday that the ceremony was rescheduled for September because Dunn "wanted the dedication to coincide with a tournament so people could see the field being used."

SGA

Duffey said the students should have the right to decide how to govern themselves. Therefore they should write their own constitution.

Getting the constitution ratified, however, is an "unifinished agenda item."

"It is not my top priority," he said.

Orefice said the constitution's ratification is important because in a sense it will protect the SGA from the administration.

"It is a safeguard against administrators to strip us of our powers, at will," she said.

But Duffey said if the constitution gets ratified, "nothing will be changed," and the SGA will have "no more power" than it does now.

Senate Speaker Robert Fadel said, "If the constitution gets ratified, it will mean official recognition of the senate, its powers, and the power of the students."

Fadel said if the constitution gets approved, then one of the gains will be "clear control of the trust fund," whereas now the administration "can at any time take the trust fund away."

The control of the Student Activities Trust Fund interest will be decided in court in the coming months.

About 20,000 people were evacuated from Puerto Progreso and other coastal towns, a spokesman for the Interior Ministry in Mexico City said telephone today. Hundreds of homes were destroyed, he said.

The ministry said the storm seriously damaged the luxurious hotel zone in Cancun and destroyed about a quarter of the homes on the nearby resort island of Cozumel. Ham radio operators in Mexico City also told the Associated Press they had reports of massive damage to several hotels.

A navy sposesman in Mexico City said he had no word on the plight of an estimated 15,000 people who had been stranded there. Three ferries linking the island with the mainland were lost in the storm, but there were no reports of causalties.

Dept. of Revenue wants pirate trove

BOSTON (AP) — The state's highest court heard oral arguments Thursday on whether the finders of a sunken pirate ship off Cape Code must share a quarter of their booty with the state Department of Revenue.

In a hearing before a full five-judge panel of the Supreme Judicial Court, lawyers for salvage company owner Barry Clifford said there were no laws in place in Nov 1982 that would entitle the state to a share of the loot.

It was six years ago that Clifford and his salvage crew discovered the remains of the pirate ship Whydah about 700 yards off the coast of Wellfleet.

Artifacts from the ship including gold, silver, cannons and pistols recovered from the site have been valued at between $14 million and $25 million. Some estimates have held that the ship's total value in treasure may run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

University Democrats

Mark Wilkinson, a fellow supporter of the University Democrats and Editor-in-Chief of the Masachusetts Free Press, said, "We need writers, cartoonists, and editors. We urge students to get involved with the Massachusetts Free Press and the University Democrats as well."

Other upcoming events organized by the UDEMS include speaking engagements by Congressman Barney Frank, Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy and other well-known Democrats. There will be a grand opening celebration of the Amherst Town Democrats Office in downtwon Amherst, Friday, Sept. 30.

"We have tentatively scheduled a Democrat victory rally that day to get volunteers psyched up," said Cronin.

The members of the University Democrats, on a whole, are excited about the presidential ticket and are sure of its success.

"I am 100 percent confident that our ticket will win. I think Dukakis will be the next president of the United States," said Griener. "It is time for the Reagan Era to come to an end."

According to Wilkinson, Bush is "inconsequential."

Cronin added, "I think Dukakis will win because when people think about George Bush they are afraid. This is a man who has practically nothing to show for all his years in Washington. When the voters look at Mike Dukakis, they see someone who had been a chief executive for 10 years, has balanced budgets and has evolved into a senior statesperson on world affairs."

The University Democrats ask students to attend their first general meeting at 6 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 22 in the Campus Center complex. The room number will be posted.

Dukakis in Yellowstone resists fire from Bush

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) – Michael Dukakis, viewing the devastation caused by fires in one of the nation's most popular parks, resisted being drawn Thursday into another long-distance spat with presidential rival George Bush.

"I'll be responding to that sometime next week," said Dukakis, when asked his reaction to Bush's latest attack on the Dukakis claim that under his governance, Massachusetts has undergone an economic "miracle."

Bush said that people and business were leaving Massachusetts and that "my opposition ranks first in spending increases, second in tax hikes."

"If this were the Olympics his composite score would make him the gold medal winner in the tax and spend category," Bush said.

When the questioner said "but Mr. Bush said it today," Dukakis just smiled and replied, "Good luck to Mr. Bush."

After responding to a number of questions about the fires and gun control, Dukakis apparently thought better of his refusal to respond to Bush.

Without further prompting, he said: "If this nation had three percent unemployment (the rate in Massachusetts) and had 10 years of balanced budgets and had the record that we have, we could be looking forward to a future of strength and optimism and jobs for everybody. My state has more jobs than people to fill them."

He compared conditions in Massachusetts with "what's happened under Mr. Bush and the administration of which he's been a part and . . . the kind of fiscal mess I'm going to inherit as the next president of the United States."

Dukakis flew to West Yellowstone, Mont., then drove into the fire-blackened national park where officials briefed him on the efforts to contain the blazes.

Bob Barbee, superintendent of the park, said afterward, "We're not out of the woods yet."

The briefing took place on a road overlooking the Madison River and blackened hillside.

The Democratic presidential candidate, rarely seen wearing anything other than a dark suit and red necktie, dressed for the occasion in khaki pants, a brown suede jacket and boots that looked nearly new.

Joining him were four Democratic governors — Mike Sullivan of Wyoming, Ted Schwinden of Montana, Roy Romer of Colorado and Cecil Andrus of Idaho.

Dukakis was told that fires had burned more than 1.5 million acres in the park near it.

Dukakis said he was "awestruck by what's happened here."

"I can't remember a year in my lifetime," he said "when the weather seemed to be more important to us in many ways . . . the drought, the heat, and no a massive hurricane bearing down on us are reminding us not only of our mortality but of the importance of pulling together and caring for each other."

Questioned about his position on gun control, Dukakis said he believes hunters and sportsmen had a right to own guns and use them "in a legitimate an responsible way."

Minutewomen

But the Minutewomen didn't relent. They kept going at Starr, and the great chances kept coming. The golden one came when Powers launched one over Starr's head that struck the crossbar and bounced right back out. Roundtree was waiting, but her head shot off the rebound hit the pipe, as well.

Finally, with time starting to wear a little thin, UMass got on the board. Cassady took a pass from Kater and drove down the left sideline. Her cross pass into the box went over Starr's head and deflected off a UVM defender into the goal.

After all the prior missed opportunities, that turned out to be a huge goal. UMass didn't waste anymore time getting another, as just over a minute later, sophomore back Sue Gaudette chipped one into the air from downtown that escaped the jump of Starr and found the net.

"It was nice to know that we could play so flat against a team with a great game plan and still in," Rudy said. "I've got to give the girls credit for hanging in there without getting frustrated and without changing anything."

Sidelines: Saturday's game at Holy Cross has been rescheduled for Sunday, Oct. 2 in Worcester . . . the throw-in of the game came late in the first half, when a Vermont player took the ball on the far sideline, ran five steps down the hill and did a handstand flip while catapulting the ball into play. Rudy feels that that play is illegal in women's soccer, but it didn't have any consequence in the game . . . the Minutewomen have allowed just 10 shots in three games.

determined once the clock begins ticking. In all other respects, however, UMass is in fine form shoot down on the Owls. Gettler's team has yet to allow a goal this season, in a pair of wins over regional rivals New Hampshire and Maine, and against UNH on Wednesday, the UMass offense was in fine form.

"We're healthy, 2-0. . . we're coming into this game in the best psychological and physical shape we can be," said Gettler.

These are unusual words to be heard in mid-September, a time when there are traditionally more important matters being settled in the add/drop lines than on the athletic fields. But this is a crucial outing for UMass, and in the words of assistant coach John Martin, "now we're going to show if we're a good team."

Minutemen to face Ball State

"They're a lot like we are in that they are great as a team," Reid said. "They've only allowed 13 points in two games."

The Cardinals compliment their stingy defense with a powerful offense.

Tailbacks Bernie Parmalee (98 yds.) and Mark Stevens (107 yds.) both rushed effectively against Bowling Green. Stevens scored three touchdowns in the game, and has four on the season.

It will be the only venture into Division 1-A play this season for UMass, which has three non-conference games.

"There are two ways to go [with your non-conference games]," Reid said. "You can go Division 1 or Division 2, which some other teams in our conference do. We choose Division 1."

And the Minutemen know the task ahead of them.

"We'll have to play very well," Reid said. "We'll have to keep the linebackers clean, which will be up to the defensive line. Also, the secondary will have to play as well as they did last week."

And even if all those things go right, that is no guarantee UMass can beat the Cardinals.

"This week is a great opportunity to play in the midwest," Reid said. "We'll go out, have some fun, and do the best we can."

And maybe kill a giant.

Extra points: UMass, sparked by Bledsoe's 92-yard touchdown return against Maine, leads the nation in punt return average (31.0).

Punter Dimitri Yavis is second in the nation in punting (42.5 average).

These two teams have met only once before, in 1984. Ball State came to UMass and left town 26-10 losers.

The Minutemen outgained the Cardinals, 308-233, and held them to just four yards rushing.

Senior quarterback Dave Palazzi and the Minutemen will take on the Cardinals of Ball State University at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Minutewomen tip UVM, 2-1

Cassady, Gaudette score

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

All things considered, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team should be happy that it won its home opener yesterday against the University of Vermont, 2-1.

Statistically, the Minutewomen absolutely dominated their visitors from the Green Mountain state, outshooting them 30-3. But if blown chances were an official stat, UMass would have racked up a season's worth in this game alone.

Michelle Powers and the Minutewomen defeated Vermont, 2-1 yesterday in the home opener at Boyden Field.

Unofficially, the Minutewomen had seven shots hit the goalposts. That, combined with other various missed shots, and this game could have been a stomp in the roses by halftime.

But it took a pair of goals late in the game that probably shouldn't have even scored to pull the game out for UMass.

"It's a win," said UMass coach Jim Rudy. "I had a bad feeling when I saw the team in warm-ups. We didn't feel right, we didn't sound right and we didn't look right. But we dodged the bullet."

For nearly 75 minutes, the Catamounts were dodging cannon fire. UMass was assaulting the defense and goalkeeper Jen Starr at will, but just couldn't capitalize.

"The last two days in practice, we spent an hour each day on finishing," Rudy said. "We just didn't do it."

UMass pressured the Vermont pack defense early and often. Michelle Powers had the first scoring chance, when she pursued a loose ball heading toward the net just four minutes into the game. But Starr beat Powers to the ball.

Then came the first of what could be a new record for post-ringing shots in one game. April Kater's long drive nailed the crossbar, but bounced right back to Powers, who headed the ball over the net.

Later, Cathy Cassady hit the crossbar with a drive from about 60 feet out. The first half ended at 0-0, with Vermont lucky that it wasn't at least four goals in the hole by that time.

The Minutewomen kept knocking on opportunity's door in the second half, only to come up short time and again. Not only that, but Vermont, which had seen little of the UMass end all day, got a cheapie to take a 1-0 lead in the process.

The Catamounts were awarded a penalty kick from about 40 feet out. The ball was lofted over the defense into the box, where it was knocked around. Freshman forward Rachel Bondy snuck in behind everyone and knocked the ball home, giving Vermont the lead.

The goal, at 52:37, came on just the second shot of the game for Vermont. With all the chances UMass had seen go by the boards, a goal like that could have spelled the end.

Minutemen to challenge Ball State

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

To bill this game as David vs. Goliath would probably be going too far, but that may be the best way to characterize tomorrow's football game between the University of Massachusetts and Ball State University.

The Minutemen leave today for Muncie, Ind., where they will meet Division 1-A Ball State at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow. To say the least, it will be a challenge.

"It's like facing B.C. [Boston College], with all the scholarships they have," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "And they're having a great year."

Head coach Paul Schudel's Cardinals have won their first two games of the season, beating Toledo, 13-3, and Bowling Green, 34-10, and are in first place in the Mid-American Conference at 2-0.

But if there was ever a week for UMass to play Ball State, this would be it. The Minutemen are coming off an emotional 45-42 upset of the University of Maine.

Senior quarterback Dave Palazzi was 12-of-15 with 211 yards and three touchdowns in the air, and added another rushing.

Palazzi's numbers put him sixth nationally in Division 1-AA passing efficiency and earned him selection as an ECAC 1-AA weekly All-Star.

That, combined with 74 yards from tailback Kevin Smellie, and a number of big plays by the secondary (cornerbacks Garrick Amos and Jerome Bledsoe, and safeties Pat Doran and Vaughn Williams) allowed UMass to beat the Black Bears.

"I made a coaching error before the Maine game by putting too much pressure on the players," Reid said. "We said that game was it but one game never makes a season."

If it did, 1988 would have been a great season for UMass. Despite allowing 643 yards, the Minutemen came from behind in the final quarter to beat the Black Bears.

Ball State spent last week limiting Bowling Green to 26 net rushing yards and 204 total yards.

Minutemen to battle Temple in Atlantic 10 opener

'Huge' game tomorrow at Boyden Field

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

The leaves are still green, the field is intact, and the fans are wearing shorts. It seems unnaturally early to start thinking about 'huge' games. For the the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, however, tomorrow's date (3 p.m., Boyden Field) with Atlantic 10 rival Temple University is indeed one of those season-in-a-game affairs.

"This is our ticket to the Atlantic 10 championships," said UMass head coach Jeff Gettler. "The team set goals, to get into the Atlantic 10 championships. This is the absolute best way for us to get to the NCAA tournament." Of the four Atlantic 10 teams the Minutemen will play during the regular season, Temple's Owls are expected to be the toughest to beat. A win tomorrow would leave the UMass viewing the rest of the conference from above. And a win in the A-10 tournament would mean an automatic NCAA post-season berth.

"We need to be at least 3-1 (in the league). Winning this game will do that," said Gettler.

The Owls are riding a two-game winning streak, having opened the season with a 2-1 loss to East Stroudsburg, before rolling to consecutive wins over Bucknell and Lafayette. Senior midfielder Steve Jeremenko is the leading scorer for the Owls, with two goals and an assist so far this season. Itzhak Assor, a freshman late of the Hadassa Neurim school in Israel, is a scoring threat as well. Temple's high-powered offense and physical style of play will provide Gettler's squad with their toughest test to date.

"They're going to swagger into Amherst," said Gettler of tomorrow's guests. "We didn't beat them last year (a 6-0 shelling in PA), and we didn't make the Atlantic 10 playoffs because of that. They did.

"We did not come ready to play last year," recalled Gettler. "The players just did not come mentally prepared to play."

Following the loss, Gettler attempted to shake his team awake by benching seven starters for the Minutemen's following contest with St. Joseph's. A repeat performance this year is unlikely, the veteran coach hopes.

"If they don't show up prepared to play this game," said Gettler "I'll be very disappointed."

Whether the Minutemen will be in the right frame of mind or not can only be

Michigan may be toughest league game

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

When the University of Massachusetts field hockey team travels to Springfield Sunday it will not be for a road game.

After what the Minutewomen did to the Chiefs last Saturday, it will be like bringing the victory party to the losers' house.

But the schedule says in big capital letters, which designates this as an official home game, that UMass must play the University of Michigan in Springfield this Sunday at 1 p.m.

So for now, Springfield's artificial turf field, will be the Minutewomen's home away from home.

They play another so-called home game there Oct. 22 with the University of Toledo.

But there is reasoning behind all this. Last season when Michigan came to UMass, the game was rained out because Totman's grass field looked like a swamp.

The game was cancelled and Michigan had to go home with no chance of making the game up because they can only afford to make that long trip from the Midwest once a year.

Here's where Springfield can help. That artificial turf stuff they have over there is flat as a pancake and does not absorb the water. So if Mother Nature decides to rain on us this weekend, the groundskeepers can simply push all the puddles off the field.

By playing in Springfield on a Sunday afternoon, UMass will sacrifice fan support. They are playing twenty miles away from campus opposite the National Football League schedule.

Michigan is undefeated at 2-0-1, though they have not played anybody worth talking about. Its wins are over Chico State and Southern Illinois-Carbondale.

The tie was with St. Louis University. All those game were non-conference for the Wolverines, who play in the Big Ten Conference.

The Wolverines play their home games on artificial turf. They are more accustomed to the carpet. But UMass coach Pam Hixon does not believe that will be an advantage for Michigan.

"I am a firm believer that reguardless of what surface you play on, in order to be competitive, on the national level, you must be competent to play on both turf and grass," Hixon said. "So in my mind I don't think a turf team will have an advantage over us. We have a game plan for both turf and grass and I feel confident that we can do well on both surfaces."

One advantage that the Minutewomen will have is that they will not be facing Michigan's No. 1 goaltender. Gillian Piper is academically ineligible and therefore her backup, senior Joanne Green, will get the call.

Green has played well in all three games, only giving up two goals. She has recorded 10 saves.

No Wolverine player has scored more than one goal. Junior Forward Judy Burinskas and junior midfielder Sharon Cantor each have scored one.

Hixon would not disclose who she will start in net Sunday because of the battle between seniors Sue Desmond and Cindy Cox for the job but bet on Cox to start.

UMass is 2-0 and Cox has started in both of those games. She has given up only one goal and made 13 saves.

Cox, however cannot take all the credit for her goals against average. The defense in front of her has more than done than job.

In two games, the Minutewomen have surrendered just 13 shots while unleashing 62 of their own. However, they are not in midseason form yet.

"Our opponents haven't been that strong," Hixon said. "We've had some lapses on defense. I think we've got to play stronger still on defense. We should have allowed fewer than 13 shots in my opinion."

Student support for Dukakis increasing

By DANA KENNEDY
Associated Press

BOSTON — When Ariela Gross and Jill Wilkins joined the Dukakis campaign to try to mobilize the nation's eight million students, it might have seemed like an overwhelming task.

After eight years of the Reagan Administration, Democratic student groups on campus were not exactly thriving.

But Gross and Wilkins, both 23 and fresh from Harvard and Brandeis universities, are quick to report that American students are not as conservative or apathetic as they're made out to be.

Both said they were surprised at the numbers of students across the country who were interested in working for Michael S. Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor and Democratic presidential nominee.

"The response has been tremendous," Gross said in an interview at her office at Dukakis campaign headquarters in downtown Boston. "I think it's going to be a tough campaign because the youth vote is so volatile. But we're getting calls from students all over the country."

"I was surprised at how many people didn't mention Bush," said Wilkins, who works alongside Gross in a cluttered office decorated with posters and signs like "Get Raucous for Dukakis".

But the two also point out that students have consistently voted Democratic in every election since 1952 except for 1984.

Gross, who worked on the 1984 Mondale-Ferraro campaign, began as a volunteer on the Dukakis campaign and became a paid staffer six weeks later in the fall of 1987. Wilkins joined in January.

At the time, they said, there were hardly any student-led groups for Dukakis.

Before the primaries, Gross and Wilkins concentrated on making contact with student leaders on campuses. Their first big project entailed a satellite news conference conducted by Dukakis last November that was shown simultaneously at 56 campuses in 21 states.

Pow-Wow invades pond over weekend

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

A constant drone of drums hung over the Campus Pond this weekend.

The east side of the pond was the sight of the sixth annual Indian Pow-Wow of the American Indian Student Association of the University of Massachusetts.

Unusual smells of exotic foods and incense drifted among the tents and the numerous vendors, who were selling an array of items, such as hand-made jewelry, medicine plants, head pieces, sweatshirts, T-shirts, and clothing adorned with colorful feathers and beads.

In the middle of the vendors, a circle was sectioned off with a smoldering fire in the center, which was the site of men, women and children performing various kinds of native Indian dancing, which left some of the spectators awed.

Two groups of men sitting under a tent near the sectioned-off area beat out ancient rhythms and sang old Indian songs. The groups of dancers wearing traditional dress, clad with feathers and bells, energetically participated in the dance contest, which included traditional and fancy dances.

The weather was favorable for the event, although it started raining around 3:30 p.m. Saturday. The entertainment then moved to the Student Union Ballroom, and continued at full force.

John Running Deer Eleazer from the tribe of Shinnecock of Long Island said this was one of the best powwows he has attended at UMass, and he has attended many.

"I am very impressed with the number of people here," he said. "I've never had bad vibes about UMass' students or faculty, that's why I come back every year. I've enjoyed myself very much this weekend."

Said Jose Tolson, the Student Activities Program Coordinator for the event, "This event is important, it gives a group of students an opportunity to present a section of their culture."

New radio talk show about SGA to air on WMUA every Tuesday

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Although the Student Government Association is to empower student voice, many students are unaware of the issues. Radio station WMUA 91.1 FM will air a one-hour talk show to help students understand what's going on in the SGA.

"SGA Today" will air from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. every Tuesday night beginning tomorrow. Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice will be tommorrow's guest and will discuss the telecommunications project, a planned computerized phone network on campus.

Designed to be informative rather than an extension of the Undergraduate Student Senate's floor debates, the hosts will first interview the guests and then give the public a chance to call in their questions and comments, said WMUA Chairman Scott Lever, one of the show's five producers.

"I think we're going to get more questions because people just don't know about

Rally against Dukakis held on SU steps Friday

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Gov. Michael Dukakis became the target of criticism and ridicule outside the Student Union Friday afternoon as George Bush supporters drew about 100 people to the semester's first rally.

Campus conservative groups held the rally to lambast Dukakis for his record on education, defense and taxes, and to urge bystanders to vote against the democratic presidential nominee.

"Today I'm not asking you to vote for George Bush," said Brian Darling, a member of Students for America (SFA), speaking behind a podium on the Student Union's steps. "I'm asking you to vote against Michael Dukakis.

"I believe Dukakis will be the duke of death for the US economy," Darling said, referring to Dukakis' record on raising taxes in Massachusetts.

Darling also criticized the governor for what he considers Dukakis' anti-defense spending record. "This man hasn't met a defense system that he doesn't hate."

During the rally, speakers led the crowd in "No Dukes" chants several times. Speakers also engaged in brief exchanges with pro-Dukakis hecklers dispersed among the crowd.

Some members of the crowd held anti-Dukakis signs, some of which read: "No dukes," and "Nuke the duke." Members of SFA, a national conservative group, put up two posters on the Student Union's walls behind the podium that read "The Duke of Hazard." Apparently the posters were a pun playing on the old television program The Dukes of Hazzard.

Speakers also derided Dukakis for his promise to improve education if elected. When Dukakis visited the University of Massachusetts Sept. 7, he promised if elected he will increase funds for public education in areas where needed.

"We'll work with state and local governments to help our students become the best-prepared, best-skilled and best-educated in the world," the governor said in the Campus Center.

George D. Uribe II, SFA national field director, said while the governor is talking about improving education, he is raising tuition in the state's public colleges and universities because of Massachusetts' deficit.

Uribe said if Dukakis does not get students' money by raising taxes, he will get it by raising tuition.

This year's state appropriation of about $170 million to the University of Massachusetts also forced the Board of Trustees to approve an extra $230 on students' semester bills to help restore the University's budget shortfall.

Speakers at Friday's rally said students have to pay more to attend UMass because of what the speakers called bad financial planning by the Dukakis administration.

They also called Dukakis unpatriotic because the governor is against legislation that would make the Pledge of Allegiance mandatory in public schools.

Dukakis aides plan for transition

BOSTON — They don't like to talk about it, but aides to Democrat Michael Dukakis are quietly going ahead with transition planning, in case Dukakis wins the presidency and opens up hundreds of policymaking and patronage jobs in Washington after eight years of Republican rule.

The transition effort, carried out by a small number of trusted aides in near-secrecy, came to light when the campaign filed papers to create a non-profit Massachusetts corporation, known as Dukakis Transition '88.

The operation is chaired by Dukakis' old friend, attorney Paul Brountas, who chairs the overall campaign effort and who screened vice presidential candidates for Dukakis. Marcia Hale, who organized the Atlanta convention for Dukakis, is doing much of the actual work in the Boston office.

Brountas and Hale did not return repeated calls to discuss the process.

"We just don't talk about it," campaign spokesman Mark Gearan said. "It's a very quiet operation, housed separately from the campaign."

The campaign of Republican George Bush isn't eager to talk about its transition planning either. Publicly, Bush spokesmen deny giving any thought to the future that lies beyond Nov. 8, perhaps because they consider it bad luck or a sign of arrogance. But friends of the vice president, with or without Bush's permission, are known to be doing it anyway.

The Republicans are quite willing, however, to comment on the Dukakis transition planning.

"As usual, they have the cart before the horse. If they spent less time planning for transition and more time campaigning, they would not be behind in the polls," Bush spokesman Mark Goodin said. "Our position is you need to win the elction before you worry about the transition."

Dukakis allies justify the transition effort on the grounds that if the Democrat wins, he would be criticized later if he had failed to begin planning now.

As a Democrat, he would be bringing a change of party to the White House and the federal bureaucracy, involving personnel changes from the Cabinet to the ranks of U.S. marshals. Should Bush win, he would be expected to keep many of the Republicans who now fill those jobs.

What's more, a Dukakis victory would require him to make a transition out of the Massachusetts Statehouse, where he remains the sitting governor. He would have to quickly decide which, if any, of the people now serving in state government he wants to take to Washington.

Indeed, if Dukakis should win, it would mark the first time since 1932, when Democrat Franklin D. Roosevelt replaced Republican Herbert Hoover, that a sitting governor moved to the White House.

The transition out of state government would be a matter of keen interest to Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, a fellow Democrat, who would automatically succeed Dukakis and want to put her own people in place. So far, Dukakis has stood by his promise not to resign as governor unless and until he is sworn in as president next Jan. 20.

So, if he should win, Dukakis could find himself physically exhausted by a 20-month campaign, responsible for running the Massachusetts government at the end of a legislative session and beseiged by job-seekers.

"If he's not doing something now, it would be viewed as irresponsible later," said Jim King, a vice president of Northeastern University in Boston who handled Jimmy Carter's transition in 1976 and who advises the Dukakis campaign.

"But you can't really do anything before November 8 without looking like the cutest person in western civilization," he added.

Plane crashes in Cheshire

CHESHIRE (AP) — a single-engine plane en route from Rhode Island to Vermont with a pilot and two passengers on board crashed Saturday night on Mount Greylock, police and searchers said yesterday.

Rescue crews found one survivor at the site and were transporting him to the mountain's summit to enable a Coast Guard helicopter to take him to an area hospital, said Massachusetts Civil Air Patrol Col. John Bertioli at the Harriman-West Airport in North Adams.

Bertioli said a doctor was aboard the helicopter. However, he said neither the survivor's identity nor the extent of his injuries was immediately known.

New bill to increase fines for dumpers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Gerry E. Studds, using the power of his subcommittee chairmanship, has pushed to the House floor legislation that would increase criminal penalties for illegal dumping of medical waste and make dumpers liable to those financially hurt by the pollution.

And a New England colleague, Rep. Sam Gejdenson of Connecticut, says he will try to add another provision to the Massachusetts Democrat's bill that would allow the government to seize vessels caught illegally dumping medical waste in the oceans or the Long Island Sound.

The Studds measure, introduced a month ago, moved quickly throught the congressman's house Merchant Marine and Fisheries subcommittees on fisheries and the environment.

The full committees approved the bill Thursday and sent it to the House floor. Studds aides hope the bill will come up for a vote next week.

The measure would make dumping medical wastes a felony, increasing fines from $50,000 to $250,000 and the prison term from one year to five years.

In addition, the measure would allow medical state and local governments to sue dumpers for lost tax revenues. Coastal homeowners could recover for damaged properties, and fisherman and tourist-related industries for lost income resulting from illegal dumping.

Congress began moving on the medical waste issue after repeated incidents of used syringes, blood vials and other hospital throwaways were reported floating up on beaches from Massachusetts to Texas. The pollution crippled the 1988 summer tourist season throughout the Northeast.

Gejdenson, who introduced his measure Friday as a separate piece of legislation, said he planned to attach it to the Studds measure on the House floor.

"This bill would provide a tough sentence option to use against those who profit from polluting our oceans and beaches," the Democrat said, adding that the measure would "give disposers and the waste transporters a strong incentive to comply with the law."

Necessities places blame for death on "the system"

Worker says protection was not there for Virginia Ferrer

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

"I don't want to die," were the last words of Virginia Ferrer, a woman who friends say was a real fighter with a great sense of humor.

Necessities/Necesidades, a Northampton agency that works with battered women and their children, expressed outrage and sadness that despite the efforts of Ferrer to protect herself, "her life was ended by a man she had been running from for five years," according to a statement issued by Necessities.

Her estranged boyfriend, Alan Jose Reyes, was charged in Franklin District Court in Greenfield with murder, disorderly conduct, and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, in connection with Ferrer's death. Reyes, who pleaded innocent, is being held without bail until the pre-trial conference Wednesday.

A statement released by Necessities describes "the system" as an accessory to Ferrer's death. In the statement, "the system" refers to the legal system and its process of restraining orders and the welfare system.

The statement presents the idea that "after years of education and information, many individuals and agencies are still not fully prepared to intervene in situations of battering, and when they do, they are frequently influenced by cultural biases toward 'patching things up' and 'keeping the family together.'"

"She did everything right," said Aline Flower, a volunteer coordinator at Necessities. "She knew more about her rights than most of the people who were supposed to help her. To the bitter end she was a total optimist, otherwise she would have given up. She just kept trying."

Flower expressed concern over a lack of response to violations and abuse in the last year.

Less than a month ago, according to an article in the Daily Hampshire Gazette, the Northwestern district attorney's office dropped three charges against Reyes: assault and battery; violation of a restraining order; and larceny of property.

The charges were dropped, according to documents filed in court by the district attorney's office, because "the evidence available does not support the charges."

The fourth charge, malicious destruction of property, is still waiting to go to a jury trial, according to the Gazette.

"If he had been tried in August, he might have been in jail at the time of Virginia's murder," Flower said.

A second concern was with the restraining order, which expired the morning of Ferrer's death. That restraining order was issued in May and was not extended because Ferrer did not show up for a scheduled appointment in court.

"Virginia was very responsible when it came to the courts," said Flower. "It was not like her not to show up for an appointment."

Ferrer's sisters maintain that she and Reyes argued for three days before her death.

"Often when a woman most needs assistance, she is least able to get it," Flower said.

If the restraining order was issued in May then it had to have been set for three to six months, said Flower. "There's no reason she shouldn't have been given a full year's order."

A restraining order is a civil complaint and a result of the Abuse and Prevention Act. A violation of a restraining order is a felony.

Ferrer went to Necessities for the first time in January 1984 "because of Alan Reyes' abuse," said Flower.

Since that time, she has had nearly 10 restraining orders against Reyes and he has been in and out of jail for assault and battery and violation of those orders, Flower said.

In 1986, while Reyes was in jail for assault and battery and violation of a restraining order, Ferrer met and married a second man, Juan Ferrer.

She wanted to have a good home and a family for her children, said a close friend, (Norma) Rivera de Acosta. "I guess she thought if she did it right this time and married someone totally different it would be okay."

In March 1987, pregnant with her fifth child, Virginia Ferrer came to Necessities needing a restraining order against Juan Ferrer, said Flower.

He tried to strangle her, said Acosta, "she had bruises on her neck."

This was Ferrer's second stay in Necessities' shelter and the second man she would seek protection from.

When a woman becomes pregnant, it is typical for abuse to escalate, said Flower. "Virginia came to the shelter because she was afraid for her life."

It was at this time that Ferrer made the decision to ask DSS to find temporary foster care for her children, said Flower. "She was feeling the pressures of homelessness and needing to find shelter fast.

"She made the decision very carefully and very reluctantly. She felt that as long as she knew it was just until she found a place to live it was the only fair thing to do for the girls," said Flower.

DSS then drew up a "service plan" which involved family therapy and family re-unification, said Flower.

"She was in the shelter because of Juan Ferrer's abuse," said Flower, "and Reyes was still in jail or just out on work release.

"It was Virginia's understanding that she had to re-unite with Alan to get back her children," Flower said. "She was feeling a great deal of pressure.

"We called a meeting with DSS," said Flower. "We sat down with a well-documented chronology of abuse Reyes had against Virginia — every violation and every time she had pressed charges.

"Her worker said she was well aware of the history of violence, but he was the father of four of her children, and weren't we aware that he had enrolled himself in a batterer's program in prison," she said.

SAO coordinator keeps busy, helps RSOs

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

If you want to make an appointment with Delphine Quarles, you'd better do it a week in advance.

PROFILE

"I work directly with the student organizations in terms of doing all the logistical work, in terms of budget formulas.

Quarles is one of four activities coordinators for the Student Activities Office, a job which makes her one of the busiest staff members on campus.

"We work with student organizations helping them plan any events that they do, whether it be a concert, a play, a lecture, a dance or a conference. Anything that's related to what students like to do on campus," she said.

Quarles said she works with about 40 student organizations at the University of Massachusetts. Among these organizations are Union Program Council, the Black Mass Communications Project, the Greek Area and the UMass Marching Band.

tion, contract negotiation, logistics, hospitality, publicity — anything that needs to be done administratively," she said.

The students seem to like having her on their side, too. UPC Production Manager Ari Weinstein said that although Quarles is busy, she is always willing to put aside what she's doing to help his group.

"Last year when the alcohol policy was announced for spring events, she went and arranged the meetings (between UPC and the administration). She takes care of everything so far in advance, administratively . . . every time I have a question, the first person I go to is Delphine. She knows the answers to everything. She has copies of all the contracts and understands everything," said Weinstein.

BMCP General Manager Richard Gray also praised Quarles' efforts when the project had "security problems with (Public Safety Director Arthur) Hilson and the Public Safety Department. She helped us set up a meeting. She came with us to the meeting to help explain our plans and actions," he said.

Quarles, wife of Assistant Director for Residential Support Services Gerald A. Quarles, started working as a coordinator in December of 1979. She said she enjoys the work despite the "high stress" and "long hours" the job sometimes entails.

"My day started at 9 yesterday morning and didn't end until 10 last night and that's average for all of us who are programmers. There are times when I will have four events going on — one in the Fine Arts Center, one in Bowker, one in the Student Union Ballroom and one on the 10th floor of the Campus Center all in one evening — and we usually try to stop by each one of them and spend some time, so our lives are not your typical 9-to-5 job," she said.

Despite the long hours she puts in with so many student organizations, Quarles does not consider herself a central figure on campus.

"I consider myself as part of a team. The student organizations that I work with, I am a part of their team. I am a person who likes to be behind the scenes to make sure it goes smoothly. I am not one that either seeks nor wishes to have any limelight. . . the people that are truly planning the event, which are the students, it's their opportunity to shine, because it's their event, not mine. I am just one of the tools that helps to make it become successful," she said.

And what do students think of her contributions? Weinstein's appreciation was undeniable.

"Delphine is more than willing, always, to put aside other things she's doing to do stuff for UPC that has to be done. It feels fantastic to have our organization put at such a high priority in her work schedule," he said.

Gas leak forces evacuation of bar

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

A natural gas leak forced about 220 people to pour out of The Pub at 12:30 a.m. Saturday before last call when Amherst police informed management of the danger.

The full house shuffled calmly out the bar after the disc jockey's announcement of the gas leak, bartender Mike Sarnacki said.

No injuries were reported.

The leak sprung when a car hit the pillars guarding a natural gas pipeline in the alley between the Pub and Charlie's, Patrolman James Hobart said. The impact of the accident caused the pipe positioned above the ground to crack, he said.

About the leak Sarnacki said, "We didn't even know. The police came and let us know."

The gas leak had the potential to be dangerous, but because it was caught promptly and the flow of gas was shut off the potential for explosion was "minimal at best," Fire Chief Victor Zumbruski said.

The gas leak filled the outside air and police asked people not to start their cars in the area, Hobart said. The police were simply exercising caution, he said.

Fire department dispatcher Kim Dressen said originally the incident was dispatched as an investigation but then became a box alarm, which calls in all the fireman even those off duty.

Patrolman Sabino Epiceno said Daniel S. Thornton, 21, was arrested on Pray Street and he is the probable driver of the car involved in the accident. Two warrants from Orange and Nantucket were out for Thornton's arrest.

Civility Day will be the highlight of activities planned for the week of Oct. 23-29 to remember the 1986 racial brawl in the Southwest Residential Area and raise awareness about racism.

"The goal of the week's activities will be to further the struggle against racism by involving as many members of the UMass community as possible in a wide variety of interesting, thought-provoking events," says a letter to the campus community signed by Jason Rabinowitz, co-president of the Student Government Association; Simone Nicholson, of the monitoring committee on racial matters; and Gita S. Heerden, Graduate Student Senate president.

New rules issued in Boston limit alcohol consumption in colleges

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Licensing Board has issued strong new rules to limit drinking at college dormitories, fraternities and sororities, but students aren't pleased.

"It's a sad commentary on life in the 80's, but keg parties have become the only form of student activism," board chairwoman Andrea W. Garguilo said.

The rules were mailed Friday to every liquor store in the city along with each student residence. The city's assorted colleges and universities have an estimated total 250 dormitories.

The rules limit the amount of alcohol available to dormitory residents and leave enforcement up to dorm supervisors and liquor store owners.

"Why are they doing this to us?" asked Boston College student Joseph Bruno. "If every student learned how to drink socially, this wouldn't be needed."

The new regulations bar delivery of kegs or cases of beer or other alcoholic beverages "not intended for the personal use of the person ordering the beverages." Violations call for strong penalties, including possible closing of a dorm or loss of a liquor license.

"Over the years we've heard many complaints from neighborhood residents about drinking parties and we've tried to think

She said the complaints about rowdy college drinking parties center on noise, litter and violence.

Package store operators must keep a written record of the name and address of those receiving liquor deliveries, including the amount, date and time and signature of the person who accepted it.

Some liquor store operators said students can get around the rules by picking up beer themselves, but in general, they said the idea is sound.

"You never know, you could be delivering the liquor to a 21-year-old, but there might me a bunch of 16-year-olds in a room behind him," said Randy Harris of Charles Street Liquors, who said his store does not deliver to colleges.

Garguilo said the rules were codified after hearings last spring in which police and residents testified about campus drinking parties that could draw hundreds of young people.

They reported large numbers of minors at some parties, some drinking so much as to need medical treatment.

Police will make spot checks and report to the board. The drinking age in Massachusetts is 21.

Mass. Senate returns from summer break, will take up issue of auto insurance reform

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate, ignoring pleas from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, returns from a summer break today to take up the thorny issue of automobile insurance reform.

It's the only measure on the Senate calendar, thanks to a resolution from Sen. Robert Buell, R-Boxford, that was quietly passed in an informal session last week. But it could be all and more that the senators bargained for.

"I have never felt the level of (constituent) anger on any issue that I have felt in my travels in my district in the past couple of months," said Sen. John Houston, D-Worcester.

"All legislators have been out in their districts and I'm sure they are picking up the same thing," he said. "So I feel there is real pressure in the Legislature to act."

The Legislature has been wrestling with auto insurance reform for nearly three years. In that time, auto insurance rates in Massachusetts have risen nearly 33 percent to among the highest in the country. Meanwhile, legislative solutions have been repeatedly watered down in an attempt to limit opposition from the insurance industry, the auto repair shops and lawyers' groups.

Dukakis, who championed the state's no-fault auto insurance law as a legislator, has been the initial sponsor of auto insurance reform bills put before the Legislature in the last two sessions.

But Dukakis, consumed of late with his Democratic presidential campaign and doubtless concerned that if the Legislature is back in session, it could open up a can of worms over his budget vetoes, has publicly urged lawmakers to stay out until after the November election.

[the SGA]," he said.

The producers said the show will invite guests other than SGA officers. Senators and other individuals who are involved in SGA issues will also be guests, they said.

Ray Jennings, another producer, said, "Unless you go to the senate meeting, you really have no idea who these people are."

John Quincy Adams Tower Co-Senator Val Vigoda, Cashin Senator Todd Lever, and Jennings will be the hosts on "SGA Today," and will also help produce the show.

Todd Lever said he hopes to keep the show objective by not allowing the hosts to interject their own views, but added that their senate experience will help determine key issues.

The show will prime students for the senate meetings on Wednesday, Scott Lever said.

Hopefully, it will get people to go to the senate meetings, Todd Lever said.

If more people understand the issues more pressure will be exerted on senators to get things done instead of allowing senators to pursue their antics, he said.

Scott Lever said, "We're not forcing the senators. We're forcing the constituents to force the senators."

When students understand the issues in the SGA affect them, they will be more apt to participate in committees, Vigoda said.

Pittsburgh schools teach Flynn

PITTSBURGH (AP) -- Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn and four officials took a crash course on recent changes in the Pittsburgh Public School system with an eye toward improving city schools.

"We've invested heavily in upgrading the quality of education in ever school," Pittsburgh Superintendent Richard C. Wallace, who joined the sstem in 1980, said Saturday.

Flynn said his visit was one of several he plans to cities which have made notable improvements in their schools. "An unfinished task in Boston is improving the schools," he said.

Wallace, former head of schools in Fitchburg, Mass., said his first step was an intensive analysis of the problems in Pittsburgh. He listed some of the changes:

- Establishing teacher centers where teachers may refine their skills and go back to school recharged.
- Creating a teacher monitoring system.
- Setting up attractive magnet programs at a number of schools.
- Establishing a teacher recruitment program in which former students may return to teach.

Wallace and Al Fondy, head of the Pennsylvania state teachers federation, told the delegation that the 79-school Pittsburgh system seems to work well because labor and management are committed to quality education.

Collegian biased

We thank Nancy Klingener ("Library abusers and money misusers wear thin," Sept. 16) for the Collegian's most sensible words on Gil Penchina — A person in a powerful position can abuse the system. It's not unique. Nixon did it. What's the surprise?

The Student Government Association questions whether Penchina was testing the system or embezzling money. Penchina was confronted many times over the summer. He never said he was running a test. Now there's no proof to back up his story. The SGA is not trying to defame Penchina or call him a thief. Until we have proof either way, we will accept his resignation and go on.

The Collegian must have proof the SGA and Student Activities Office don't. The Collegian is certain Penchina was running a test, and as a crusading do-gooder, is being unjustly persecuted by the SGA. The headline on Monday's Collegian read "Budgets chair misuses funds to prove point." Who says? Two Collegian editors said "claims" was edited out of the story on the incident and the headline reflects that. They promised a front-page correction that still hasn't appeared.

The Collegian, for some unknown reason, is investigating everyone on the Coordinating Committee instead of Penchina. Well, they can investigate anything from the Southwest Area Government from last year. There's nothing there. It would make more sense in investigating the Budgets Committee chairman's misuse of funds to see the Budget's Committee account, but far be it for us to tell the Collegian how to waste their money.

Finally, in interviewing members of the SGA about Penchina's resignation, the Collegian's reporter asked questions oddly. Is the question, "But if he didn't do anything wrong, should he resign?" objective? The Collegian should treat the issue like the SGA. Not admit or deny his guilt.

Stephanie Orefice
Student Trustee

Editor's note: Eleven other student leaders signed this letter.

The Collegian has a policy of not printing front-page corrections, and these are only printed when editors agree one is needed. The Collegian also has a policy of not promising anyone what will be printed. We apologize if SGA leaders misunderstood our response to their request of a front-page correction.

As for the question "But if he didn't do anything wrong, why should he resign?" the Collegian reporter was addressing acomment by an SGA leader who could not prove some of Penchina's actions were wrong. Reporters' questions may sound biased, but the test is whether stories are biased, and note the question is asked in the conditional tense. The Collegian stands by its coverage.

Odds and ends

Blues from the cage

After the horrible trial and error convocation last year that left 4,000 new students perspiring all over each other and left many R.A.'s insulted by Joe Duffey's lack of knowledge on our role in student life (I only wish we got room and board, Mr. Duffey), I thought things would change. 'Short and sweet,' they said.

Not short enough. But that's the convocation blues.

Josh Galitsky

I feel bad for the people who put the convocation together. I know their hearts are in the right place. For a while, I thought it would be as good as I predicted it would be to my floor.

But this R.A. was proven wrong.

Better than last year? Yes, but there's a long way to go. Chancellor Duffey had important things to say. But he mixed in too much humor from a 'How To Reduce the Generation Gap' handbook, instead of just stating his point. When he got points across, they reeked with 'Is the Duke watching?' self assurance.

The student speaker was much more straightforward than Duffey, but the message she brought to our ears never penetrated our hearts. I empathized with her forgetting her speech on Martha's Vineyard. I was rooting for her when she talked about cultural diversity. She mentioned the word ten times, and each time I shook my head 'yes.' But she didn't define the word, instead putting it into a UMass context. The flame of her fire was dimmed as she sat down. I hope someone sends her the original speech. I would love to see the message she wanted so desperately to get across.

Then there was the keynote speaker. What a wonderful book. What a horrible speech. It was fluid. It was alive. It was better than I can write. But to the ears, it was pathetic. 'CASLAC whispering in the trees?'

The capper of the evening wasn't the jazz welcoming us into the Cage. That ruled. It wasn't the awful weather that drenched me and my floor. It wasn't even the ice cream I thought I was going to be served (I still don't know if it was because I left early). The capper was when they made the hideous assumption that to get in with the 18-year-old crowd, they would play a hip Michael Jackson video. It reminded me of the middle aged directors of the Nestle's Quik commercials who think a teenager's definition of cool is a greasy-haired 14-year-old in a satin jacket, talking slow and drinking milk the same way.

The idea of a convocation is excellent. Important issues need to be addressed and a welcoming is in order. It's exciting to see 4,000 fresh faces in the same boat. But why not get a Boston comedian to do the tidbits? I'm sure they could relate to the crowd better and still keep it clean. Maybe then the new students at UMass will leave the Cage saying 'Hey, this place is cool,' instead of 'Can you believe they played Michael Jackson?'

What's the story with the SGA?

As Student Government Association beat reporter for the Collegian in the fall of 1986, I realized SGA members take pride in two things: Controlling almost $2 million of student monies with minimal administrative control, and being a government elected by students.

Pedro Pereira

But an old suspicion has taken hold of me recently. Do people join the SGA to serve the students who elect them or for their own interests?

So far this semester, I have found the latter holds true, at least for some in the SGA's higher echelon. When Coordinating Committee members convened in executive session (apparently breaking the state's open-meeting law) to discuss a matter of public interest a week and a half ago, it was with their own interests in mind.

They did it to hide from the students who elected them. Executive sessions are closed to the public; the press cannot be present.

I requested that the Hampshire County District Attorney's Office investigate whether the committee broke the law by entering executive session. SGA members charged my request was for personal reasons. They don't understand that holding meetings behind closed doors cheats constituents of the right to know what they are doing.

When elected officials debate matters that affect the public behind closed doors, the press must demand the public gain access to the debate. When the government holds an illegal executive session, newspapers can obtain a court order demanding that minutes taken during the closed meeting be made public.

But no minutes were taken at the SGA's executive session. By involving the district attorney's office I am insisting we know if the open-meeting law was broken and, if so, to make sure this infringement of the public's right to know doesn't happen again.

But a new dimension to the situation has emerged. The Collegian learned last week that the open-meeting law may not apply to the SGA because it was not created by state legislation. Should the district attorney's office find that is the case, we have a bigger problem on our hands.

If the SGA is not recognized as a governmental body and we can't force it to hold public meetings, SGA members could hold all meetings behind closed doors. If all meetings are held behind closed doors, the public will never know what their elected officials are doing. If the public can't find out what they are doing, SGA members can do whatever they want.

This is a bleak picture, considering the SGA controls almost $2 million of student monies. The money you earned over the summer could be misspent without your knowing it.

There is something fundamentally wrong with that. Something would need to be done to make the SGA accountable.

If the district attorney's office determines the SGA is not a governmental body, why should the Collegian cover the SGA? The Collegian doesn't send reporters to other public meetings because we may find a closed door when we get there. Sending reporters regularly to these meetings would be a waste of time.

Will our covering SGA meetings be a waste of time if they don't abide to the open-meeting law? Why should the Collegian bother? Perhaps, the SGA leaders can answer these questions.

Pedro Pereira is editor in chief of the Collegian

Bush can clean his own mess

I've felt an acute nausea since Ronald Reagan became president, so I thought my vote for Michael Dukakis in 1988 would be reflexive and automatic.

Yet, for all my antipathy to our vice president, I'm compelled to vote for Bush.

No, this isn't a grotesque case of masochism. It's just that, once in a while, it'd be nice to see someone clean up their own mess. The victor in the upcoming election will inherit the Reagan legacy and nobody is more deserving of it than George Bush.

Michael Greenfeig

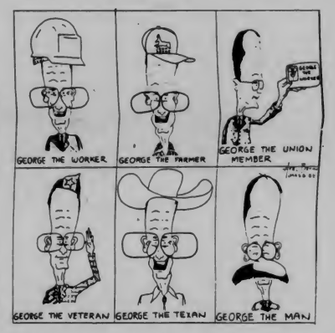
The current administration has brought our country an 'economic boom' on credit we can't afford, financed a Pentagon we can't control, conducted covert actions financed by drug money, alienated the poor, and ignored every warning nature's devised. Our next president may face the consequences for these misguided actions and I don't want the Duke to take the blame. He may have his faults, but he's not responsible for these national problems.

Bush, on the other hand, is just the man for the job. He has sat quietly by Reagan's side, performing services more befitting a houseplant than an informed leader. He's a sequel to the Reagan comedy of errors, but he won't get the laughs of the original. He says he'll 'stay the course' of the Reagan revolution. Is this a promise or a threat?

The newspapers this past summer have been filled with warnings of what's to come. Economists confidently predict a recession in the early 1990's, some even calling for a full-blown depression.

Environmentalists sound the alarm for drastic curbs on pollution while conceding we may have gone too far already. If this translates into skyrocketing inflation and massive crop failures over the next four years, the country will look to the White House for an explanation. Shouldn't Bush hold that press conference?

When taxes rise in the next administration, (and they will) it will be the working class and the working poor who feel it most.



They will want to know why this country is so deep in debt. When toxic wastes can no longer be swept under the rug, or dumped in our oceans, people will ask why the problem was allowed to fester for so long. If the truth about the Iran-Contra-Cocaine connection is finally addressed by the media, people will ask how such insanity could take place. Doesn't Bush deserve the opportunity to field these questions?

Many of the Democratic Party's most prominent leaders feel that way. Sure, Mario Cuomo, Sam Nunn, and Bill Bradley had their reasons for ignoring the nominating process. In light of the promising position the Democrats have in regaining the White House, these excuses don't ring true. It's more plausible they feel it will not be a good time to be president.

So come November, there is a choice to be made. Do we throw Dukakis to the wolves and hope he can work another 'miracle,' or do we let Bush answer the question 'Where was George?'

Michael Greenfeig is a UMass student

They said it. . .

"What is it about the Pledge of Allegiance that upsets him so much? It is very hard for me to imagine that the Founding Fathers, Samuel Adams and John Hancock and John Adams, would have objected to teachers leading students in the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag of the United States." — George Bush, Aug. 24.

Of course, Samuel Adams had been dead 89 years, John Hancock 99 years, and John Adams 66 years before the Pledge of Allegiance was even dreamed up. According to one account, the Pledge of Allegiance was a creation of the Kansas Populists and Republicans in 1892; according to another, it was devised in that year for publication in the magazine Youth's Companion to mark the 400th anniversary of Columbus's discovery of America. Its importance during the first decades of the 20th century was in the American educational system, where it was used largely to help de-Europeanize the children of immigrants and meld them into "one nation indivisible."

New book from gonzo father

By CHRIS PARCELLIN
Collegian Correspondent

He's back . . . and he doesn't like what he sees.

After a lengthy absence, the father of "gonzo" journalism, Hunter S. Thompson, is back lampooning American politics with a new book entitled Generation of Swine.

Thompson examines the "swine" who inhabit this country today and fires a hardy blast of mace in their eyes. Yes, the good doctor has reached down deep into his kit bag and provided the world with more evidence of his vicious, crazed humor.

Thompson seemingly spent his hiatus storing venom for his latest book — a collection of columns that he wrote for the Hearst-owned San Fransico Examiner. Much space is devoted to bashing such sacred cows as Ronald Reagan and George Bush. Thompson firmly believes that the president is senile and mercilessly chainwhips the chief executive, labelling him "a silly old fool." "He is older than most parrots, which can live about 200 years," Thompson writes.

Bush is portrayed as "a mean crook from Texas" and one strange vignette features him trying to revive a dead cat with mouth-to-mouth resuscitation on Pennsylvania Avenue before a hooting crowd. Fact and fiction blur in Thompson's work; he has the ability to twist facts as though they were silly putty.

Thompson's personal misadventures found their way into the book as well. He describes the stark horror of having a satellite dish installed in his backyard. And in another weird episode, Thompson persuades passersby in a shopping mall to have their blood pressure taken by one of those cheesy machines. Each is taken aback by the peculiar readings the machine generates. Thompson takes his own blood pressure and the gadget pronounces him dead.

One envisions Thompson spending much of his time at home in Woody Creek, Colorado, firing guns indiscriminantly and drinking whatever booze he can lay his hands on. There is a mad righteousness in his writing as he mocks the unsuspecting swine who gets in his way.

Obviously, Thompson, who turned 50 this year, has not mellowed with age. Generation recalls many past glories: the incessant political muckraking of Fear and Loathing On the Campaign Trail '72; the wild and hilarious debauchery of Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas; the wall to wall madness of The Great Shark Hunt.

But beneath the humor there is a genuine anger directed at those who Thompson feels are content to let things stay as they are in this country. That is the basis for the title and, as always, Thompson is right on target with his acidic opinions and barbed criticisms. There is no other new journalist who can match his flair for exposing the absurdities that surround us in the '80s. In these days of "just say no" crusades, Thompson proudly thumbs his nose at social convention as he continues to document his drug and alcohol binges. His stature as an American folk hero is untarnished ("Uncle Duke" from Doonesbury is based on Thompson.)

Love him or hate him, Hunter Thompson is unquestionably one of the most important journalists of our time and Generation is his best work since Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas.

Hitting the Amherst area now, and in the near future, is an assortment of cool happenings ranging from guitar workshops, to free shows, to open jam sessions. The music scene within the Five College Area is beginning to roll, particularly here at UMass.

Aspiring guitarists will delight at the opportunity to take some first class lessons which are being offered to UMass students with an Arts Council discount. Classes are offered in Classical, Popular, Jazz, and Bluegrass styles. Students can register for private study on an ongoing basis. Special group study classes are also offered, and registration continues through September 22 in the Old Chapel, Monday -Thursday 9am-4pm and Friday 9am-1pm. Call 545-0519 for more information.

Is everyone excited about the upcoming Godfathers show at the Student Union Ballroom? This slick band is a treat to see live, and their image on MTV strays very little from their ultra-cool persona and sound. Lets hope they're around for awhile.

No I'm not Plate-O-Shrimp's official press agent, but I thought you'd like to know that they'll be at L'Oasis on Friday and Saturday September 23 and 24. Get over there and dance it up.

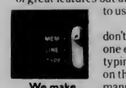
At Smith Corona, simplicity is the mother of invention.

Our engineers racked their brains so you won't have to.

We started out with a very simple idea.

To make electronic typewriters and word processors that have lots of great features but are very simple to use.



We make the simplest typewriters in memory.

So simple you don't have to keep one eye on your typing and one eye on the instruction manual.

So simple you don't need a degree in computer programming to operate them.

So simple they can even make a confirmed non-typist comfortable at the keyboard.

Call it human engineering if you like. Or call it ergonomics. Or call it plain old inspiration.

What we came up with is a line of remarkable typewriters that are sophisticated without being complicated.

In fact, they're unlike any other typewriters you've ever seen before... or used before...or muttered at before.

Take our new Smith Corona SD 700. (Lots of people are going to.)

We call the SD 700 the Memory Typewriter. You just may call it the simplest typewriter in memory.

It features a 7,000 character editable memory you can access with the mere flip of a switch.

Combined with the 16 character LCD display, you can proofread, correct and make changes before you ever put anything down on paper.

Of course, should you want to Give your typing a screen test.

make changes on paper, we've made that simpler than ever too.

On the SD 700, as well as on every new Smith Corona typewriter, you'll find our new correcting cassette.

It's easy-to-load and you can insert it in seconds.

There are no spools to unwind. No complicated threading. No tangles.

So now correcting mistakes is as easy as making them.

We've reformed the correction system.

Add features like a Spell-Right™ 50,000 word electronic dictionary, WordFind, WordEraser, Full Line Correction and much more and you've got a typewriter that's not just incredibly simple to use, but simply impossible to pass up.

Of course, the same goes for every other Smith Corona typewriter and word processor as well.

Which is why we recommend that you hurry to your nearest store and try our machines yourself.

Obviously, they won't come to you.

Yet.

Places to go for food

By SCOTT ROE
Collegian Correspondent

The next time you are walking around campus and you start to feel your stomach grumbling, don't worry. There are plenty of places on campus that can satisfy your hunger.

The Campus Center and Student Union have a variety of places that run the gamut from fast food to health food. Start at the top — the Top of the Campus that is. The 11th floor of the Campus Center contains a restaurant, bar and a splendid view of the campus. The TOC serves lunch and dinner and while the menu is slightly limited, the food is good and relatively inexpensive. It's a nice place to treat Mom and Dad when they come to visit. And if you are over 21, Tuesday night at the TOC lounge is free munchies night.

The Hatch, located downstairs in the Student Union, is a haven for people-watchers but it also serves fast food. At the Hatch you can pick up a quick breakfast on your way to class, or for lunch or dinner try a "Speedie Burger," fries and other assorted Hatch originals. There is also La Cuchina for pizza and pasta or the Deli Garden for a sandwich or salad.

For something in the health food vein you might like to try Earthfoods Cafe or the People's Market. Earthfoods is open from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and is now serving soup and salad with rice and beans. The Peoples Market may be more to your taste, where they sell everyring from fine Columbian coffee, to all-natural toothpaste, to carob-covered rice cakes. They also sell a variety of fruits, and their bagels can't be beat. Though the People's Market may be a little difficult to find (behind Earthfoods Cafe), it's well worth the look.

If you've been at the library all night studying and find yourself in desperate need of a break, why not check out the Blue Wall, arguably the best place on campus for study breaks. You can get a quick lift from the wide selection of freshly ground coffee, cappucino or espresso. The Blue Wall also has a choice of ice cream, cookies and muffins at good prices.

The Campus Center isn't the only place to quiet your stomach. Most of the residential areas have their own snack bars: Southwest's Hampden Munchies; Central's Greenough snackbar; Sylvan's McNamara snackbar and Orchard Hill's snackbar in Field.

So, if you can't handle another DC dinner, or you don't want to catch a bus to your house or apartment, stay on campus and get a decent meal for a good price. Even if you're not hungry, buy some popcorn at the Mini Store and feed the ducks; they're always hungry.

A look at the latest singles

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Correspondent

The Singles Scene: A look at the latest releases

When in Rome "The Promise"

It's a new Ultravox for the late '80s. When In Rome employs some old tactics to create a new hit. By using the standard British techno-pop melodies and throwing in some moody lyrics they've struck the same vein as pop predecessors ABC, Johnny Hates Jazz and Duran Duran. Catchy but common.

Debbie Harry "Liar Liar"

Blondie's back! Well, sort of. This fun loving '60s remake of the Castaway's hit sizzles thanks to Harry's incredible vocals. Although lack of air play will probably give this one an early death, it is certainly worth listening to.

Wet Wet Wet "Sweet Little Mystery"/The Four Tops "Indestructible"

Something is wrong here. Wet Wet Wet, a new Scottish soul band, have mastered the Motown sound, while the great Four Tops are struggling through a forgettable piece of commercial slop. If you want to relive the Detroit sound, you'll have to listen to music from the U.K.

Prince "I Wish U Heaven"

As Prince's style has developed over the years, his music has deepened and become more obscure. The Purple One is a master at setting a mood through music and his latest effort is no exception. The mellow, loose structure of music and lyrics combine perfectly to create a listening pleasure.

Jane Wiedlin "Inside A Dream"

After her first top ten single "Rush Hour", "Inside A Dream" may seem disappointing to some. Those who listen to the lyrical content of a song should be pleased, but Wiedlin's child-like voice could annoy others. But it's a step in the right direction and an adequate follow-up.

Terrence Trent D'Arby "Dance Little Sister"

From the first few seconds of the song you know you're in for something wild. The egotistical D'Arby has been bragging of his talents for months and deservedly so. This latest single should draw comparisons to James Brown and will most likely become D'Arby's third U.S. top ten hit. Do we now have a Godson of Soul?

Kylie Monoque "The Locomotion"

Another product of the hit factory from the British production team of Stock, Aitken and Waterman. They've cranked out hits for Bananarama, Rick Astley, Dead or Alive and many others. Now this Australian soap star is hoping the winning formula will work for her. If you enjoy the acts listed above, chances are you'll want to do "The Locomotion."

■ local vocals

This past weekend had a couple of tidbits to offer from our local favorites. Initially rained out, Split Decision(formerly the Remnants) eventually played a short set at State Street in North Amherst early Saturday night. S.D.'s powerful sound is headed by the explosive lead guitar work of veteran Bruce Richardson. Boasting a heavy duty rhythm section, and featuring the brash, unbridled vocals of singer Bill Probst, Split Decision displayed the sound which challenged eardrums all over Southwest at last Spring's pyramids concert. Easily the tightest and most talented UMass band this year, they'll no doubt be noticed soon.

Across town, Vital Organ played to a sweaty crowd at Pi Kappa Alpha. Mixing funky r&b influences with their own straight ahead rock style, this band reaches a pleasant hybrid sound.

Vital Organ is composed of ex-members of both Strong Waters and Shelf Life. Covering everything from Lynyrd Skynyrd to The Kingsmen, they've proved to be a party favorite.

On a slightly larger scale, Bim Skala Bim played a private show at Amherst College Saturday. Already the heavyweights of the Boston ska scene, Bim looks to be expressing the same influence here in the Pioneer Valley. Speaking of ska, heard of a band called Iron Elf? Keep your ears open and you just might.

SHOULD YOU TAKE A BREAK FROM THE PILL?

Some women think they need to take an occasional rest from the Pill. So they switch to a less effective form of birth control, and increase their chances of getting pregnant. Just how restful this can be is highly questionable. What is certain, however, is that there's no medical evidence that supports this notion of taking a break. None.

There are other myths, misconceptions and questions about the Pill. What about the Pill and breast cancer? Although there are conflicting reports concerning this issue, the Centers for Disease Control reported that women who took the Pill—even for 15 years—ran no higher risk of breast cancer than the women who didn't. They also reported that ovarian and uterine cancer are substantially less common among women on the Pill. What's more, Pill users are less likely to develop pelvic inflammatory disease (tubal infections), benign breast disease, and iron deficiency anemia—not to mention menstrual cramps.

And the rumor that the Pill makes you less fertile is just that. Rumor. Studies indicate that if you were fertile before you took the Pill, taking it should not affect your ability to have children later. Some women may experience a short period of readjustment after discontinuing the Pill. But even so, they usually become pregnant soon.

So does the Pill have any real risks? Yes. And you should know what those risks are. For example, if you are taking the Pill, you should not smoke. Especially if you're over 35. Cigarette smoking is known to increase the risk of serious and possibly life-threatening adverse effects on the heart and blood vessels from Pill use. What's more, women with certain conditions or medical histories should not use the Pill. Even if you're already on the Pill, you should see your doctor at least once a year. And be sure to read the patient information that's included in every Pill package.

When it comes to birth control, the best advice is to seek out the best advice. Go to reliable sources. Ask a lot of questions. Discuss all the options with your doctor.

Because only then will you know where the myth ends. And the truth begins.

■ students for Dukakis

By that time, the number of Dukakis student groups on campus had grown to about 150, Gross said.

Since the primaries. Gross and Wilkins have seen the number of student organizers grow to more than 500 in all 50 states.

'We're registering about 3-1 Democrats and we've always been known as a conservative school,' said Joseph Elias, 21, a senior at the University of Kentucky who is the Dukakis student organizer in that state. "People are starting to tire of the Republican genre. There's a lack of responsibility in the Republican administraion and people like me who will be heading off to work soon are feeling it."

Most encouraging for Gross and Wilkins was a recent call from students at American University in Washington, D.C., announcing the formation of a campus group called Republicans for Dukakis.

The student vote, which differs from the youth vote, is often dismissed by political campaigns but should not be underestimated, Gross said. While voter registration among those 18-24 who are not students is negligible, registration figures among students 18-24 equals the general electorate.

"Students are getting invloved in partisan politics, not protest politics," said Gross. "The issues they care about focus more on public service. They're working more for social change in a different way."

But while Gross and Wilkins are optimistic about the student vote for Dukakis, there have been disturbing anti-Dukakis rallies in, of all places, the governor's home state.

Some 60 students gathered for an anti-Dukakis rally Friday at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, sponsored by a campus conservative group called Students for America.

Treatment of laboratory primates debated

BOSTON (AP) — While scientists debated how to provide for the mental health of laboratory primates under new federal rules over the weekend, pickets patrolled outside, contending the biomedical community has been lax on the issue.

"The top priority is to allow social life," Frans de Waal of the Wisconsin Regional Primate Center told a conference Saturday, adding that if animals need to be isolated, it should be limited.

De Waal said social life for lab chimpanzees and monkeys should include primate babies being raised with their mothers or with peers and the use of animals in pairs for experiments, if possible.

"I don't think people are really trying," he said of the problem of primate isolation in the laboratory.

The conference at Harvard Medical School was sponsored by the school, Tufts University and the University of Massachusetts to provide some scientific input to new federal rules.

Under an amendment to the 1985 federal Animal Welfare Act, laboratories must meet basic standards for the physical care of primates and house them in ways that promote their "psychological well-being."

However, rules to put the federal law into effect are nearly two years overdue.

An estimated two dozen animals' rights advocates picketed outside the school contending the conference would only continue the delay of new rules.

"These people in the meeting are not qualified to make comment on the well-being of primates," Scott Van Valkenburg of the New England Anti-Vivisection Society said.

Michale Keeling of the chimpanzee unit at the University of Texas said researchers should begin to improve the lot of lab primates whether there are rules in place or not.

He said: "It is my opinion that if we don't adopt a more aggressive approach in demonstrating progress, our criticism will be successful in stampeding the public and the Congress into throwing the baby out with the bath water."

Dr. Jan Moor-Jankowski of the New York University Laboratory for Experimental Medicine and Surgery in Primates added: "We have to exert peer pressure on those who don't clean up their house so we all don't suffer."

Hanover Teacher Association prepares to go on strike

HANOVER (AP) — The Hanover Teachers Association's 150 members yesterday prepared to go out on strike and post pickets outside schools after they failed to reach an agreement on a new contract with school officials over the weekend, a teacher's representative said.

The school committee and members of the school administration failed to respond to telegrams offering renewed negotiations over the weekend after the teachers unanimously rejected a three-year contract offer Friday, said Melanie Drozdowski, the teachers' president.

"Apparently, they're willing to have a strike hit the town without an attempt to settle,;; Drozdowski said Sunday evening. "Unless something happens tonight, which I'm doubtful about, teachers will be on picket lines at 6:30 tomorrow morning."

Sasso's presence evident in recent Dukakis rhetoric

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis had already begun to fire back at George Bush before former aide John Sasso rejoined his campaign, but Dukakis has become even more combative since, his sharpened rhetoric bearing the stamp of a man he likens to a brother.

Exiled from the campaign a year ago, after admitting his role in the videotape that helped drive Sen. Joseph Biden from the presidential race, Sasso returned to Dukakis' side two weeks ago. And the friends who gathered to welcome him back erupted in approval when he made a simple declaration: "There are contrasts and weaknesses that are issues in this campaign. I will not shy away from pointing these contrasts out."

All signs since, to borrow a favorite Dukakis phrase, indicate that Sasso means it.

The return of Dukakis' longtime political alter ego came at a time when the Democratic presidential nominee had lost the momentum he gained from his party's national convention and as he was being criticized for not responding aggressively to attacks from George Bush and his fellow Republicans.

"Garbage," was what Dukakis quickly had to say about the GOP attacks. Then, seeking to regain the offensive, he took aim at Bush and his running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle, and audiences seemed to approve.

"George Bush has been around Washington a long time, but if he couldn't stand up to the ayatollah or say no to Noriega, how will he measure up to Gorbachev?" Dukakis said in a speech in Chicago. He then reminded his audience that three vice presidents have assumed the presidency within the meniories of many voters. Said Dukakis: "Dan Quayle is no Gerald Ford. He's no Lyndon Johnson. And he sure ain't no Harry Truman."

In Dukakis' speeches, tone and at his campaign headquarters, Sasso's stamp is obvious.

Dukakis has been more feisty, his staff invigorated and long-overdue channels of communication with Jesse Jackson and key members of Congress established.

"It was an important development that brought our team up to full strength and we're delighted," said Kirk O'Donnell, the former Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill aide who was brought in as a senior adviser to Dukakis after Sasso resigned last September. "I think first of all his relationship with the governor is very important but also his long experience in campaigns. He's a well-respected, and deservedly so, political strategist.'

Sasso was the architect of Dukakis' presidential bid, turning his eye toward the White House even as Dukakis campaigned for re-election as governor of Massachusetts in 1986.

Sasso assembled the team, but was forced to leave it behind after admitting he had a role in the "attack video" showing Delaware Sen. Biden using the words of a British politician without attributing them. Reports based on the videotape and subsequent stories about plagarism put Biden out of the race, but then stories about Sasso's involvement forced his from Dukakis' side.

But as Dukakis' campaign lost steam in August, Dukakis recalled his longtime sidekick for the stretch run of his self-described marathon.

Sasso, whose title is vice chairman, has kept a relatively low profile since returning and declined to be interviewed about his impact. But other Dukakis aides, some speaking privately, credited him with taking a number of steps to sharpen the campaign's message and focus.

"He's gotten things moving," said one aide who works closely with Sasso. "The message is tightening up. The events are tightened up to help focus on that message, and the need to respond and respond quickly now has a higher priority here."

One example came in Chicago, just days after Sasso's return. After anti-abortion protesters disrupted his speech and became the campaign story of the day, Dukakis held an unscheduled meeting with reporters, making sure he reclaimed a major part of the story.

"We asked her if she (the social worker) was aware of the success rate," said Flower. "Among the best programs for batterers the success rate is two to three percent."

Since Ferrer's death, workers at Necessities have met with DSS "to convey to them that we should be a part of developing service plans," said Flower. "We want the woman's perspective of the situation to be more important than it is."

Ferrer's social worker now claims that the reunification called for in the service plan was to re-unite Virginia with her children, not with Alan Reyes', said Flower. Regardless of what her social worker actually meant, Ferrer did get back together with Reyes before her children were returned to her, said Flower.

"Not long after, he abused her again," said Flower, "and she got an order of protection against him."

A woman is killed by a batterer every 22 days in Massachusettes according to a 1985 state report by the Department of Public Health.

"We are deeply saddened that she could not have her wish (to live). We can only ensure that because of this tragedy, the memory of her will not die, and that our grief will spur us on in our struggle to combat violence against women," reads a Necessities statement.

The Memorial Fund for Virginia Ferrer has been established by Necessities to help with funeral expenses, and funds for the children. Contributions should be made payable to the fund, and sent to Necessities.

Norwood kicks Pats, 16-14

FOXBORO (AP) — The Buffalo Bills are undefeated in three games, and they are giving a big tip of the helmet to kicker Scott Norwood.

Norwood's third field goal of the game Sunday, from 41 yards out with 11 seconds to play, rallied the Bills to a 16-14 victory over the New England Patriots.

"That's the third game we've won when the kicker provided the winning margin," said Bills coach Marv Levy. "But our defense played superbly."

The Bills sacked Patriots quarterback Steve Grogan four times and also intercepted two passes, while holding New England scoreless in the second half as Buffalo snapped an 11-game losing streak to the Patriots. They last defeated New England 19-10 on Dec. 13, 1981.

Norwood's winning kick came after Jim Kelly had moved the Bills to the Patriots' 47 yard line on a drive that began with 1:50 left in the game. "I had no doubts about kicking it. We got the good side of the field. It isn't a case of being nervous, it's a case of concentration on the field," said Norwood, who also played a key role in Buffalo's 13-10 victory over Minnesota and 9-6 win against Miami. "That was probably more exciting than the first two games."

The Patriots had built a 14-13 halftime lead on two Grogan touchdown passes.

"It was a hard-fought game. We figured on a close match and we weren't disappointed. We were disappointed in the final score," said Patriots coach Raymond Berry. "But I never saw a loss that I liked."

Norwood's third field goal of the game came after Kelly had brought the Bills, 3-0, to within one point, 14-13 with his first touchdown pass of the season, a 3-yard todd to Robb Riddick with 9:15 to play in the game. Prior to that, Buffalo had gone 10 quarters without a touchdown.

was in perfect position for the shot.

Fifteen minutes later, Cesnek took matters into his own hands on a patented one-on-three breakaway. The junior forward shook off two-thirds of the St. Joe's backfield, ultimately beating Melody with a shot to the lower right side of the net to give UMass a 3-0 lead.

With 13:46 left on the clock, Cesnek finished the afternoon's scoring outburst by executing a penalty kick, granted to the Minutemen when Pete McEvoy was tripped up 15 feet in front of the net. It was Cesnek's second goal of the afternoon, and his fourth on the young season.

Defensively, a preseason's worth of work has payed off in these early contests; the only goal surrendered by the Minutemen all week came during the loss to Temple. Yesterday, the Hawks forced King to make only five saves all afternoon.

"The defense really shut them (St. Joe's) down," said Gettler. "The first four games . . . I wanted to make sure we were a good defensive team, and I think giving up one goal in four games really is starting to make a statement."

The second and third place finishers both hailed from B.C. Mike Pierani and George Grant checked in with times of 26:59.2 and 26:59.4, respectively.

Senior John Lorenzi was the next UMass runner to finish as he recorded a time of 27:15.

"I was pleasantly surprised with Joe," O'Brien said. "He had been injured for over a year and you don't know how an athlete is going to react the first time back."

Two other runners caught the attention of the coach as well. Juniors Herbert Heffner and Greg Squires both impressed O'Brien.

"Herb as a real plus for us. Him running well will be a key for us this year," O'Brien said.

O'Brien also got his first look at Squires as a cross country-man. A transfer from UMass-Boston, Squires as the Minutemen's fourth runner. "I liked what I saw of him," O'Brien said.

Water polo takes three

UM hits Top 10 in East

The University of Massachusetts men's water polo team opened its season on a good note by winning its first three games this weekend at the Eastern Water Polo Association meet at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, MD.

The victories helped push the Minutemen into a Top 10 ranking in the East for next weekend's action at the Brown Invitational Meet.

Last year, UMass finished the season 10th in the East after a 12-8 season.

"We played well," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth. "This promotes us to the A-Division for next weekend. That means we're now in the Top 10 in the East."

UMass started the weekend in fine fashion by beating Boston College, 13-7. Leading the way in the scoring department was Eric Bebchick, who had four goals, and Jon Miller, who added three.

Next, the Minutemen followed another four-goal effort by Bebchick to knock off Villanova, 10-7. Scott DeLuca added two goals to the winning cause.

Finally, in the finals bracket, the Minutemen got rid of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 9-4. Down 3-1, the Minutemen mounted a comeback for the victory.

Bebchick, Miller and Craig Siegel each had a pair of goals to cap off the perfect weekend.

"We played real well, it was a great weekend," Yarworth said.

Believe it or not, Sox are in control in AL East

BOSTON (AP) — Boston fans probably don't believe it yet. But only a classic collapse can stop the Red Sox from winning the American League East.

The Red Sox, with a history of failure in big games, beat the New York Yankees for the third straight time, 9-4 Sunday and put themselves in control of the race.

Boston, after losing the series opener behind Roger Clemens, surged back and pushed New York back 6½ games behind. The Red Sox began the day with a five-game lead over Detroit and six games ahead of Milwaukee.

"Everybody kept bringing up 1987, and maybe it was in the back of our minds," Boston's Dwight Evans said. "Now it's dead and buried."

Evans is one of three Boston players still around from the 1978 club that was swept by the Yankees in a four-game September series, the infamous Boston massacre. New York later beat the Red Sox in a playoff for the division title.

This weekend, Evans won Saturday's game with an eighth-inning home run. On Sunday, Evans hit a two-run homer in the second inning after Ellis Burks hit a three-run homer in the first.

"This is really gigantic, winning three in a row after losing the first game," boston manager Joe Morgan said. "It's all up to us."

Boston has just 13 games remaining. The Red Sox begin a three-game series in Toronto tonight.

Said reliever Bob Stanley: "1978 is dead. Now people will talk about 1988 and the Red Sox."

The Yankees had their chances during the weekend. They pinned their last hope on Sunday starter Ron Guidry, a Boston nemesis during the Yankees' comeback in 1978.

But Marty Barrett's two-run double chased Guidry in the second and Evans met Neil Allen with a home run.

"It's tough when you give up seven runs early like that to come back, especially against a good ballclub," New York manager Lou Piniella said. "It was a good series. We just didn't get the job done.

"In this game you have to learn to accept the good and the bad."

Boston completed an 8-2 homestand and won for the 11th time in 14 games. The Yankees had won seven of eight before losing three in a row.

Mike Smithson, signed as a free agent last spring, scattered seven hits, including a solo homer by Claudell Washington and a two-run drive by Mike Pagliarulo, before needing relief help in the seventh. Smithson improved to 9-5 and Lee Smith got four outs for his 28th save.

Kevin Romine added a two-run triple in the eighth for Boston, which got 13 hits again Guidry, 1-3, and two relievers.

Boston's Ellis Burks is congratulated by Dwight Evans after hitting a three-run home run in the first inning of yesterday's 9-4 win over the Yankees at Fenway Park.

Wade Boggs, heading for his fifth batting title, went 3-for-4, giving him 196 hits for the season. He needs just four hits in 13 games to become the first player in this century to reach 200 six consecutive years.

Barrett also had three hits and Evans two.

After Washington hit his 10th homer into the right-field stands in the first, the Red Sox jumped on Guidry.

Boggs and Evans singled and, with two out, Burks hit a 1-2 pitch into the screen in left for his 17th homer.

With one out in the second, Rick Cerone singled, Boggs doubled off the wall in left and Barrett finished Guidry with a two-run double off the wall. Evans greeted Allen with his 17th homer.

The Yankees scored twice in the fourth on a double by Winfield and Pagliarulo's 14th homer into the bleachers beyond the Boston bullpen in right-center.

Stanley replaced Smithson after Pagliarulo opened the seventh with a single. Willie Randolph walked and Don Slaught grounded into a double play before Rafael Santana bounced an RBI single to right.

Rickey Henderson singled and stole second for a league-leading total of 85, but Stanley ended the inning by striking out Washington.

Ball St.puts the crunch on UMass, 44-17

By MIKE PYLES
Special to the Collegian

MUNCIE, Ind. — Ball State University came alive when it needed to, outscoring the University of Massachusetts 21-0 in the third quarter, and dealt the Minutemen their first loss of the season, a 44-17 defeat in a non-conference game.

The Cardinals had statistics worthy of a win, with 534 total yards on offense, including 314 yards in the second half. Leading the way for Ball State was senior Mark Stevens, who had 118 yards on 17 carries and a touchdown.

Cardinal quarterback David Riley had 82 yards rushing and 184 yards passing, completing 13 of 19 attempts.

For UMass, senior quarterback Dave Palazzi was 17-31 for 220 yards and a touchdown, but had one interception. He also rushed for 57 yards on 11 carries. Junior fullback David Mitchell carried 11 times for 57 yards.

But the difference in the game was not the statistics, but Ball State's execution.

"They executed things they had to do," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "We saw the things on the film we had to stop, and we couldn't. And if you can't stop them, it is a credit to them."

Ball State remains undefeated at 3-0. UMass, 1-1, plays at Harvard Saturday.

The Cardinals scored their third quarter points in the matter of 3:08, taking advantage of two UMass turnovers and a long punt return.

The Minutemen led for most of the first half, until 1:24 left in the second period, when David Riley found flanker Eugene Riley for a 10-yard touchdown pass. Ball State led 13-10 at halftime.

The score remained 13-10 until there was 5:12 left in the third quarter, when David Riley connected on his second of three touchdown passes for the day. Junior Sean Jones caught the 12-yard pass, giving Ball State a 20-10 lead. The touchdown drive was set up by a 57-yard punt return by senior Todd Sinnell to the UMass 29-yard line.

On the ensuing kickoff, senior Steve Olson took the kick at the 9, returned it to the 19, but fumbled, and Derrick Westfield recovered the ball for Ball State.

"I never felt that a kickoff team could beat our butts like they did," Reid said. "They dominated us on kickoffs."

One play later, with 4:57 showing on the clock, David Riley found Frank Barnes wide open for a 19-yard touchdown pass, making the score 27-10.

Another UMass miscue set up the final score of the quarter for Ball State. Mitchell fumbled after he caught a pass from quarterback Dave Palazzi. Senior Tim Walton caused the fumble, and senior Charles Kelly recovered it at the Ball State 35.

After a 57-yard pass play from David Riley to flanker Jeff Hammond, Stevens scored from eight yards out, making the score 34-10.

UMass started the game dominating Ball State, scoring on two of its first five possessions, including its first of the game.

The Minutemen scored on a 1-yard run by sophomore Jim Pastorick. The touchdown capped off a six-play, 55-yard drive.

Ball State kicked field goals on its next two possessions, before placekicker Silvio Bonvini connected on a 22-yard field goal, giving UMass a 10-6 lead.

"We underestimated Massachusetts on the first series and they stuck it down our throats," Ball State cornerback Todd Finnell said. "We knew we were in for a game after that drive."

UMass scored its final points with 13:22 to play in the fourth quarter. Palazzi completed a 12-yard pass to Chip Mitchell for the score.

Men's soccer splits a pair

Dumps A-10 rival St. Joe's after tough loss to Temple

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

Collegian photo by Andrew Riet

Freshman back Dan Lawrence gets sandwiched between two St. Joe's players during yesterday's 4-0 UMass win.

After suffering their first loss of the season at the hands of the Temple Owls Friday, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team pounded Atlantic 10 rival St. Joeseph's University (1-3) yesterday afternoon on Boyden Field.

Louis Hollmeyer and Steve Cesnek each chipped in a pair of goals in the 4-0 victory, as the Minutemen completed a season-opening four-game homestand with another strong performance and a 3-1 record (1-1 in the Atlantic 10).

Dating back to final 40 minutes of Friday afternoon's 1-0 loss to Temple, the Minutemen have dominated play. Following a sudden score by Temple in the early second half, the UMass offense pressed the ball constantly in a dramatic comeback effort against the Owls, muscling the visitors around in every respect. Coach Jeff Gettler's squad simply played well, and lost.

Yesterday, the Minutemen played nearly as well, and won, pounding out 30 shots on St. Joe's. "It wasn't probably the prettiest or greatest performance we're going to have all year," said Gettler, "but we got the job done."

Hollmeyer broke the ice with 14:34 elapsed, winding his way through several defenders before driving the ball into the upper left corner of the net, beyond the reach of St. Joe's goalkeeper Mike Melody. The goal was Hollmeyer's second of the season.

The visitors held off the UMass attack for the rest of the half, escaping into the locker room down by a deceptively close score of 1-0.

The Minutemen exploded for three goals within 25 minutes in the second half. With 38:49 left in the game, Hollmeyer redirected a shot off the foot of Cesnek inside the right goalpost, good for his second goal of the game and a 2-0 lead. Reserve midfielder Bill Kousmanidis sparked the play with a steal and serve to Cesnek, who

Men's cross country second at Yale meet

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The first day on a new job, the first class of the fall semester, the first contest of a new season. They're all the same. No matter what you know and what you think will happen, you never quite know what to really expect.

University of Massachusetts men's cross country coach Ken O'Brien can attest to that. O'Brien went into last Thursday's meet at Yale with Boston College fully expecting to come out on top. However, UMass yielded the top position to B.C. (28 points) while finishing second with 43 points. Yale was third with 52 points.

"I knew B.C. and Yale were good teams," said O'Brien. "But I thought we would beat them both. I was a little disappointed."

He did point out that B.C. had an advantage over UMass coming into the meet. "B.C. had a meet under its belt and this was our first one," he said. "I think that really helped them out."

Junior Joe Milette of UMass was the top runner in the meet, finishing with a time of 26:52.9. "Joe ran a conservative race," O'Brien said. "He was unfamiliar with the

Minutewomen nail Michigan, 5-0

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It is not going to get any easier for the University of Massachusetts' field hockey team.

After yesterday's 5-0 win in Springfield over the University of Michigan, UMass ran its record up to 3-0. But Michigan was, like the two opponents before them, very easy prey, to say the least.

The Minutewomen have outscored their opponents 12-1 over those three games in which they were undoubtably heavy favorites to win. The one score against the UMass defense was a fluke goal scored in the season opener with Springfield.

The offense has been explosive, yet not as finely tuned as it could be. But that is to be expected just three games into the season.

"We looked really strong," UMass assistant coach Amy Robertson said. "The forwards were really hungry to score goals. In fact, we missed a lot of opportunities to score goals. The score could have been like 12-0."

With the offense firing away at Michigan goaltender Joanne Green, the defense had little to do but sit back and enjoy the ride.

Senior Cindy Cox, who has started each of the three games for the Minutewomen, was credited with her third win of the year while lowering her goals-against-average to 0.33.

Everyone saw playing time for UMass. After the Minutewomen gained a 3-0 halftime lead, UMass coach Pam Hixon opted to take a look at what her bench could do.

Sophomore forward Elise McDevitt came off the bench in the second half to score her first two goals of the season, giving the Minutewomen an almost unsurmountable 5-0 advantage.

UMass jumped out in front in the first half when senior Tonia Kennedy beat Green for her second goal of the season. Senior co-captain Pam Bustin assisted on the play.

Junior forward Kathy DeAngelis kept a stronghold on her team lead in goals by scoring the next two in the first half, the second one coming on a penalty stroke. She now has netted four goals and dished out one assist in three games.

Michigan was not a nationally ranked team last year. UMass ended up as the No. 3 team in the nation but the Minutewomen might have caught the Wolverines at a good time. Michigan was 2-0-1 coming into this weekend.

"They looked tired because they played three games in a row," Robertson said.

UMass was well rested, not having played a game since Wednesday night, when they beat Boston College, 3-0 at Chestnut Hill.

The game was also the third non-conference game that the Minutewomen have played in a row. UMass belongs to the Atlantic 10 conference while Michigan belongs to the Big Ten.

Having pounded three teams into the ground might have done a world of good for UMass' confidence but they will not have an easy task on their hands when they travel to Providence College on Thursday to take on the Lady Friars.

Providence was one of the best teams in the country last season. UMass could have used a much tougher game from Michigan in order to prep for the Lady Friars.

The game will also hold much more significance than yesterday's game because it is a New England Regional game. The winner could conceivably be the No. 1 team in New England when the next poll comes out. UMass should know exactly how good it really is after the game.

Kansas U. hoop reserve makes a move to UMass

Keith Harris, a 6-5 basketball forward from Inglewood, Calif., has transferred to the University of Massachusetts from the University of Kansas, the school announced last week.

Harris spent two years at Kansas and was a front-line reserve on this year's NCAA champion team. He will have two years of eligibility remaining after sitting out this year.

UMass coach John Calipari, a former Kansas assistant, has also added two former Kansas assistants, John Robic and Dave Glover to his staff.

Calipari spent four years at Kansas and three years at Pittsburgh before taking over the UMass job this spring.

Students rally to protest arrests in El Salvador

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Members of the Central American Solidarity Association rallied on the steps of the Student Union yesterday in protest of what they claimed were the deaths of eight student demonstrators at the University of El Salvador.

CASA member Greg Smith said 300 more Salvadorans were arrested during a rally for more governmental funding of education.

"It's in the constitution of the government of El Salvador (that) they have to fund the university. But they don't until the students demand it, so (the Salvadoran government was) running out of money to keep the university operating and (the students) went to demonstrate for funding," Smith said.

A Boston Globe wire story on September 14 reported the arrest of 300 students in San Salvador, but did not mention any student deaths. A Washington Post Story on the same day did not report any student deaths or arrests. The New York Times did not report the story at all.

A September 15 press release from the US Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES) reported 350 arrests and no deaths. CASA supplied the release..

About 100 people attended the University of Massachusetts rally, which featured speeches, poetry and singing. CASA supporters held signs stating "End US aid to El Salvador now" and "Tuesday, September 13, 1988: eight students killed, 300 captured in El Salvador."

Conservative students chanted "CIA" and held up a sign that read "ARENA: hail d'Aubisson, death to communists." Roberto d'Aubisson is the leader of the right-wing Republican Alliance Party (ARENA) in El Salvador.

Conservative student leader W. Greg Rothman, who was also present at yesterday's rally, said:

"I was interested in (knowing) whether or not these people (at CASA) would have supported the tar-and-feather death squads in our revolutionary war. I wonder if they were not essential to keeping our revolution going. But I want to know more of what were those eight students doing in El Salvador and how did their deaths come about, unlike Ben Linder's, who was carrying a gun and had Sandinista uniforms in his possession. Is that how they (the students) died? Were they part of the communist guerillas? Did they take part in any of the terrorist attacks on the people of El Salvador?"

Smith later responded: "This is just more justification for (Salvadoran) death squads and for killing. Some people support the killing of Ben Linder, who was an electrical engineer, but we don't support death squads and I think that the founding fathers would roll over in their graves if they heard (that) they were compared to Roberto d'Aubisson."

"At first (the students) went to the US Embassy, but the road was blocked by the military barbed wire, so (the students) moved to the Legislative Assembly of El Salvador. While they were marching there, the army was following them and at one point in the march, the army just opened fire," he said.

Heavy manpower shortage at DCs could cost students more in long run

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Paper plates and cups, plastic forks, knives and spoons, and long lines could remain the main dish at the dining commons, unless at least 500 students begin work there soon.

For the last three years the dining commons have found it increasingly difficult to hire students for dishroom, serving-line and janitorial jobs, according to Merle Ryan, a staff assistant at the Student Employment Office.

Richard Rossi, of Food Services, said 1,200 students are needed to fill positions in the Southwest Residential Area's Hampshire and Berkshire dining commons, Central Residential Area's Franklyn, and Northeast Residential Area's Worcester. Rossi said only 40 percent of those positions have been filled.

Last week, Ryan said the Hatch and the Coffee Shop in the Campus Center have about 50 positions vacant.

She suspects the reason for food-related jobs' being the hardest to fill is because many students worked in fast-food places during high school.

"Students have a preference," Ryan said. "And let's face it, DCs (dining commons) and food services aren't exactly glamorous."

Although Food Services has taken some measures to tackle the recruiting problems, Ryan said that if the problems persist Food Services may have to hire more full-time employees. This would mean students would have to pay more for food, she said. Students now pay about $600 for food per semester.

So far, the measures Food Services has taken include raising hourly pay from minimum wage to $4. As an incentive, students who worked in the dining commons last year and returned this semester received a 10-cent increase.

BOT committees to meet today

Arena, code of conduct on agenda

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The Code of Student Conduct and the new multipurpose arena are among the agenda items of two Board of Trustees' committees that will meet on campus today.

The Committee on Budget and Financial Affairs will convene at 11:00 this morning in the Campus Center, and one of the items discussed will be the much talked about multipurpose arena.

The University of Massachusetts has been granted $25 million to construct the complex, which will accommodate concerts, stage productions, rainy day convocations, Minuteman basketball, and hockey, according to Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor for Administration and Finance.

The project will cost approximately $50 million, half of which will be picked up by students through an increase in the authority fee, which will be a maximum of $50 per semester and will not be levied until the arena is complete, Littlefield said.

There is some speculation the new arena will bring a hockey team to UMass in an estimated five years. The University has not had a hockey team since 1978.

The Board of Trustees had been attempting to solicit state support for the project since 1984 and finally got the money in July when the state approved the University's Capital Outlay Budget.

Also to meet today on campus is the Board of Trustees Executive Committee which will be discussing, among other things, the revisions of the Code of Student Conduct.

Although it has not been approved by the trustees, the CSC has been distributed throughout the Amherst campus.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said it is not unusual to institute a University policy before having the approval of the board because the board delegates some of its powers to the chancellor.

Soldiers kill 100 in Burma protest

RANGOON, Burma — Soldiers loyal to the new military government opened fire on thousands of demonstrators who surged into the streets Monday to protest a military coup. About 100 people were reported killed in Rangoon.

Demonstrations also broke out in other cities, including Mandalay. Witnesses and other reports said a total of about 150 people, including 17 soldiers, had died in the violence that swept Burma after Sunday's coup.

The military placed the death toll at 23 Monday, but gave no details.

Military commander Saw Maung engineered the newest change in power in Burma by overthrowing civilian President Maung Maung.

Undaunted opposition leaders vowed that students, Buddhist monks and striking civil servants would continue to demonstrate for democracy.

Maung Maung's whereabouts remain unknown.

A Western diplomat familiar with Burma said from Bangkok, Thailand, that "We're into possibly one of the final acts now...a naked confrontation with the army. ...Either the students win or the army wins."

The soldiers were trying to enforce a ban on public gatherings imposed immediately after the coup by Saw Maung, the defense minister before the coup and a right-hand man of former President Sein Lwin. Sein Lwin resigned Aug. 12 after riots in which hundreds of protesters reportedly died.

Protesters blame the country's sole legal party, the ruling Burma Socialist Program Party, for 26 years of repression and economic ruin. Other analysts believe the military may have acted to simply assert its traditional authority.

Reports indicated soldiers shot at mostly unarmed protesters near the main government administrative building, the US Embassy, Sule Pagoda and Rangoon General Hospital. An Asian diplomat said 67 people were admitted Monday at Rangoon General Hospital.

Witnesses said corpses were taken away by military trucks while residents dragged some of the dead and wounded into their houses or put them in three-wheeled taxis to be taken to hospitals.

Demonstrators clash in USSR; firearms used, Soviets report

MOSCOW (AP) — Azerbaijanis and Armenians shot at each other in a disputed region of the southern Soviet Union, wounding 25 people, Tass and activists reported yesterday.

It was one of the most violent clashes reported in the months-long campaign for control of Nagorno-Karabakh, a mostly Armenian area that has been part of the republic of Azerbaijan since 1923.

The official news agency said demonstrators left a rally Sunday in the main city of Nagorno-Karabakh, Stepanakert, for the nearby village of Khadzhaly, and when they arrived, violence broke out.

"Firearms and sidearms were used in mass-scale fights on both sides," Tass said in a dispatch datelined Stepanakert.

"As a result, 25 people received injuries of various degrees of gravity and 17 were hospitalized. Both Armenians and Azerbaijanis applied for medical assistance."

An editor for the Tass affiliate in the Armenian capital of Yerevan, however, said by telephone that Azerbaijanis were the only ones carrying firearms and that 19 of those injured were Armenians. He said four of the Armenians were seriously hurt.

The editor, who spoke on conditions of anonymity, said the clashes were touched off by reports of earlier disturbances in the village between Armenians and Azerbaijanis.

Demonstrators were holding a rally in Stepanakert when Armenians arrived from Khadzhaly with reports that Azerbaijanis had stoned a busload of Armenians on Saturday, the editor said.

The Armenians in Stepanakert stoned Azerbaijani houses, breaking windows, he said.

In Yerevan, Alisa Gorgisyan, mother of activist Mofses Gorgisyan, said there were rumours of some deaths and some 60 to 70 injuries in Stepanakert.

She and the Tass editor said thousands of Armenians were rallying in Yerevan this evening to protest the violence. They said the protesters were demanding a meeting of the republic's parliament.

The Tass editor said the parliament's executive committee had scheduled a session for Tuesday.

Alisa Gorgisyan said a strike that began Friday in Yerevan was continuing, but the Tass editor denied there was any work stoppage in the republic. He acknowledged, however, that a strike was continuing in Stepanakert.

Bay scallops still scarce in Buzzards Bay

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — Local shellfish wardens and biologists have had little luck in their search for a return of the bay scallop, promising another skimpy catch for 1988 in Buzzards Bay, according to a state official.

"Based on what we saw last year in the way of seed, and seeing what's out there this year - or should I say what we're not seeing - it's probably going to be a rather poor season," said Michael Hickey of the state Division of Marine Fisheries.

With the exception of Westport in 1985, when the town topped the state scallop catches, the Buzzards Bay area hasn't had a good harvest of bay scallops, which are smaller than their offshore relatives, sea scallops, since 1979.

"It's been a long stretch and it doesn't look good this year again," Hickey told The Standard Times of New Bedford.

"Even in Nantucket, the mainstay of the bay scallop industry, it looks like it's going to be down from last year. And last year was down from the year before."

In 1987, according to estimates based on preliminary figures from the state Divison of Marine Fisheries, only about 200 bushels of bay scallop landing were reported in the Buzzards Bay area - Bourne, Wareham, Marion, Mattapoisett, Fairhaven, Westport and the west shore of Falmouth.

The catch was 1,492 bushels in 1986 and 64,207 bushels the year before that.

Despite the decline, Massachusetts has remained the nation's leading producer of bay scallops. However, Hickey said that is because of red and brown tides, algae blooms from Rhode Island to Florida, that have decimated many scallop and other shellfish crops.

Biologists are studying why the bay scallop has become a stranger to Buzzards Bay and several theories have emerged, but no conclusive results, said Scott Gallager and George Hanson of Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute in Falmouth.

Some suggest that it's just a natural cycle. Dry spells from five to 10 years have occurred before.

Eight hurt after helicopter jump

HUNTINGTON (AP) — Eight army reservists were injured following a weekend jump into Littleville Lake from a helicopter, authorities said.

"We knew immediately that there was a problem. It was just the way they hit the water," said Springfield Police Sgt. Peter Albano, whose water rescue squad, including scuba divers and boats, had been standing by at the jump site and pulled the injured from the lake.

He said the reservists, attached to A Company, 1st Batallion at Fort Devens, were practicing search and evasion tactics Saturday evening and all of the injured had been dropped by the first of three helicopters to move over the reservoir.

"We just zipped around and picked everybody up," Albano said.

500 protest satirist P.J. O'Rourke

By PETER LUCHT
Collegian Staff

Providence, R.I.— More than 500 people from at least five colleges protested a speech by Rolling Stone satirist P.J. O'Rourke, claiming O'Rourke maligns people of Third World countries in his articles.

O'Rouke presented his speech last Tuesday evening at Brown University.

"The purpose of the demonstration was to show disdain for the type of articles he's written. The main purpose was to get a personal apology from O'Rourke," said Sharon Park, an Office of Third World Affairs staff member and one of four University of Massachusetts students who attended the protest.

Park said that O'Rourke has written articles for the "Irrational Affairs" section of Rolling Stone Magazine about visits to such countries as Lebanon, El Salvador, and the Philippines, but it was an article about Korean protests entitled "Seoul Brothers" that was a catalyst for this particular protest.

Park said there was an official apology in the next issue of Rolling Stone, but contained in the same issue was "a very degrading article about Filipinos."

Rolling Stone magazine addressed the complaints of the protestors by setting up an internship for Korean-American students this past summer, but the popular Rock and Roll magazine not gone as far as the protestors would like, said Amy Chu, a Brown University student who helped organize the protest.

"We don't feel it is appropriate that Mr O'Rourke should be able to insult members of the Third World community. We want a termination of his racist writing," Chu said.

The Brown University Lecture Board invited O'Rourke to speak for a $3500 fee and contracts were signed before this was widely known, Chu said.

Park said pressure was put on the Brown University administration to cancel the lecture, paying O'Rourke the full fee anyway if necessary. She said over 1000 letters were written with this in mind.

Park said attendance at the protest was much greater than expected, and was made up of representatives of many different cultures. She said protestors arrived at the lecture hall 45 minutes prior to the lecture with the intention of filling all of the seats.

"We would have filled all the seats if some up front had not been saved. A half-hour after the lecture started we all left. We didn't boo or clap. It was a peaceful protest," Park said.

Park said the protestors all held hands as they left the lecture and this took nearly an hour. She said O'Rourke said, "When you've got that many people organized like that they've got to be a bunch of assholes," as they left.

"We're hoping to show the editors that their audience is most displeased," Park said.

A press conference was held after the lecture that had been advertised in the Brown Daily Herald as open to the public, Chu said, but when protestors attempted to enter the news conference they were told that only the press was allowed inside.

Chu said she was allowed to make a statement but left before hearing O'Rourke's reaction.

Chu said the Lecture Board at Brown was unaware of the type of writing that O'Rourke does and said it is dedicated to pluralism and promised not to offend the Third World community again.

Unauthorized petition concerning EWC circulated

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

An unauthorized petition protesting budget cuts and a proposed administrative realignment has generated concerns at the Everywoman's Center.

The petition consists of a letter written by EWC director Carol Wallace, informing the community of the recent developments and asks for support and intervention.

A two-page attachment to the letter is in petition form and calls for support of EWC and outrage over the cutbacks and proposed realignment.

Wallace said she wrote the letter but has neither seen the petition nor participated in its circulation.

"We've never seen it. I've been getting calls from people who have seen the petition and are confused by what it says," she said.

Wallace said she is urging the petition's circulators to contact EWC immediately to discuss whether the petition is something with which the Center would want to be involved.

"I think that it won't hurt us as long as we can clarify the source," she said.

"I'd like to ask that the people who are circulating the petition clearly identify on the petition who they are and also state clearly that it's being circulated by them," Wallace said.

"We certainly appreciate the support, but it's important that it's clear who it's coming from. If it looks like it's coming from us, it needs to be cleared by us," she said.

Wallace said she has received several phone calls that have allegedly indicated the petition is being circulated by students, but said she is not sure.

"I want to remind everyone that it's important that they identify any actions that they're making," she said.

If you have any information about the petition, please contact the Everywoman's Center.

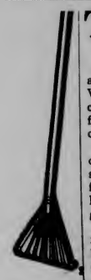
Two arrested for stabbing



BOSTON (AP) — A Worcester woman and a Gardner man were arrested in Las Vegas by Massachusetts State Troopers in connection with the stabbing death of a former Randolph High School principal, according to a published report Monday.

James L. Tophan, 61, retired from Randolph High in 1982, was found dead of 13 stab wounds Sept. 12 in the driveway of a former automobile repair shop in Gardner. Police believe he was transported to the garage after he was killed.

Gail P. Blair, 50, and Michael A. Barus, 34, were arrested Sunday as they got off a bus in Las Vegas, and were held at the Clark County Detention Center in Las Vegas, said Worcester County District Attorney John J. Conte.

"To go from having an unidentified body in Gardner last Monday to arrests today in Las Vegas is just an exceptional piece of police work," Conte said.

Conte said that a gasoline-soaked car registered to Blair's son found Wednesday in Gardner led police to seek charges against Blair and Barus. He said the car was not burned, but declined to give any more details.

Investigators declined to describe the suspects' relationship with the victim or any possible motive for the killing. But a source told the Worcester Telegram and Evening Gazette that both Blair and Tophan had undergone treatment for substance abuse at Adcare Hospital in Worcester.

Tophan's last known address was in Marshfield, but police there said he has not lived in Marshfield for several years.

Tophan was the principal of Randolph High School for 16 years before retiring in 1982, partly due to alcoholism, according to The Patriot Ledger of Quincy.

"It was clear that Mr. Tophan was having some serious personal problems," said Robert L. Glass, chairman of the Randolph School Committee when Tophan stepped down after 16 years. "By the last year he was spending a lot of time trying to get help for alcoholism."

Less than two years after his retirement, Tophan was arrested in 1984 for breaking into a parked car less than a mile from the high school he once ran. He pleaded guilty and served four months of a one-year jail sentence after pleading guilty.

When he was arrested in Randolph, Tophan was awaiting trial in New Hampshire on assault and stolen handgun charges after he allegedly ran over a Goffstown, N.H. police officer. He served a six-month misdemeanor charge stemming from the incident.

Blair was convicted in Westboro District Court in April on charges of heroin possession and possession of an instrument used to administer a controlled substance. She was placed on probation and ordered to undergo outpatient drug rehabilitation, police said.

Anchorwoman's life examined

NEW YORK (AP) — On screen, NBC anchorwoman Jessica Savitch was television's "Golden Girl" - authoritative, beautiful, intelligent. Off screen, the glitter quickly vanished.

Five years after her death, two new biographies dig beneath the radiant image.

Both books describe a life marred by drugs, psychological problems, her husband's suicide and intense ambition.

"Her whole life was a suicide mission," says Alanna Nash, author of "Golden Girl" (E.P. Dutton, $18.95).

Gwenda Blair, author of "Almost Golden" (Simon & Schuster, $18.95), says Savitch was the wrong woman in the wrong place at the wrong time.

"Drive and ambition certainly got her to the top, but it didn't provide her with the stability needed to withstand the pressure of that place in the sun. But even more than that, the changes that were taking place in the news industry that both elevated her and punished her is worth telling."

Popular with viewers, but not with most colleagues, Savitch skyrocketed to television stardom in the 1970's, first as a local anchor on Philadelphia's KYW and then as anchor of NBC's "Weekend News Digest".

By the late 1970's the petite blonde with the uncanny knack of romancing the television camera was dubbed "NBC's Golden Girl" by Newsweek magazine.

Five years later, her star fading, she and New York Post executive Martin Fischbein drowned in a car accident while visiting Bucks County, PA.

The medical examiner's report said drugs were not involved. However, both books argue that Savitch had a cocaine problem that had crippled her career.

There was evidence of instability early on. her main ambition was become the first female network anchor, and to do it by the time she was 30.

She gave herself an edge - she shaved a year off her age. But then her dream was shattered when ABC hired Barbara Walters - at $1 million a year - to co-anchor the nightly newscast.

Her tirades and tantrums were legendary within the business, according to the biographers. KYW cameras captured one particularly vivid outburst in which Savitch berated the crew during a commercial break - ranting, raving, screaming - and then coolly returned to the newscast.

KYW staffers set the videotape to music and sent it to Savitch's new network colleagues at NBC before her arrival.

Both books delve into her two marriages, a long affair with an abusive news producer, the suicide of her second husband, Dr. Donald Payne, and alleged lesbian liaisons; they differ in their approach.

Foreclosure sought on school's property

WORCESTER (AP) — A bank has filed a motion to foreclose on $1 million in mortgages on the Westboro property of Central New England Colleges.

The motion was filed Friday on Worcester Superior Court on behalf of the Shawmut Worcester County Bank, according to court records. The court has not yet acted on the motion.

College Trustee Alfred Cotton Jr. said the schools had expected the motion.

"It shouldn't have any immediate effect on the school at all," he said.

The Central New England Colleges is an umbrella term to describe Central New England College of Technology and Worcester Junior College. An audit this past summer turned up alleged financial institutions, which was followed by the resignations of the college's former president, controller and chief financial officer.

Classes began Monday, despite a Sept. 2 letter from Shawmut Senior Vice president Richard F. Sullivan expressing "shock and dismay" about the opening to college President Edward P. Mattar III.

South Africa's expulsion from Olympics unfair

As the pomp and circumstance of the 1988 Summer Olympics flows out of 66.6 percent of the world's televisions, we are not made aware enough these games are not just amateur athletics, but big time politics. Let's not forget that while every nation in the world is supposedly allowed to compete, the Olympics are 'above' political antagonism; one country is banished: South Africa.

The International Olympic Committee (IOC) is a good example of why international organizations like the United Nations are bastions of hypocrisy, and not to be taken seriously in any respect. Such organizations impose restrictive opinions upon others, as if those opinions are brandished in gold. Luckily, the United Nation's authority only goes so far. The IOC, though, is nothing less than authoritarian.

The South African amateur team is sitting alone in the dark continent, desolate, with duncecaps on their heads. The government of these athletes is a naughty, naughty government. They do nasty things to keep their power play intact. They segregate people according to ethnic difference, jail people without a trial, and do other things the moralists of the world call no-no's.

Stuart Gottlieb

That is, of course, not to say such acts are condonable. That is to say such acts, and other abhorrent acts are plentiful in most countries around the world. Why those countries can compete, while South Africa can't, is a question not easily answered.

Bryant Gumbel made light in the opening ceremonies of the debate over where the Iraqi and Iranian flags and teams should assemble, due to their ongoing war. Instead, Mr. World Moralist himself should have questioned the 'legitimacy' of those two countries to compete in the games. Iran has a well known reputation for partaking in international terrorism. Iraq, it was revealed last month, used mustard gas to exterminate thousands upon thousands of Kurds, a northern provincial minority of Iraq.

Is concern over the fate of Iraqi Kurds not quite as chic and trendy as concern over the fate of South African blacks? Is one man's death not as important as anothers repression? To the IOC the answer is yes.

On the same continent of Africa we see incredible amounts of racism and murder that go unnoticed by the IOC as well as world 'moral' opinion. In Ethiopia the Marxist government knowingly starves thousands and thousands of its own citizens to death. In Mozambique the Ndau ethnic group has been repressed since the installation of that country's Marxist government. But the greatest parallel lies in Barundi where the Tutsi minority regime has persecuted the 85 percent majority Hutu's to the point of open rebellion which is just becoming publicized.

And, irreproachably, these countries are just a few of the ones where repression and atrocities run rampant. We could start with the Soviets, and Soviet sponsored oppression, and go down the list all the way to the Australians treatment of the aboriginies.

The Olympics should not be along the same tangent as world politics. If it is agreed the Olympics are above politics, then there is no place for the hypocritical condemnation that has been inflicted upon the amateur athletes of South Africa.

They said it. . .

The Tigers and Yankees dueled 18 innings over six hours and one minute last Sunday. The game was telecast live on the Yanks' cable channel with a taped replay scheduled to start at 7:30 p.m. At 7:28, announcer Bobby Murcer explained to the live audience, "Well, in about two minutes we'll be joining ourselves in progress."

In other news. . .

What ever happened to Alexander Dubcek, the architect of Czechoslovakia's Prauge Spring 20 years ago? After Soviet tanks crushed the political experiment, Dubcek disappeared from the public eye, working for years as a forestry official. But now the conservative Czechoslovak government has decided to try a bit of spring again. Last week Dubcek and his wife Anna receicved permission to ravel abroad for the first time since 1970. In November they will go to Italy, where Dubcek, 66, will be honored by the University of Bologna. What has he been doing all these years? "Oh," he says evasively, "I just look after my rabbits." His wife laughs: "I wish he'd do just that."

The fundamentals of life

Dukakis — the myth

Every value system has its gods. A presidential candidate can either pretend to share the idols of voters who have a whole spectrum of value systems, or he can try to convince them that his own gods are the answer — that he's some kind of messiah. Confident soul that he is, governor Dukakis is doing the messiah routine, telling voters he can do it all: education, insurance, prosperity, pensions, balanced budgets and strong communities.

Rusty Denton

The problem is that he's still committed to holding so many causes sacred that financially he might as well not be committed to any. Take education. Poor planning forced the Duke to slash 1988 spending to reduce state debt. This state-subsidized campus faced a three million dollar shortfall until a surprise fee appeared on the semester bill. UMass libraries, fifth or tenth from the bottom among US state universities, remain in a crisis.

Still desperate for money, Dukakis is trying to remove tuition waivers from graduate and staff employees here, to freeze "03 spending"(that's graduate student wages), and to double UMass tuition over a five-year period. True, the governor just gave nearly 30 million dollars to build a polymer center, but the university would build it anyway, and the Polymer Science and Engineering department brings megabucks into the state.

Giving grants to a few outstanding programs is the exception; the governor has said that state residents should be satisfied with less than excellence in Massachusetts higher education. After all, he says, we can go to Harvard or MIT (for only three times the cost of UMass if we can get in). Who knows what shape we'd be in if Dukakis were anti-education?

Higher education isn't unique; the governor robs other sacred cows, too. He just plundered 27 million dollars of "surplus" income from the pension fund of state and local employees. He reneged on three million more owed to other pension plans. He took 91 million from local aid (watch for local tax increases). And his department of revenue closes businesses rather than rescheduling back taxes — as if dead businesses could pay more than live ones.

But the governor has always had a funny idea about how to pay for things. As a young legislator he designed the law that keeps insurance premiums artificially low for bad drivers and artificially high for others. This summer he signed another law that keeps life insurance premiums low for men and high for women — by billing them the same. And with the state 600 million in debt, last spring Dukakis obtained a Massachusetts health care law that will cost the state billions after it goes into effect.

A governor like that is no messiah. I'm not sure what he is. A Democrat, he calls himself, the "son of immigrants" in the "party for immigrants". But his immigrant parents observed few ethnic traditions, his father graduated from Harvard Medical School, and his parents voted republican until Michael campaigned as a Democrat. What is the governor boasting about — ethnicity? hardship? political heritage?

It's amazing that he can be so pragmatic about his personal identity but so idealistic about his politics. His rigid value system says that the idols of government and money can do anything — just give him more power and more bucks and he'll show us how. We actually had a president like Dukakis once: Lyndon Baines Johnson. He emptied the nation's pockets to end the war on poverty and twenty years later the verdict came back: poverty won.

Getting a high in the water

David R. Mark

MARIETTA, Ga. — I was with family last month when the subject of going to White Water, the local amusement park, arose.

"David, you have to go to White Water. It's the most amazing place," said my 15-year-old cousin, Adam. "The rides are awesome. Sounds incredible, huh, David?"

Actually, I wasn't enthused about getting sick to my stomach, being headachy, and dealing with that rash I always get when I stay too long in the water, but if you had seen my wide-eyed cousins, after hearing the myths and legends. . .

Despite all that, I went.

I was made especially aware of the 'Bermuda Triangle,' a ride famed for having so many turns, dips and dives that I, all 200-plus pounds of me, was more terrified than my nine-year-old cousin.

But I was convinced to go on to this god-forsaken whirlwind of a waterslide. I had to appear strong in this little girl's eyes.

I would ride on the 'Bermuda Triangle,' and if I had heart failure, let it be on the concience of the poor soul who invented the thing.

The line was immense, giving me more time to look up, up. . . damn that thing was big. It was dark, and with the trees that surrounded and shadowed the plethora of parts to this piece of mechanical wizardry, I was yet another wide-eyed youth, facing possible death as I sought the branch-laden top of this little girl's fun, and my nightmare.

Finally, it was my turn to go with my cousin (the older one having given up on the line) up the stairs of the 'Bermuda Triangle.' She grinned at me, and I knew there would be no escape.

I continued to climb. Strange how I climbed to the heavens probably to fall into a living hell.

I thought how stupid I was. Sure, in my cousin's eyes, this was pure joy. But looking at the ride, I guess I'd have to grin and bear it.

It was our turn. My cousin Jennifer sat down in the front half of the innertube, and I sat down in back.

Down we went, into a tunnel, complete darkness, then to the left, out of the tunnel, and to the right, on my side, my cousin screaming with pleasure, me with my nervous guffaw, trying hard to avoid wetting my bathing suit (and I'm not talking about the water). Now to the left, into the tunnel, and down. Where's the landing, I can't see in the darkness, but we're out again. Down the final long slide, through another tunnel of complete darkness and. . .

SPLASH!!!

We had hit the bottom, into the pool near the line. My heart was racing after my 45-second fall toward death.

"Let's go again," my nine-year-old cousin suggested.

"Sure," I replied, wide-eyed and terror-stricken, but prepared to go on the thrill of a lifetime.

Every now and then, between writing 10-page papers and reading 12th-century novellas, a little heart failure can do you some good.

Denton untempting, but column injurious

Sometimes newspapers will print self-advertisements or trivial info to fill up space that might otherwise go empty. Hence we get Rusty Denton columns in the Collegian. So why do I speak of his column at all? Because his views and arguments are disturbing and injurious, and should be challenged rather than be left to fester.

Denton's first column this year is an attack on (not review of) the film The Last Temptation of Christ. ("Not tempted to see this," Sept. 13). Denton's most, but not sole disturbing comments in this column were his veiled defenses of anti-semitism. He wrote that many fundamentalists "feel that both the studio and press are trying to solicit anti-semitic remarks form them, in to sensationalize the response that the film contains 'Jewish lies.'"

According to Denton, this has been successful in arousing anti-semitic remarks, because "the film's most hateful claims about Jews have their origins in orthodox Judaism," rather than say, the musing of a Christian writer or film director. Even if this were the cause of the anti-semitic remarks, (it's not), the people making the remarks are anti-semitic, even if 'provoked.'

It is disgusting to attack anyone for soliciting anti-semitic attacks upon themselves or others. It's like attacking the NAACP or the Anti-Defamation League for comments made against them by the Ku-Klux-Klan. It is vicious to blame the victim and not the perpetrator.

The reason anti-semitic comments have been made in reference to this film is that the head of the studio that produced the film is Jewish. And Denton, not coincidentally, attacks the studio. "It seems that Universal (the studio) produced the film to capitalize on its . . . church bashing potential" (my emphasis). Denton does not attack the director, who is Roman Catholic, not Jewish, which is the one who is given final credit for a film.

Denton then adds gratuitously, "Meanwhile, cynical movie moguls rake it (money) in." A statement akin to the stereotyping of bankers as greedy Jews; especially since the mogul Denton refers to here, but does not identify as such, is Jewish.

The Collegian should give space to Dention and others. But we, as readers, should be on guard against arguments that foster anti-semitism and racism.

Insensitive headline tries to rewrite Native American history

I was struck by the singularity of the front page headline Monday ("Pow Wow invades Pond over weekend"). It's inconceivable even the most insensitive and non-involved editor would not notice the incredible inappropriateness of that headline.

How can any contingent of Native Americans anywhere on this stolen continent be called, even in passing, and 'invasion?' As white Americans it is we who are the invaders. We who are the invaders, who inhabit a land taken from the original inhabitants by murder, theft, swindling and rape are not in a position to term any gathering of those original inhabitants as an 'invasion.'

Our European forebearers gained this continent at the cost of millions of lives — at the cost of what we have termed in the twentieth century as genocide. This is the brutal fact of our existence here, just as it is for Jews in Israel and whites in South Africa. The only difference is that America has done a much better job of removing every trace of the original people from the landscape and consciousness of the nation.

Your headline was a horrifying testament to the power that our rewriting of history as given us to erase the truth. It's too late for white America to make complete reparations to the tribes it has destroyed, but it is still in our power to at least recognize the historical facts for what they are.

Sci-Fi group offers resources

By MICHAEL BAYER
Collegian Correspondent

Do you enjoy reading about the adventures of Tarzan or Conan the Barbarian? Do you desperately search through the TV guide to find listings of "Star Trek?" Are you the first person in line when a new George Lucas film is released?

If you answered yes to one or more of these questions, you might very well be what the UMass Science Fiction Society calls a 'sci-fi buff." But don't be embarrassed. Don't be shy. Come out of the proverbial closet and be proud.

There is a place right on the UMass campus where sci-fi lovers have been congregating for over 25 years: Campus Center office 166, the location of the UMass Sci-Fi Library. This science fiction paradise is a treasure trove of futuristic, magical, comedic and just plain disgusting science fiction literature. Over 5000 books and novels decorate the shelves, making it the second largest science fiction library in New England.

UMSFS President John Overstreet invites one and all to visit the library to take a bite out the "impossible" or just to relax and start up a conversation with a new face.

The librarians will testify that some of the regulars are extremely "unique"—diversity is the theme of the members. There are reactionaries, revolutionaries, liberals, Republicans, honor students and radicals coming through the door every day. Conversations range from sex to thermodynamics. However,Overstreet said, he doesn't want the sometimes bizarre conversation or company to scare off any new members.

Besides the new people and fun, become a UMSFS member for the availability of books. The UMSFS library has such an incredible selection, it puts any wee bookstore science fiction shelf to shame. It has all your favorites, including the Tolkien series, Roger Zelasny's Amber series, Andre Norton's Witchworld and Isaac Asimov's Foundation series. The library is also fully stocked with those obsolete, out-of-print books that you've been looking for since the 70's.

In addition to supplying members with the extensive library, the UMSFS frequently sponsors sci-fi movies or film festivals for the general campus public. UMSFS members said that science ficiton is still very popular, just as popular as it was in previous decades. However, it is is constantly changing with new styles of writing.

To become a UMSFS member, visit office 166 and tell the librarian on duty that you want a membership. The cost is $4 for one semester, $7 for two, $8 for the year (including the summer) and $2 for the summer.

Members can borrow up to five books in a two week period and vote at meetings and elections. Non-members are not allowed to remove books from the library, but are encouraged to visit the library and read any book in the lounge.

MHC presents Nine Women photographs

By SUZY HERRING
Collegian Correspondent

The title of the exhibition at Mount Holyoke College Art Museum, Recollections: Nine Women Photographers, speaks for itself. The display consists of ninety silver print photographs, mostly taken during the first half of the century, by nine very distinguished women photographers.

This is a very diverse and interesting exhibition. The images range from Carlotta M. Corpron's experiments with light to Consuelo Kanaga's depiction of the poor. Berenice Abbott's work portrays the urban world of New York in the 1930's. Lotte Jacobi depicted the German and American cultural scenes of her time. Her work includes portraits of Peter Lorre and Marc Chagall. As a result of her extensive art background, Louise Dahl-Wolfe takes a painter's attitude toward light and form, as in "Still Life, Flowers in a Chinese Vase."

Both Ruth Bernhard and Nell Dorr have a talent for romanticizing ordinary things. Bernhard works with objects, giving the viewer an entirely new perception of everyday things, shown in "Lifesavers." In contrast, Dorr works in a very intimate style. "Baby in a Big Bed" is an adorable example of her talent. Of all the artists in the show, the two most outstanding exhibits were those of Barbara Morgan and Toni Frissell. Morgan is mainly a dance photographer who is best known for her work with Martha Graham. Her graceful photographs, such as "Lamentation," capture the movement as well as the emotion of the dance.

Frissell's career is as varied as the exhibition itself — fashion photographer, then becoming a photojournalist during World War II. "Five Girls Running," a fashion shot, is contrasted with a photo of a little boy sitting on a pile of rubble, entitled "Shock - V2 London - Parents Buried in Rubble".

UPC, MTV bring Godfathers to SUB

The Union Program Council, on September 29 at 8:00pm, will present the MTV New Music College Tour featuring the Godfathers and Living Color in the Student Union Ballroom.

The London-based Godfathers made their initial mark on the music world in 1986 with a series of singles released on their independent "Corporate Image" label. Building a strong following during their extensive European tour, the Godfathers eventually signed to Epic Records, and in October 1987 made their major-label debut with the single "Birth, School, Work, Death."

Living Colour's debut album, "Vivid", combines forceful hard rock leanings with the rhythmic dexterity of classic jazz-funk.

Led by accomplished guitarist Vernon Reid, Living Colour's dynamic musical arrangements prove to be equally powerful through their thoughtful social messages. Mick Jagger, drawn by the band's tremendous stage energy, produced Living Colour's demo tape, and appears on the current "Vivid" album.

In addition to these two bands, the MTV New Music College Tour is sponsoring a product showcase, featuring free tapes, sunglasses and hair products. Certain to be a good show, the Godfathers and Living Colour tickets are $6 for UMass students and $8 for the general public.

House hits hard

House of Love
House of Love
Creation Label

Hey you! Stop what you're doing and come with me to the "House of Love." Meet the "Guy" who runs the place, who makes flops and fringes fash, who makes up the rules as he goes along. If you sit still and listen he'll let you in on a few of his obsessions. "Christine" - what a girl she must have been to make these guitars wail the way they do. You see, in the House of Love, even feedback can be tender.

This House has a voice which is its guide. It leads you through many rooms, all empty now except for memories that linger like a bad hangover. "Hope is a word" in the House of Love.

It has many moods, this house. It leads you unsuspecting into your own dreams and then tears them apart in the next second. It is both kind and cruel, innocent and corrupt, like a child. The tension always threatens to make it implode but somehow never quite manages it. Perhaps that is its secret. "Touch Me" and lilting guitars explode into dischord and violence and then come back again, impossibly, making you wonder if you heard right in the first place. In many ways, the House of Love has no memory. It's twists and turns defy history. It renews itself on a whim; you play it to death but it will not die.

It's already happening, the casting off of skin that ensures this House will survive despite all the odds. "Destroy the Heart" takes its own past and turns it inside out. If you think you know the House of Love, you're in the wrong house. Here is two and a half minutes of tortured, tender, splintered pop perfection. It's agony is exquisite. In this inch worth of vinyl there is more pain, longing, poetry and beauty than in all of Shakespeare's sonnets.

It suffocates like a plastic bag and at the same time is as liberating as flight. All that is in any way important about your life is here, and right now I need it more than air.

Passion play at Smith

"Passionplay for a Young Tree" will be performed today at 5 p.m. in front of the Neilson Library at Smith College by the Bread and Puppet Political Theater.

Founded 20 years ago in Vermont, Bread and Puppet Theater stages political and social issues in the form of "passion plays."

"Passionplay for a Young Tree" is a rendition of the traditional Easter story with a young tree the central figure. During the play, the audience is led to several different locations by larger-than-life-sized puppets, flags and brass instruments.

Bread and Puppet is a travelling theater troup particularly well known for its audience participation, and anyone interested in joining today's play should come dressed in white.

The performance is sponsored by the Graduate Student Senate Committee on the University of El Salvador and the Smith college theater department. All proceeds will go to the University of El Salvador.

Poetry contest

So, you're a budding poet. A lyricist? Enjoy the creative construction of words into attractive, flowing passages? Like the unrestricted freedom of endless verse? Then why not enter the American Poetry Association's latest poetry contest. Struggling poets know it's a tough chore to sell their work. There just isn't much of a market. What better way to achieve recognition (and a trip to Hawaii!) than through a national contest.

APA publisher Larry Nelson says: "Students have been winners in all of our contests, so I urge them to enter now. Later they may be too busy with exams."

In addition to the trip to Hawaii, the Association offers a $1,000 first prize, and a total of $11,000 in prizes for 152 poets.

Entrees should contain up to five poems, no more than 20 lines each, with name and address on each page to American Poetry Association, Dept. CN-74, 250 A Potrero Street, P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, CA 95061.

Poems will be judged on originality and sincerity. All work will be considered for publication. All entrees should be postmarked by December 31, 1988.

BUSH AND BUSINESS — Presidential candidate George Bush gestures before speaking to a Bensalem, Pa. audience yesterday afternoon. The republican vice president accused his democratic opponent, Michael Dukakis, of pursuing an "anti-business scheme."

MA Dems rally against VP

BOSTON (AP) — Home-state backers of Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis rallied outside George Bush's Massachusetts headquarters yesterday to denounce the vice president for not condemning the actions of eight former aides and advisers linked to pro-Nazi or anti-Semitic activities.

"George Bush has demonstrated his utter lack of judgment and character," Democratic State Sen. Lois Pines said as about 30 Dukakis supporters stood by, many of them waving Dukakis placards. "George Bush has proven himself to be the consummate 'yes' man."

Malek, a senior Bush operative named to the RNC at the vice president's request, resigned after it was reported that, at then-President Nixon's bidding, he collected information on Jewish officials working in the Bureau of Labor Statistics in 1971.

Ms. Pines was referring to the recent resignations of Frederick V. Malek from the Republican National Committee and seven volunteer members of Bush campaign ethnic councils.

The seven others who quit the Republican nominee's campaign were members of Bush's Coalition for American Nationalities, an umbrella group set up to court ethnic support. The seven reportedly had engaged in or were members of groups that engaged in pro-Nazi or anti-Semitic activities, including helping Nazis emigrate to the United States after World War II.

While Bush and campaign Chairman James A. Baker III have both said racism and bigotry have no place in their campaign, Dukakis supporters at the rally said Bush should address the specific activities of those who resigned and chided him for issuing a statement praising Malek.

"We're still waiting to hear George Bush condemn the past actions of these men who recently left his campaign," Ms. Pines said. "We challenge the Bush campaign to take off its blindfolds."

■ Burma

In Washington, the Reagan administration said it was reviewing assistance programs to Burma that total $14 million annually to determine whether aid should be cut off in light of the coup and violence.

"The United States urges Burmese military authorities immediately to cease shooting at demonstrators and calls upon those demonstrating to refrain from provocative actions," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

Military spokesman Kyaw Sann said the clashes began Sunday night when the "the violent mob attacked security forces with catapults and jinglees (metal darts) and the troops had to disperse the mob by shooting in many parts of the town."

Kyaw Sann said crowds Monday raided two police stations, stealing rifles, pistols and ammunition. There were reports that protesters, some carrying swords, spears and crossbows, were taking the weapons of fallen soldiers.

■ Student jobs

Rossi said another pay raise might be considered in a couple of weeks if recruiting efforts continue to produce poor results.

Last week he said it was still too early to panic because students in the first couple of weeks of the semester have to settle in and finding a job may not be their top priority.

Ryan said many of today's students don't want to work because they are more academically-oriented. But studies show that students who work up to 15 hours per week do as well academically as students who don't work.

Ryan also said the parents of today's students have higher incomes than they did 10 years ago.

In addition, she said students' values have changed. "Ten years ago students were very altruistic and service-oriented."

Although Food Services has been hit the hardest, several other employees on campus, including the Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration department, are facing problems with filling some positions for students, according to Ryan.

She said about 6,000 student jobs are available on campus, and 5,200 were filled last year. Ten years ago there were about 10,000, many of which have since been substituted by full-time positions, Ryan said.

Last week, the Student Employment Office sponsored a two-day job fair in the Student Union, where employers had a chance to interview prospective workers. About 2,000 students visited the fair, Ryan said.

Campus jobs give students a chance to meet other students and make friends, Ryan said.

Rossi said the opportunity to make friends is one of the benefits of working in the dining commons. "You work in a nice, friendly atmosphere."

Anyone interested in applying for dining commons jobs may call 545-2694 at Worcester, 5-2873 at Franklin, 5-0259 at Berkshire, or 5-2075 at Hampshire.

350 people flee blazes

VACAVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Two northern California brush fires scorched 13,000 acres, destroying 24 structures and forcing 350 people to flee, but frosty weather in Montana and Wyoming helped ease the blazes there.

About 100 homes were threatened by the wind-fanned fires that began late Saturday 15 miles west of Vacaville and 20 miles east of Redding. The Vacaville fire was arson, and caused more than $7 million in damage to telecommunications equipment, officials said.

In Wyoming, a cold front Sunday brought up to 3 inches of snow to the fire-charred Yellowstone National Park.

"I would be surprised if the fires made any more major runs," said fire specialist Bruce Freet. But officials weren't ready to predict the end of the blazes that have involved about half of Yellowstone's 2.2 million acres.

In Montana, the winter weather quieted the two remaining major forest fires and prompted the release of most of the soldiers and firefighters that helped with the blaze.

■ Committee meetings

Duffey said a printed version of the CSC was needed for the beginning of the school year, so students would be aware of University policy and their rights and responsibilities under that policy.

Agreement on some of the passages of the CSC could not be reached at the meeting of the Board of Trustees Committee on Academic and Student Affairs last week.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said most of the problems that arose were because William Searson, chief counsel to the trustees, did not like the proposed language of some of the passages, even though an agreement between students and campus administrators has been reached.

Orefice said most of the members of the committee at the meeting last week were very surprised to find out the CSC has already been printed and is in the process of being distributed on campus before being approved by the board. The board is supposed to approve all University policies.

If the revisions are approved at the meeting today, the issue will go before the full Board of Trustees at their next meeting, which is scheduled for October 5.

Water Polo team hopes to float to the top

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's water polo team came out of the Eastern Varsity Tournament at Navy this weekend undefeated and looking at a possible Top 10 rating in the East.

But that doesn't mean coach Russ Yarworth is letting up at all. After a scrimmage tomorrow at Williams College, the team hits the road to meet with the real powerhouses of the nation in the California Invitational at Brown University.

Friday, they meet Iona, ranked 18th in the nation, as underdogs. But Iona could be looking past the Minutemen to steeper competition and be ripe for an upset.

"I think we can surprise them," Yarworth said. "They'll be looking ahead to the big guys so I think we're good enough to pull the upset."

But it doesn't get any easier. From there, UMass plays the University of California-Santa Barbara, ranked eighth in the nation, and UCal-Berkeley, ranked second nationally.

"We expect to learn something," Yarworth said. "We're a young team and we haven't quite risen up to that level yet."

However, since the rankings are formulated not only on record but also on strength of schedule, UMass should not be hurt too badly by the tournament as far as standings go.

If UMass beats Iona this weekend, the team can expect to play in the top bracket in the next Eastern Varsity Tourney Oct. 1-2. That could set them up to be ranked high in the East.

UMass is rapidly becoming an Eastern power as many saw last weekend.

"We played real good polo this weekend," said UMass assistant coach Jim Boudreau.

■ Schedule changes cause problems for Minutewomen

Because of conflicts, Saturday's game at Holy Cross was rescheduled for Oct. 2. UMass was originally slated to host Providence College this afternoon, but the Friars had to back out late for unknown reasons.

What this leaves is a couple of interesting scenarios. With the next game scheduled for Thursday at Adelphi, that means UMass will have gone a week without playing a game. Then, starting on Sept. 28 with a game at Brown University, the Minutewomen will play four games within a span of a week, with the first three being on the road. This has become a genuine concern for coach Jim Rudy.

"That is going to be a tough stretch for us," Rudy said, pointing out that the travel and practice time between games only makes the task that much more difficult.

One thing that may help is the fact that, following an extended weekend trip south to face North Carolina and North Carolina State, the Minutewomen return home for good, playing their final five regular season games at Boyden Field. At a time when a potential playoff spot may be at stake, that may be a critical stretch for the Minutewomen.

Sidelines: It's early yet, but senior midfielder Cathy Cassady, sophomore back Sue Gaudette and freshman forward Michelle Woodside have emerged as the team leaders in the scoring department.

All three players have four points through three games, with Gaudette getting two goals, and Woodside and Cassady each picking up a goal and a pair of assists . . . Gaudette and Woodside have made their goals count, as well, as the two have picked up all three of the team's game-winning goals.

In pre-season, Rudy stressed that he was looking for bigger and better things out of senior forwards Michelle Powers and Beth Roundtree. Both have followed that lead so far. Powers has a goal and an assist, while Roundtree had an impressive stint at the Rhode Island Tournament, getting an assist in the process. In Thursday's 2-1 win over Vermont, both had numerous golden opportunities to knock the ball in, but weren't able to capitalize.

Senior Brian Gable will lead the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team into its match with rival University of Connecticut at 3:30 p.m. today at the Boyden Courts. The Minutemen will then play in the ECAC tournament this weekend.

Smithson: Boston Red Sox a good mix

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press

TORONTO (AP) — Righthander Mike Smithson compares the Boston Red Sox to "a pretty good stew" in their drive for the American League East flag.

One of the big keys on our club is we've got a lot of veteran players who mix in well with the youngsters," Smithson, 33, said.

"The youngsters provide the enthusiasm, the veterans provide the leadership," he added. "When you have a good blend like that it comes out to be a pretty good stew."

Smithson, who earned a job as a free agent last spring, said the combination of youth and experience also has bred confidence.

"We're always confident, we think we can win every time we go out there," the 6-foot-8 pitcher said.

Smithson showed what he meant Sunday as he went six-plus innings and helped the Red Sox to a 9-4 victory over the New York Yankees. He hiked his record to 9-5, including 3-0 this month.

In completing an 8-2 homestand with three consecutive victories over the Yankees after losing the series opener, the Red Sox built their AL East lead to six full games over Detroit and Milwaukee, with New York another one-half game back entering last night's action.

"We couldn't ask for a much better homestand," Boston manager Joe Morgan said.

With fans recalling the Yankees' four-game September sweep and the division playoff victory in Fenway Park in 1978, the Red Sox ended talk of the humbling Boston massacre.

UMass gets top spot in New England poll

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team has already been rewarded for its fast start this season.

The Minutewomen, 3-0, were named the No. 1 team in New England by the collegiate coaches of New England. The weekly poll was released yesterday for the first time this season.

The position carries added significance since the No. 1 team in New England at the close of the season is automatically invited to the NCAA tournament.

Last year, three teams from New England were invited to the tourney. UMass was the third of those three teams but still ended up winning the regional championship to advance to the Final Four.

There was parity then in New England, and there appears to be parity now, for two of those teams that were invited to the national tournament are ranked just fifth and sixth this year.

UMass was followed in the poll by Boston University. The Terriers are undefeated at 3-0-1 and will visit UMass late in the season when they come ot Amherst to play the Minutewomen at Totman Field Oct 26.

The No. 3 team is Northeastern University which is 1-1 and plays UMass Oct. 5 at Totman.

Boston College is fourth at 2-1. That record does not include yesterday's game with Holy Cross. The Minutewomen have already beaten the Eagles, 3-0, on BC's home field.

The fifth and sixth teams are two surprises. The University of New Hampshire and Providence College are fifth and sixth respectively. Both of those teams were NCAA playoff teams last season.

NU, BC, and BU failed to make the cut in the tournament last season while UMass beat UNH in the opening round of play at New Hampshire, and defeated Providence in the regional championship.

UMass travels to Providence Thursday for a rematch of last year's New England regional championship, in which the Friars were ranked No. 1.

Harvard University rounds out the top seven of the poll, which did not include the University of Connecticut or Dartmouth College, two New England teams that UMass must play during the season.

UConn, besides being huge rivals with UMass, was ranked 13th in the nation at one point last season. UMass plays the Huskies in the last game of the season at UConn.

Minutewomen face Boston College tonight at home

Look to stay undefeated

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

Last year, the University of Massachusetts volleyball team made easy work of the Boston College Eagles, finishing them off in three straight sets in only minutes more than an hour.

The Minutewomen are hoping they can repeat that performance when the two teams meet tonight at 7 p.m. in the Totman Gymnasium.

UMass has already disposed of its two earlier opponents this year in a similar style.

After losing the first set of the year to the University of Hartford, the Minutewomen have won six consecutive sets in victories over Hartford and Central Connecticut State University.

"We are going to try to control the pace more than we did against Central Connecticut," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "We want to serve tough and run our offense. We have to keep the offense moving at a fast pace.

"I'm paying attention to what we do more than what they (B.C.) do," Ford said.

While conceding that the Eagles should be easy prey for the Minutewomen, Ford said tonight's match is still very important for UMass because of the upcoming conference schedule.

The Minutewomen have been shuffling players around so far, now Ford wants to solidify everyone into a position.

Juliet Primer, who missed the first game for medical reasons, is traditionally an outside hitter but she has moved into the middle hitter position. The absence of Primer earlier forced senior Julie Smith to fill the middle. She has gone back to her normal position on the outside, as have outside hitters Nancy Sullivan and Christine McEnroe.

"We have to get them adjusted to those positions," Ford said.

With the return of Primer, McEnroe has again moved to her familiar right side.

UMass will also be hoping for big performance from veterans Barbara Meehan and Karen Ferguson, both of whom have played as well as expected already this season.

The Minutewomen are also coming off an unusually long rest. They haven't played since the Central Connecticut meet six days ago — a rare weekend off.

"Having the weekend off is going to help us. The kids have been able to settle into school," Ford said. "It is different, we're not used to it."

Tonight's match will also feature a sibling rivalry between McEnroe and her sister, Jennifer.

Jennifer, a freshman, will be the starting setter for the Eagles and will be playing against her older sister for the first time on the collegiate level.

"I'm excited, I can't wait. I won't go home if we lose (tonight)," UMass' Christine McEnroe said.

The McEnroes will have the added pressure of playing in front of their parents, both of whom will be in attendance.

"My parents are rooting for us because we're at home, when we go there, they'll be rooting for them," Christine said.

Following tonight's game, the Minutewomen will travel to Colgate University this weekend for their first away meet of the season.

Along with Colgate, UMass will face Princeton University, Sienna College, Howard University, and Fairleigh Dickinson University.

Thus far this season, Ford said she has been impressed with her 2-0 Minutewomen. She said she has been especially pleased with the team's versatility.

She said she's also been impressed with "the leadership of the upperclassmen and the ability of players to change positions. That's not easy to do."

Sked changes a concern for Minutewomen

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team is off to a perfect start, having won each of its first three games.

That 3-0 record is good for the top ranking in New England, and fourth nationally, behind North Carolina, California-Berkeley, and Colorado College. But that may all change quickly. The latest polls will be released sometime today, and the Minutewomen will be getting ready to challenge one of a few tough spots in their schedule.

Location of polls debated

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Efforts to move voting polls from Amherst center to the University of Massachusetts campus have been hampered by the town clerk's claim that the polls would not be handicap accessible.

The campus polls would be in the Hampden Student Center in the Southwest Residential Area instead of the Bangs Community Center in Amherst, said Public Policy Chairman Michael Greiner who has been working with Co-President-elect Shari Silkoff on the project.

"The students would turn out to vote more if the polls were on campus," Greiner said.

Students make up the majority in the 10th Precinct, which encompasses Southwest students and townspeople, said Town Clerk Cornelia Como. Greiner estimated the majority to be about 80 percent.

But a polling place must "be in a public, orderly, and convenient portion of the precinct," according to the Massachusetts General Laws Annotated of 1988, and provide handicap accessibility.

Como said Hampden's entrance near the horseshoe driveway has curbs and flights of stairs. Also, to get upstairs in the building where the polls would be, people would have to follow "a complicated route through the bakery, to the service elevator, and through the kitchen," she said.

The upper entrance to the building is handicap accessible, but Hampden is at least two buildings from the nearest parking lot, making it inconvenient for the elderly, she said.

"It either is or it isn't handicap accessible," Como said.

But Greiner said on election days students can be assigned to the area to help people in and out of the building. He also said ramps can be built over the stairs.

Director for Handicap Student Affairs Paul Appleby said although the entire building does not have to be handicap accessible, "Hampden Center would not be appropriate."

He said he believed the Bangs Community Center would be more accessible because of the parking. He said handicap students can easily take UMass vans to Amherst.

Parking around Hampden is a concern because of traffic, number of available spaces, and long term meters, Como said.

Director of Transportation and Parking Bill Barret recognized these as valid concerns, but said he would consider investigating the possibility of making public parking available to people on voting days.

Director of Public Safety Art Hilson said, "We would do all we could to work with them [the voting poll organizers]."

"We seem to be getting a message that the townspeople are more important than the students to Town Hall," Greiner said. Handicap students should not have to travel to Amherst to vote, he said.

He said he had hoped to have the polling place changed for the November presidential election but voters must be notified 20 days in advance of a polling place change, according to state law.

Chairman of the Amherst Board of Selectmen Edith Wilkinson said the board has had considerable interest in moving the polling place for the 10th Precinct. But all the problems about parking and accessibility would have to be fixed before a motion would be placed on the board's agenda, Wilkinson said.

Union for security officers to present complaints

Collegian News Services

AMHERST — The State Labor Commission will hear complaints today from a union representing security officers at the University of Massachusetts. Local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, filed two complaints over the summer, charging that five security officers in the Public Safety department were transfered to the Parking Office in violation of an agreement.

The second complaint charges that two union staffers were removed from a day shift because the union filed the first complaint.

AMHERST — Arts advocates are calling for a Town Meeting article that would direct 1 percent of any future construction expenditure into an arts fund.

Members of the Amherst Arts Council, appearing before selectmen Monday, said the town should display more art in its public buildings. Council members said the fund would finance maintenance of the works of art, and sponsorship of community art projects and activitees.

Residents and Smith students draw a blank on official school colors.

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press

NORTHAMPTON - White is the traditional color of gloves, bridal veils and fine china. It's also the school color of Smith College.

The green, blue, red and gold Smith banners lining downtown store windows as women returned to classes this fall belie the fact Smith is arguably colorless. Even the Smith teddy bears in the college bookstore sport blue T-shirts.

Students are as confused as local merchants about the school color.

"Aren't the colors blue and gold?" one of several students gathered outside the book store said.

"I thought they were red and white," said another.

"They're light blue and yellow. That's what some upperclassmen told me," tried a third.

Actually the white, by tradition, can be trimmed in yellow, said Mary Reutner, associate director of Smith's development and marketing office, which takes such things as color identification and unified images seriously.

But yellow presents its own problems.

"We order yellow and we get gold. Our color is not gold," said sports information director Carol Grills, explaining why Smith's athletic teams finally opted for navy blue.

Smith blue is the same shade as the serge bloomers hanging in the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield as part of a display on the first women's college basketball game, played at Smith in 1893. Blue also washes better than yellow, even though it fades a bit, Grills said.

But blue can create a sameness in the gym when Smith, which bills itself the nation's largest privately endowed women's college, faces the blue-and-white clad Lyons of nearby archrival Mount Holyoke, the nation's oldest continuously operated women's college.

Or is it all in the eye of the beholder?

"Our blue is the blue of the October sky," said Mount Holyoke spokesperson Vee Wailgum, news director at Mount Holyoke.

"And it's been the blue of the October sky since Mary Lyon started the college in 1837."

Reutner's office, incidentally, uses a brick red logo on its mailings. That's the color a New Canaan, Conn. design firm settled on five years ago when asked to come up with an "identifier" for Smith. It connotes 'New England,' 'college' and 'warmth,' Reutner said.

Red Sox keep on rolling with 13-2 win

The Boston Red Sox continued their drive to the American League East pennant last night by thoroughly pounding to Toronto Blue Jays, 13-2 in Toronto.

The New York Yankees and Detroit Tigers each kept pace in their quest to catch the Sox with wins last night, but with the season winding down, the Sox' chances of making the playoffs get better and better each day.

For a complete story on last night's Sox win, turn to page 9. For the up-to-date standings and magic number in the American League East, see page 20.

Anti-drug bill brings controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) - A congressional authority on the Constitution predicted yesterday that a controversial anti-drug bill will pass the House this week by a wide margin despite measures he called "stupid" and "outrageous" attacks on the Bill of Rights.

"I think the bill will pass overwhelmingly because there's some kind of hysteria on Capitol Hill," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House Justice subcommittee on civil and constitutionl rights.

He said in an interview on CBS-TV's "This Morning" program that four tough amendments added on bipartisan votes last week are "pretty awful." But he said congressmen will vote for the bill "no matter what the provisions are, if one can appear to be tough on drugs. . . it'll pass big."

Asked whether the House was effectively waging a "war on the Bill of Rights," Edwards said, "Yes, that's what is happening."

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., in the same interview, termed Edwards' objections "nonsense."

"I think (the) provisions are constitutional. And I think they have the support of the majority of the members," Hyde said.

The House is expected to vote on the final bill Thursday. Approval would mean the differences with a Senate version would have to be worked out by a conference committee of the two chambers.

The amendments that have drawn scorn from civil libertarians would establish:

- Death penalty for those convicted of murder in drug-related crime.
- Denial of federal welfare and other benefits to repeat drug offenders.
- An exception to the so-called exclusionary rule that would allow into court evidence seized without a search warrant.
- A civil fine of up to $10,000 for individuals accused of possessing even small amounts of drugs, whether or not there is a conviction.

Edwards said the fine would be "an outrage. Never before in American history have we had civil penalties in criminal matters."

"The stupid part about this amendment is that hereafter, if the bill passes, we won't be able to extradict drug offenders from overseas becuse countries that don't have the death penalty — and most don't — just won't send them back to the United States to be executed," said Edwards.

Men convicted in car-dealership bombing

CHICOPEE (AP) - A man who helped bomb a car dealership has been sentenced to three years in prison by a federal judge and the bomb's maker has been ordered to serve 18 months in jail.

The sentences were handed down in Springfield on Monday by US District Judge Frank H. Freedman against Joseph R. Dalpe Jr., 32, of Chicopee and Glen R. Bovat, 27, of Palmer.

The men are two of five charged in connection with the April 20, 1987 bombing of Plaza Auto Clinic in Chicopee that caused $20,000 in damages. Prosecutors said the blast was retribution for a year-old dispute between one of the defendants, Kevin B. Noone, 27, of West Warren, and the dealership's owner.

Noone faces a mandatory five-year minimum term with no parole for his conviction on a charge of carrying a firearm during the commission of a violent crime.

Noone and co-defendant Steven R. Sadusky, 23, of Easthampton, who admitted placing the bomb under a Mercedes Benz, are expected to be sentenced later this week. The fifth defendant, Noone's brother, Peter, 24, is undergoing psychiatric evaluation to determine whether he is competent to stand trial.

Sadusky, Bovat and Dalpe had pleaded guilty before the trial, but Kevin Noone was convicted after a five-day trial this summer.

Bovat is currently serving life sentences in state prison for sexual assault charges and must serve his 18-month federal term upon parole, which his lawyer estimated will come in 15 years.

Dalpe, who admitted to charges of conspiracy, malicious damage and tampering with a witness, has been in custody since his arrest in January.

Co-op Extention's budget to be cut

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

The Cooperative Extension System is expected to experience cuts in state and federal funding, according to Robert Christensen, the deputy associate director of the service.

Cooperative Extension provides to Massachusetts residents "non-credit, off-campus, educational programs," Christensen said. The service, which has offices in Stockbridge Hall and every county in the Commonwealth, is not supported through the University of Massachusetts, but through direct funding by the state and federal government, he said.

Christensen said that federal funding during the Reagan administration has increased about three percent annually. This was "hardly enough to keep up with inflation and certainly not enough to allow for any expansion in the organization," he said.

"We're looking this year, because of (the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill), for a possible reduction on the order of one to two percent in our federal funding, which is not big creased funding. The August meeting took money, but every little bit helps," he said.

The Massachusetts government supports Cooperative Extension in 10 counties, including Hampshire, Berkshire and Worcester counties, Christensen said. State funding is also disappointing, he said.

"A level-funded budget, including provision for cost-of-living increases and merit increases, submitted to the Board of Regents and thus to the legislature was for $5.5 million. The legislature, in turn passed a budget that was for $5.1 million and that was sent on to (Gov. Michael S. Dukakis). The governor, however . . . reduced that $5.1 million to $4.0 million . . . that would have caused us to be subject to some rather severe measures, including possible layoffs or terminations of staff . . . we did not take it lying down," said Christensen.

According to State Representative Stan Rosenberg, he then met with Associate Director of Cooperative Extension Robert Light, State Senator John Olver and Frank Keefe, the state secretary of administration and finance. Rosenberg said the members of the Dukakis administration had misunderstood the service's request for in-place in order to clear up the misunderstanding and regain some of the budget cuts, Rosenberg said.

"They (the administration) thought (the additional money) was for a new program. Somewhere on the order of 30 people would have lost their jobs if these cuts had gone through," he said. Christensen said Keefe promised to restore an additional $800,000 in funding, bringing the total budget to $4.9 million.

According to a brochure distributed by the service, Cooperative Extension programs are organized into nine categories: "competitiveness and profitability in agriculture"; "home and urban horticulture"; "human resource development"; "family strength and economic security"; "nutrition, diet and health"; "community change, planning and management"; "marine and freshwater resources"; "water quality, conservation and management"; "conservation, development and utilization of natural resources."

Christensen said the budget cuts have forced Cooperative Extension to make a few changes. Unfilled positions will not be advertised, the service's Boston station will move to rent-free offices at UMass-Boston and statewide travel by Cooperative Extension employees will be heavily restricted, he said.

Decision to be made on code

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will decide at its next meeting whether or not to approve the much revised Code of Student Conduct.

Yesterday, the board's Executive Committee approved the revisions and passed a motion for the code to go before the full board Oct. 5.

There was some discussion at yesterday's meeting concerning the changes made in the code about hearing boards. They conduct hearings on the alleged violations of the code and recommend findings and sanctions.

The boards in question were the residential and the non-residential boards. Residential is for students living on campus, and non-residential is for students living off campus. The code now states the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs or his or her designee(s) will compose the boards, which will include University officials and/or students.

But a sentence was added to the code stating students might not have a chance to get any representation on the boards. It says the boards will have the opportunity for student representation unless the vice chancellor or "his/her designees" deems otherwise.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice had problems with the "his/her designee(s)" part of the sentence. She said the sentence gave no indications as to who exactly those designees would be.

Also yesterday, the Board of Trustees Committee on Budget and Financial Affairs approved, among other things, the multi-purpose arena for UMass.

The University has been granted $25 million to construct the complex, which will accommodate concerts, stage productions, rainy day convocations, Minuteman basketball, and hockey, according to Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor for Administration and Finance.

There is some speculation the new arena will bring a hockey team to UMass in an estimated five years. The University has not had a hockey team since 1978.

The Board of Trustees had been attempting to solicit state support for the project since 1984 and finally got the money in July when the state approved the University's Capital Outlay Budget.

Campus trailers fill need for temporary space

By KARL ROOKEY
Collegian Staff

The growing number of trailer-park facilities at the University of Massachusetts represents a need for research space that may not be fulfilled until after 1995, according to Physical Plant officials.

These mobile-home style additions to the the University's facilities are next to the police station, in front of Goessmann Laboratory, behind the Graduate Research Center, and next to Totman Gym.

Peter Wozniak, director of operations at the Physical Plant, said these trailers meet classroom and research space demands that cannot be met by the existing facilities.

"Most of the trailers will be on campus from five to seven years," Wozniak said. He said many of the trailers should be removed from campus after the completion of the Polymer Research building and the new classroom building, which the state recently approved.

George Kernensky, a University specifications technician, said the University is currently leasing-to-own seven of the nine trailers most recently placed on campus. Kernensky said nine more lease-to-own units are scheduled to arrive in the near future.

Ron Naylor, director of planning at the Physical Plant, said the number of trailers will probably continue to rise until the new buildings have been constructed but not at the rate they did this summer.

"[Using trailers] is the quickest and least expensive method to help ease the need for space," Naylor said.

He said the trailers owned by the University should not remain in the central section of campus but would most likely be moved to the perimeter of campus.

Wozniak also said he expected to see the trailers removed though there has been trouble with that in the past. "Unfortunately some of the trailers in place now [by the Department of Public Safety] have remained longer than we expected," he said.

Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, said the University community should "celebrate the fact that there are modular buildings all over campus — it is a sign of how vibrant the campus is."

This trailer adjacent to the Graduate Research Tower is one of many popping up on campus to help ease the space problem.

The space allocation problems should be eased in the future, because of the approval and funding of six new buildings on campus, Rosenberg said.

Both Naylor and Rosenberg said the cause of this space deficit is a shift in the University's focus. "The growth in the University's prestige, and the fact that we are acquiring incredible [new faculty] have resulted in a doubling of grants for research [in the last eight years]," Rosenberg said.

He said the dramatically increased demand for research space could not have been predicted.

Naylor said the demand for space will not be satisfied until the completion of the polymer and classroom buildings, and the earliest expected date of completion for either of them is six to seven years from now.

The modular buildings are serving primarily as classroom space, but there is some research as well: the classroom space replaced by these buildings will be converted to laboratory facilities, Naylor said. He said the computer research facilities will also be located in trailor facilities.

Testimony of flight attendant implicates hijacker in murder

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Flight attendant Uli Derickson testified yesterday that a US Navy diver bravely endured savage beatings at the hands of the hijackers of a TWA jetliner before he was murdered.

Her statements came as the murder and piracy trial of Mohammed Ali Hamadi continued in a heavily-guarded courtroom in Frankfurt.

The hijackers "took him up to the cockpit and started to brutally beat him. They beat on him as long as he stood," Derickson told the court of Navy diver Robert Stethem's ordeal.

"When Mr. Stethem collapsed, one of the hijackers took the armrest of a seat - it still had the screws sticking out of it - and beat on him."

She said that when Stethem collapsed, one hijacker "jumped on his ribs with his full weight."

Fighting back sobs, Derickson added: "Mr. Stethem was a very courageous man. He never made a sound."

The German-born flight attendant said that after the beating, Hamadi turned to her and said: "Look at him now, he thinks he's so strong."

Hamadi has admitted taking part in the hijacking, but has denied killing Stethem.

Thirty-nine Americans were held hostage for 17 days in the 1985 ordeal.

In earlier testimony today, Derickson recalled the harrowing moments just after the airliner was seized after takeoff from Athens airport.

She said the hijackers threatened to blow up the airplane if they were not allowed into the cockpit.

"They said they had come to die. They said it didn't make any difference to them," Derickson said.

Derickson, a 44-year-old US citizen, said Hamadi held a gun to her head shortly after the Athens to Rome flight took off on June 14, 1985.

She said another hijacker kicked her and swore at her.

Derickson, the purser aboard the TWA flight 847, is credited with shielding passengers whose names sounded Jewish by hiding their passports, court records indicate.

Former hostages said Derickson also helped to calm the tense situation by acting as a translator for Hamadi during the hostage ordeal.

The Lebanese Shiite Moslem lived in West Germany from 1982 to 1984 and speaks German, but very little English.

Shortly after the airliner was seized and Stethem singled out because of his military identification card, Derickson said she was called upon to translate for Hamadi.

"Mr. Stethem was taken to the last row of first class. He was asked where he was from and what he did. He said he was a navy diver. I tried to translate the word navy for Hamadi," Derickson said.

Dhaka water health threat

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Millions of people in the capital have been exposed to serious health hazards by drinking contaminated water, and the number of cases of diarrhea has soared in the past 24 hours, officials said yesterday.

"In most cases, the waste flowing out of the pipes is unfit for drinking," an official at the Environmental Pollution Control Board said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The floods that inundated three-fourths of Bangladesh three weeks ago have claimed at least 2,000 lives. They said one-fourth of the deaths were caused by diarrhea, while the others were from drowning, snake bites and houses collapsing. The government, whose count is generally low, puts the total deaths at about 1,000.

The newspapers say at least one million of Bangladesh's 110 million people have been stricken by diarrhea in the past four weeks.

The government reported 618,656 diarrhea cases, including 47,361 in the past 24 hours. It said 268 people have died of diarrhea.

The pollution control official said tests Sunday showed the count of coliform bacteria, linked to intestinal diseases, in tap water was as high as 4,000 per hundred milliliters in some areas of Dhaka. He said the permissible limit was 4 per hundred milliliters.

Water samples collected at government relief camps showed a coliform bacteria count of up to 1,600 per hundred milliliters, he added.

Excessive quantities of coliform bacteria in drinking water can cause diarrhea, dysentery, typhoid, jaundice and pneumonia.

Floodwaters that covered about three-fourths of Dhaka, a city of 6 million, leaked into municipal water pipes. The officials said many pipes had leaks that could not be repaired because they were under water.

As the floodwaters recede, the municipal corporation has been closing the 465 refugee centers set up in schools and colleges so classes can resume. Some of the refugees said they had nowhere to go.

Rahimullah, a 45-year-old day laborer, went from door to door today with his three children.

"After trying for the last three days to get a job, I am now begging for food for my family," he said.

Ismail Hossain, 45 said he had come to Dhaka after his house in Khadun, 10 miles south of the capital, was flooded.

"I have no money to rebuild the house and start life afresh," he said. "Nobody in the village is willing to extend a loan to me."

A Relief Ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said millions affected by the floods were faced with the same problems.

The government estimates that 40 million people - more than one-fourth of the country's population - were directly affected by the flood. It defines those directly affected as having lost relatives, homes, crops or other property.

Although Bangladesh, a low-lying country shredded by mighty rivers and cobweb-like networks of tributaries, is regularly hit by floods, this summer's deluge is the worst in memory.

Vodka still banned by Soviet cabinet

MOSCOW (AP) — Wine, beer, champagne and cognac will be available in Soviet food stores, but the Kremlin plans to continue sharp restrictions on the sale of vodka, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda said.

The daily said Monday that the Cabinet, known as the Council of Ministers, reviewed Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's 1985 anti-alcohol campaign that raised prices and the drinking age while cutting hours of liquor stores and the production of alcoholic beverages.

"Dry wines, champagne, cognac and beer . . . are permitted to be sold in food stores and it was proposed to put an and to queues that humiliate human dignity," the Pravda report said.

Car crashes in line, kills student

BOSTON (AP) — A 17-year-old music student who died after a car plowed into a line of people waiting to buy rock concert tickets spent one week at the college he had dreamed of attending, his mother said.

Frederick Webber, 17, of Livonia, Mich., died Saturday after a car jumped a median and crashed into a line of people waiting overnight to buy tickets to a concert by rock star Prince.

Webber was a freshman at the Berklee College of Music and had spent the last two years of his life studying music, his mother, Julie Webber said.

"His dream was to go to the Berklee College of Music," she said. "He had one week there."

The accident happened early Saturday morning outside Tower Records in the Back Bay area.

The driver was identified as Nathaniel Sanders, 21, of Beverly, said police spokesman Jim Jordan. There was no evidence alcohol was involved, Jordan said.

Sanders told police that another vehicle rear-ended him, forcing his car over the median and then fleeing down a nearby tollway.

A court magistrate will determine Oct. 3 if there is sufficient evidence to charge Sanders, police said.

Six other people waiting to buy tickets before they went on sale Saturday morning also were injured.

Grad dies over summer

Finished education despite pain of cancer

Collegian Staff Report

A University of Massachusetts graduate died this summer after struggling with cervical cancer for more than a year.

Maria Coss, 36, was a patient in Baystate Medical Center in Springfield when she received her degree in education in April. A student in the Spanish and Portugese department, Coss finished her education, despite intense pain from the disease.

Maria Gonzalez, a close friend of Coss, said she saw Coss as an inspiration for all people who have cancer to go on with their lives.

"I admire her so much. A month before she died she couldn't even walk because the cancer had spread all over," Gonzalez said. She said Coss refused to take morphine because she did not want to become addicted.

Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, said he also admired her determination to graduate.

"Her stamina, and dedication allowed her to stay in school. She wanted to finish her degree. She set a tremendous example for all students in terms of courage and dedication," Rodriguez said.

Rodriguez said Coss had worked tirelessly with the BCP, organizing groups in the area to take part in the program. "She didn't get paid for what she did, she was very enthusiastic," Rodriguez said.

Coss made a trip to Puerto Rico in March to visit her family. Her friends helped to raise money for the visit and for a trip to Mexico for an experimental cancer treatment. Coss had also undergone chemotherapy and radiation treatments, which provided little relief.

Coss is survived by her parents, Fernendez Sanchez Coss and Gregoria Ortiz of Puerto Rico, and four children, Zindy E. Echevarria of West Springfield, Miriam Echevarria, Madeline Echevarria, and Alex Reyes, of Amherst.

A custody court has yet to decide where the children will live.

Anyone wishing to donate to a fund in the memory of Coss can contact Jean Francis at the Triangle Street branch of Shawmut Bank.

State treasurer revealed as source for Globe story

BOSTON (AP) — State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane testified under oath yesterday that he was the source of a 1981 Boston Globe column that said former Gov. Edward J. King pressured a state judge to change a verdict in a gang-rape case.

On the second day of testimony in King's libel suit against the Globe, Crane steadfastly insisted that he had told former Globe columnist David Farrell about the purported telephone call but could not remember any other details.

Crane said his conversation with Farrell took place in October 1981, shortly after Norfolk County Superior Judge Herbert Abrams touched off a public furor by giving suspended sentences to five young men who pleaded guilty to a gang-rape in Holbrook.

"I mentioned the fact that I had heard that the governor, who was infuriated, had in fact called Judge Abrams and so stated his disappointment with the decision," Crane testified.

Abrams, who was appointed by the law-and-order advocate King, did reverse himself. But both the judge and the former governor insist that King never telephoned Abrams to pressure him.

King, who filed suit in 1982 seeking $3.2 million in damages, charges that the Globe defamed him by falsely suggesting that he obstructed justice.

"I didn't think there was anything wrong if, in fact, my information was correct," Crane added under direct examination by King attorney Robert Goldman.

Crane said he could not remember where he picked up his intelligence, nor where he was when he passed it along to Farrell. Crane also said Farrell never asked him how he knew about the purported call.

Crane said he and Farrell discussed the matter again shortly after the column was published on Nov. 8, 1981. In response to a complaint from King, Globe executives ordered Farrell to double-check his assertion that King had telephoned Abrams.

"I told him there was no doubt in my mind I was told that . . . and that I stood behind my facts," the treasurer said.

Looking composed but unusually grave, Crane answered Goldman's questions for about an hour. Surprisingly, Globe Attorney Joseph Kociubes elected not to cross-examine the treasurer, leaving Goldman unprepared to call his next witness.

Testimony was suspended until Thursday in observance of the Jewish holiday on Wednesday.

Farrell gave his version of Crane's tip about King during cross-examination by Kociubes.

"My best recollection is he just made a passing reference that the governor was so upset at Judge Abrams, this judge he'd appointed, that he called him and told him to change the sentence," Farrell testified.

Farrell said he trusted his old friend Crane implicitly and therefore did not take notes on the conversation of press Crane to substantiate his story.

"Did you believe it?" Kociubes asked.

"Yes, I did, because it fit," Farrell said, adding that he saw King as a "can-do" chief executive who would not hesitate to act on a problem. In fact, Farrell said, he admired King for trying to reverse what Farrell himself considered an outrageously light sentence.

The Globe's attorney also drew Farrell out about precedents for such a phone call. In one case, Farrell said, a governor summoned a Superior Court judge and told the judge he was considering elevating him to the Appeals Court, but only if the judge would "vote the right way" on the death penalty, abortion and similar issues.

"The governor was Edward J. King," Farrell testified. Pressed by King's attorney, Farrell said the judge in the incident was John J. Irwin, Jr., who remains in Superior Court, and that his source was Irwin himself.

Under Goldman's questioning, Crane acknowledged that he and Farrell had been friends for decades. Crane also admitted that he was aware that if he did not step forward and identify himself as Farrell's source, the columnist would face a trial in which the jury could assume there was no source.

Under a claim of confidentiality, Farrell at first refused to identify his source until confronted with the court ruling on sources. Farrell later approached Crane, and the treasurer agreed to sign an affidavit in 1985 identifying himself.

Odds and ends

UMass enters the real world

It's exciting when people you know make good, partly because you're happy for them, but also because at heart we're all opportunists. Maybe we can help them and maybe they can help us. Aspiration and inspiration — here's a run-down of some UMass people to keep tabs on:

Rob Skelton

In the next Democratic Administration it's likely Chancellor Joseph Duffey will be chosen as Secretary of Education. Certainly he is on the short list. His wife Anne Wexler is a prominent lobbyist and political consultant active in the Party Elite; campus appearances in recent years by Govs. Dukakis and Cuomo, Rev. Jesse Jackson, Geraldine Ferraro, and the Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe are part of political pattern designed to enhance Duffey's stature and paint him as competent man of achievement. He is, so why not?

When Duffey goes to Washington he will tap the best and brightest from amongst us to staff his department. Would you like to be in D.C. next year? Contact Duffey today.

Stephen Erickson is running for State Rep. from the second Hampshire district (Hadley, South Hadley, Easthampton) and he's one of us. He revived the Republican Club at UMass in 1985 and is remembered by many here as sort of an elder statesman of the student conservative movement (prenastiness era). Erickson is what you might term a moderate conservative who is attempting to dislodge an entrenched Democratic opponent.

It remains to be seen what he can do in this one-party state, and it's ironic that the GOP is running on a platform of change. But change it must, as the Dems can no longer prove their complete usefulness, and therefore can no longer rightfully claim complete control of the government in this state.

When Erickson goes to the Statehouse, he won't be hiring as many folks as Duffey. But he'll need loyal followers to help in constituency outreach, as sign carriers at his re-election campaigns and organizers for fundraisers. If you want to get in on the action, Steve's number's in the book.

A fair number of UMass grads and undergrads are working daily for Northampton's Progressive Group, telephone fund-raising for the Democratic National Committee and the Dukakis for President campaign. If Duke wins, expect a migration toward D.C.

One former PG fund-raiser, UMass student and hell-raiser, Mark Caldeira, is in New York working for the magazine "Nation." Some of you may remember he got his journalistic career right here as a Collegian columnist.

Hmmn.

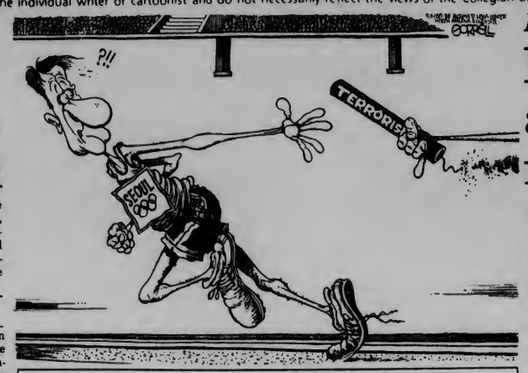
Do you have a 'uniquely you' story you have to tell? Tell it to "Odds and ends." Submissions should be sent to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass



My observations

I can't believe it. UMass has so many things to offer, I can hardly begin to choose. We have gyms to stay in shape, teams to join, clubs to participate in and for the grande finale about 85 percent of us don't have to think.

Nancy Cohen

For 85 percent of us, the insignificant, little things such as freedom of choice, freedom of thought and our own personal individuality are things we don't have to deal with.

We have 'services' rendered by our little 'helpers' to do that for us. They don't charge anything because they're such humanitarians. All you have to do is choose a group — completely.

Forget questioning anything they do or say. Don't read an opposite viewpoint with an open mind. Forget your life — politics will do for a good substitution. Forget why you came here, all the re-education you'll need will be easily accessible.

That's all you have to do. Are you up for the challenge?

I'm not.

On a brighter note, say you don't want this kind of education. Let's pretend you came here to study, learn about yourself. If this is the path you prefer we have something in common.

I've been to rallies and read about all the battles and controversies. I'm not impressed with either one of our little 'helpers.'

When the CIA came to campus, one of our little 'helpers' was not a happy camper. They decided to make signs and barricade the Career Center doors, because they didn't want those kind of people at their school.

Never mind that other people might want to join the CIA. To them that was beside the point. As far as they were concerned they didn't want those 'criminals' around.

The other little helpers decided they were going to do something fun, different. When the ultimate gay basher, Paul Cameron, came to have a little 'chat' with the university, they decided to have it during Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Awareness week two years in a row.

God, I can hear the little snickers now. Hee, Hee. They certainly showed them a thing or two, didn't they?

The same people who censor others scream bloody murder when they are being censored.

It's a constant circle; liberals and conservatives have taken the hypocritical oath. I once admired people who believed adamantly in a cause. I figured they really knew what was going on. Now I've realized being a staunch believer is nice, but it leaves little room for growth or change.

I know many people who proclaim their 'open mindedness.' There's such a thing as being so open-minded you become closed to other opinions. So before you decide to give in (or up) to these people, think about what your giving up. It may make life easier, but eventually you may pay for your life of leisure.

No rebels against racism

In response to Monday's front page article ("Pow-Wow invades pond over weekend") The tone of the article was very offensive and connoted stereotypical images of Native Americans.

The phrase "a constant drone of drums hung over. . ." is extremely derogatory. The sounds of the drums people heard may have been offensive, but to Native People, it represents the heart beat of Indigenous Nations. The phrase "unusual smells of exotic foods. . ." demonstrates the ignorance of the writer who has no knowledge or conceptions about Native People. The dictionary defines exotic as something foreign. Let us remind you, it was your ancestors who invaded our land, and you are the foreigner. Native American foods are not 'exotic.'

Since the writer did not consult with any of the American Indian students about Monday's article, let us explain what the significance of a Pow-Wow is. A Pow-Wow is an inter-tribal gathering which celebrates the spirititual existence of many Indigenous Nations belonging to this land.

"The two groups of men beating out ancient rhythms and singing old Indian songs," are referred to by Native people as drums. The songs sung in Native languages are messages reminding us of the respect given to all creation on earth.

The headline itself demonstrates the disrespect and ignorance of the writer and people who were responsible for allowing the article to be published. 'Invasion' is a very ironic word, especially when it is most of the Collegian's writers ancestors who were true invaders. A word of advice. Before anyone writes an article dealing with Native people, please contact the people you are writing about.

Dear Mr. Governor

Dear Governor Dukakis,

I'm a senior at UMass-Amherst, and I would like to thank you for the wonderful things you've done for us.

First, the new paved road to the Chancellor's house looks great. Hey, who needs the holes in the road to Health Services filled anyway? The landscaping around the campus is a nice touch. I don't know about other students, but I chose my education based on how much ivy was growing on the buildings. The best improvement was the extra fees we're paying. When I found out the money went to hire more teaching assistants, I let out a sigh of relief; we need as many people as we can get to pass out papers.

I was under the impression that our extra fees went to maintaining the courses which would be cancelled due to your budget cuts. I arrived at UMass on opening day with a full courseload and came home at day's end with two courses left — the others had been cancelled.

But then I began to understand the formula: reduce the budget, eliminate key courses students need to graduate, force them to pay for another semester (or year) and the budget will be somewhat balanced later on.

Whatever happened to the 'great minds of tomorrow?' They are being left behind at UMass because there's no money with which to teach them. Believe it or not, students want a quality education, not a pretty place to show their friends.

Well, good luck on your campaign for the Presidency. You've already lost my vote as well as those of many unsatisfied students. And don't worry about my taking time away from my studies to write to you — I don't have any classes anyway.

Cultural ignorance mars article

Recently, when riding in a car, I noticed a red and grey colored corporate fan encircled with confederate flags. I telephoned the company, Country Carpenter, the next day. I asked the owner if he knew the historical/political meaning of the confederate flags on his company's van.

No answer.

I told him that, as an African-American female from the South, the flag was deeply offensive — that the Confederate flag symbolized the Ku Klux Klan, white supremacy, hatred, torture, lynchings and rape.

Still silence on the other end of the line.

When I asked him if he agreed with what the flag represented, to my horror he agreed with most of what it stood for and definitely favored segregation. I then asked if he'd decorate his van with swastikas. He responded he didn't agree with what happened in Germany, only with the South.

After I calmed down, I telephoned a woman and recounted the story. She had no idea what I was talking about. I then explained it to her. She replied with minimal surprise that she and her former roommate had had a confederate flag hanging in their dorm room last year and had labelled themselves the 'Rebel Girls.'

Two days later, I saw a man cleaning classrooms wearing a hat with a confederate flag and the word 'Rebel' on it. I didn't talk to him.

What do people who don't identify the confederate flag with the intense hatred of the KKK see? — Gone With the Wind? The Dukes of Hazzard? These are nostalgic or romantic images that are totally devoid of the real history behind it.

Today I see Confederate flags hanging in dorm windows. I can no longer tolerate people telling me they don't know what the flag means while they ignorantly and passively support the racists and anti-Semites who flaunt flags proudly, showing their hatred.

Martin Luther King, Jr. said, "The silent words of good-willed people hurts much more than the hateful words of ill-willed people." The complacency of almost everyone — even campus progressives — in tackling the display of the confederate flag angers me.

If people think I'm overreacting when I share my feelings about the flag with them, let a verse of Bob Marley's "Buffalo Soldier" suffice: If you knew your history/then you would know where I'm coming from./Then you wouldn't have to ask me/who the hell I think I am.

UMass theater class attacks social issues with drama

By MAURA MCLAUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

Theater with a Conscience brings students of different backgrounds together to discuss some of the issues of concern to the UMass community. Not only do students in this class have different backgrounds in theater, but they also bring varied opinions on the questions which form the basis of the class: What is racism? What is a racist incident? Do we agree on the definitions, and what can we do to prevent racism?

The idea for this course originally came two and a half years ago from Andrea Kendall, who works with the Student Developement Office. She wanted to develop a student repertory company which would do improvisation and script work concerning social issues. Along with the theatrically oriented class exercises, the students attend anti-oppression workshops to receive training and learn skills which help in their productions.

Sculpture show opens at University Library

CHRIS PARCELLIN
Collegian Correspondent

An opening reception for a new exhibition in the Sculpture Courtyard at the University Library was held yesterday. And student and faculty artists participating in the show that will run until March 31 were on hand to discuss their work. John Pohanka, a staff member from the art department said that he wants his sculpture pieces to invoke thought.

"All of the work that I do is intended to attract people from a distance by the use of intense color. And also by form," he said of his piece "Landsaw and Home."

A copper-clad saw blade appears to melt or glow as its fluorescent plexi-glass tips cut through the houses, leaving an image of charred glass jutting from them.

"When you get closer you realize that the piece wards you off. There's a contrast between its beauty and its jagged surfaces," he commented. Pohanka received his M.F.A. from Mills College in California and pursued further graduate study at the Hartford Art School. His work has been exibited throughout California, Connecticut and Massachusetts at galleries and museums including Silvermine Guild Artist Center in Connecticut and the Clark Gallery and Decordova Museum in Massachusetts. Pohanka was also a Massachusetts Artists Foundation fellowship finalist in 1987.

Bryan T. Lashway has two works on display: "Martin House" a working 20-inch high birdhouse, and "Balancing Figure" an abstract medium-scale steel sculpture.

"These two are older pieces. They're not narrative. Their roots are more in traditional art: These pieces are for visual enjoyment," Lashway said.

Graduate student Wendy Jackson has a sculpture on display composed of a series of large scale ceramic heads. Jackson describes in physical form the process of the psyche during times of change.

This is a two semester course taught by Emma Missouri and Ynez Wilkins, in which the first semester is dedicated to learning skills and anti-oppression training, while the second semester is dedicated to the writing and production of a play. Last year's production, entitled 'Everything You Always Knew About Racism, But Were Afraid To Say,' reached approximately two hundred people. In spite of the small audience, reactions were promising, and those who saw the production were described as "enthused and impressed". There are plans for the play to be repeated at some time during the upcoming Civility Week (October 21-28).

Ynez Wilkins, the teaching assistant for the class, stated that the students dealt with the problem of racism from a personal perspective: "They tried to identify real life situations which students here can relate to. The skits featured humor, discomfort, conflict, and some resolution - but, like real life, there was no happily ever after." She stated that the students were adamant about the fact that they did not want to preach, and this made it easier to reach the UMass population. She and Emma Missouri agreed that there has been a segment of the UMass student body which has expressed feelings that the issue of racism is being beaten into the ground, and that this particular program escaped falling into this mode because it included both educaion and entertainment.

Such work can be particularly effective because it involves students talking to students, and deals with how they feel, how racism affects them personally, and how they can change attitudes, both on campus and elsewhere. Emma Missouri says that the class tries to work with the idea of intervention in different contexts: "We look at it in one to one encounters, in remarks among groups of friends, and in larger, more dangerous situations. We don't have an idealist view; we try to be realistic."

This year's program will focus on racism, as did last year's. The instructors have said that the course might possibly concern itself with another issue of concern to the UMass community next year, but that they feel it is important for the class to focus on only one issue at a time, so that the members can devote their full energy to one specific topic.

The Theater with a Conscience group will be working in conjunction with Hillel on a program which may become a possible one-credit coloquium, dealing with many different social issues through improvisation. The first meeting for this group will be on Oct. 18, in a location to be disclosed later.

The class is offered through the Residential Academic Program, and receives its members from varied sources. Two hundred different departments, professors, individuals and groups receive mailings concerning the class; other entrants learn about the class from posters around campus. Wihout question, both of the class' teachers agree that their best advertisement comes from students who have already taken the class.

Primitives' LP: too short, but very sweet

By SCOTT HYMAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Primitives
Lovely
RCA label

At first glance, the Primitives seem nothing more than a guitarish Blondie since lead singer Tracey Tracey's vocals are strikingly simlar to Debbie Harry's. But a closer look reveals their new LP Lovely is a clever, stylish 60's-style album of guitar pop hooks.

The first single, "Crash" has already hit number one in Great Britain and is rapidly gaining U.S. airplay. Though the 'na-na-na' chorus is nothing original, it gives an example of the simplicity of the LP that makes it work.

The band consists of only three members: Steve, guitarist and bassist; Paul Tig, guitarist and drummer; and lead singer Tracey Tracey who is also listed as the tambourine player. (Apparently she is achieving status with tambourine greats Davey Jones and Stevie Nicks.)

The album contains 14 songs and is only 35 minutes long, which limits many songs to barely over two minutes. Though the simplicity is what helps the album, some tracks, such as "Dream Walk Baby" and the Beatlesque-psychedelic "Shadow" deserve a good five minutes. Sacrificing a couple of tracks in order to extened the better ones would have made a more enjoyable recording.

The Primitives only take one opportunity to slow down, on the beautiful "Ocean Blue." And one can only wonder what they could do if they gave a ballad a good six minutes.

With fourteen tracks, the shortness keeps the listener. Sixty minutes of guitar licks and na-na-na's can grow tiresome. Yet, the Primitives demonstrate that they have the ability to put out a successful LP of ten tracks raning three to four and a half minutes. Perhaps next time.

North Carolina's Mambo X plays the Iron Horse tomorrow night.

Japanese art comes to Amherst

By AMIE FINKELSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

From Japan we get Hundai, Toyota, Nikon and Wang. Now we have oragami, the art of paper folding.

Paper-folders in Amherst now have a place to learn and practice monthly at the Amherst School of Art, located in the center of North Amherst.

The club is instructed by long-time folder Michael Naughton and is open to members of all ages.

"Anyone can do it," said Michelle Bobroff who has been folding for six months. "You don't need any scissors or any glue. Just your hands."

The designs are wide-ranging. Some fold dollars bills into rings; others fold colored roses, flapping swans, stars of David, penguins,monkees, jewels, boxes, hats and dinosaurs. Some practice modular oragami, in which designs and shapes are constructed using more than one piece of paper.

Some pieces take five minutes; some take five hours. And some are original enough to be displayed outside the Museum of Natural History (a Christmas tree was displayed that had every ornament made from Oragami).

Headquartered in New York City, the Friends of Oragami National Society recognizes international paper folders, publishes a quarterly newsletter and conducts conferences.

For more information, call the Amherst School of Art.

Siouxsie's new sound and style succeed

By PETER PIASECKYJ
Collegian Correspondent

Siouxsie and the Banshees
Peek-A-Boo
Warner Bros. Label

Accordians! Violins! Cellos! No screeching guitars! Synthesized voice! Synthesized drums! Does this sound like Siouxsie and the Banshees? No? Well folks, it is.

The new album Peek-A-Boo is out with a new sound and new line-up. Of course the band has a new guitarist (they never seem to last), John Klein from Specimen, and musician virtuoso Martin McCarrack on cello, keyboards and accordian. Die-hard fans beware, for Siouxise has conjured up an album that is completely unexpected.

The album is carried mainly by her phenomenal voice. We're talking, her ability to reach bass tones to high bird-like notes. I mean that famous voice box of hers that never falters. Martin McCarrack is the prime mover of the majority of songs. Master Accordianist — who would have thought to include this instrument with the Banshees — is an unexpected plus. His handling the cello is like that of a screaming dervish (ie: "Burn-up").

Alright kids, lets get on with it! The disc's new sound, as I already mentioned, centers around all the musicians' talents. Unlike their previous albums where the music centered around the strange guitar noises, Siouxise and the Banshees experiment with synthesized instruments, cello, accordian, bells, and even Budgie wails on a harmonica in blues-like fashion on "Burn-up." Martin McCarrack digs into his bag of tricks to produce phantasmagoric sounds on "Carousel" and "Rawhide and Bloodybones." He also lends his majestic cello sounds on the "Killing Jar" and "Burn-up," which by the way is an intense new-punk country tune.

Even though John Klein does not have any bitchin' heavy metal guitar solos, his playing adds greatly to the mood of the songs. His talent is most audible on "Scarecrow," which is reminiscent of Siouxsie's Tinderbox.

All songs were writeen by Siouxsie or Severin. Severin's music echoes past albums, mostly Tinderbox. He seems to dwell on very dark, sad and morbid images ("In the blood of the twinkling sky/breathing in air drunk dry/there was once a time of rapture/all is lost . . . pale gleaming"). Siouxsie Sioux on the other hand has a few points to make. The title track and dance hit extravaganza "Peek-A-Boo" is an anti-pornographic song and "Ornaments of Gold" speaks out about her disbelief of her love.

Sioux's singing has matured greatly and coupled with her lyrics make her a singer/songwriter extraordaniare. Her sensual and seductive voice singing "adorable-rewardable you" will bewitch and install an urge to buy the album.

The moral of the story is: critical old fans beware! Non-critical fans will like it; I like it and so does my mother.

RELIEF ON THE WAY — Helicopters were busy in the hills wes of Vacaville, Calif. Monday while attempting to douse a brush fire that threatened a housing development.

Duke attacked by Bennett

BOSTON (AP) — Education Secretary William J. Bennett spent his last day in office Tuesday berating Michael Dukakis and contending Dukakis advisers "tend to look down their noses at the basic and instinctive patriotism of a lot of the American people."

Bennett also criticized Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor and Democratic presidential nominee, for vetoing legislation that would have penalized teachers who failed to lead their students in the Pledge of Allegiance.

But in criticizing the Dukakis veto, which followed a court opinion that the bill was unconstitutional, Bennett essentially agreed with Dukakis' position on the pledge — that while students should be encouraged to recite it before classes, any student who objects should not be required to do so.

Dukakis supporters tunred out in force to greet Bennett, terming him a hypocrite for criticizing Dukakis at a time when state spending on education has increased significantly and the Reagan administration had tried to eliminate the Education Department.

Bennett, appearing on behalf of Republican presidential nominee George Bush, said Dukakis had at best an average record on education and called his veto of the pledge bill "his most famous educational act."

Bennett said he would oppose such a law at the federal level because education is a state issue. But he said he supported state laws that required the pledge while excusing students who object on religious or other grounds. That is essentially Dukakis' stance except that Dukakis believes recitation of the pledge should be a voluntary tradition in schools while Bennett called for state laws that require recitation but do not penalize students who object.

"If you don't like the Pledge of Allegiance, you're going to hate the Declaration of Independence," Bennett said.

In a 1986 assessment, Bennett praised improvements in SAT scores that moved Massachusetts into the top third of states which administer the tests. He also credited the state for putting "in place important reforms to improve teacher quality through testing of new teachers, performance incentives and alternative certifications to attract the most qualified candidates into teaching."

After being read those comments Tuesday, Bennett said, "Check the record and see what belongs to Dukakis and what belongs to King," a reference to former Gov. Edward J. King. When told the teacher-quality legislation was part of a package Dukakis supported in 1985, Bennett said, "That may well be . . . the governor's record itself is not distinguished."

NEW EDUCATION SECRETARY — Vice President, George Bush, right, with President Ronald Reagan looking on, administers the oath to new Secretary of Education Dr. Lauro Cavazos, Tuesday at the White House.

SAT totals increase

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts seniors' scores on college entrance exams remained virtually unchanged this year, but state education officials say the steady totals reflect a decade of progress.

Results on the Scholastic Aptitutde Test taken by 1.1 million high school seniors showed the average scores dropped two points, to 428, on the verbal section and held steady at 476 on math. SATs are measured on a scale of 200 to 800 points for each position.

"If you look at it over a 10-year period, you'll find the scores have been going up mostly," Alan Hartman, director of research at the state education department, said Tuesday. "They may stabilize in one year or dip in one year, but the trend in the last 10 years is upward."

Nationally, scores for blacks and Hispanic students rose significantly, although they were still below the average of white students, the College Board said Monday in releasing the results.

In Massachusetts, black students represent about 4 percent of the overall test-takers, Hartman said. For 1988, math scores averaged 385 while verbal totals were 364. In comparison, white students scored 479 on the math portion and 438 on verbal.

The black student's scores in 1988 improved slightly over the 1987 totals of 381 in math and 358 in verbal.

Insurance among Duke's current campaign topics

By the Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis sought support among working people and their families today by proposing requirements that all Americans be covered by health insurance. Republican rival George Bush, emphasizing patriotic images, headed for a New Jersey flag factory.

Bush has said repeatedly in recent appearances that the flag manufacturer has thrived during the Reagan administration, contending that flag sales reflect a patriotic revival during the Republicans' White House tenure.

But Dukakis said Monday that "We don't need more speeches about the flag" and then unveiled his broad health-insurance proposal today.

The Massachusetts governor opened his campaign day with stops at a Houston medical center and two clinics, then was to spell out details of the health plan during a speech at Western Kentucky University in Bowling Green.

In advance, his campaign issued a statement saying that as president, Dukakis would propose legislation to require all employers to provide basic health plans for their workers - a plan aimed at providing benefits to about 22 million people who now have none.

The statement also said that Dukakis, if elected, would appoint a task force to report by March 30, 1989, on follow-up legislation to guarantee universal health coverage, thus extending benefits to every American, working or not. That follow-up plan for all workers presumably would require some federal financing, but the campaign was silent on the question.

Dr. David Blumenthal of Boston, Dukakis' health adviser, said 37 million to 40 million Americans have no health insurance.

Dukakis' emphasis on health care was part of an effort to take control of the political discussion rather than merely replying to allegations by Bush.

Continuing attacks he began last week on Dukakis' tenure as Massachusetts governor, Bush told a Chamber of Commer luncheon in Pennsylvania on Monday that the Democratic nominee had an "anti-business scheme."

He said business bankruptcies in Massachusetts rose 23.7 percent during the first six months of the year while the national rate had fallen 23.5 percent.

Bush also accused Dukakis of running a divisive campaign, "with a calculated strategy of emphasizing differences between rich and poor, between one region of the country and another."

Dukakis and running mate Lloyd Bentsen of Texas campaigned in Houston on Monday, where Dukakis said he would support government intervention if necessary to keep domestic oil wells operating.

Dukakis also said he would appoint Bentsen, who has made a congressional career of helping the oil industry, to a bipartisan energy summit.

Accusing Bush of changing his position on offshore drilling to suit his campaign needs — supporting it in Texas and opposing it in California — Dukakis told the audience of about 1,000:

"George Bush is like a coin. They just flip him. Sometimes he lands on his head. Sometimes he lands on his tail."

Just as Bush did in Pennsylvaina, Republican running mate Dan Qualye of Indiana attacked Dukakis' record on the Massachusetts economy during appearances in Knoxville, Tenn., and Casper, Wyo.

Charging that Dukakis "created and economic manacle" in Massachusetts, he said the state ranks 40th out of 50 states in total employment growth and 45th in manufacturing job growth. It actually lost 90,000 manufacturing jobs between June 1984 and January 1988, he said.

Quayle also went after Dukakis on what the Republicans contend is his election-year conversion to a tougher defense.

"In just a week his defense policy went from general confusion to General Patton," he said.

Women's cross country falls at Yale

By MEG QUINN
Collegian Correspondent

The good news is that the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team lost its first meet last Thursday at Yale.

Alright, maybe it's not your typical good news, but it certainly isn't bad news. After all, the teams that the women faced, Yale and Boston College, are two of the best in New England, and UMass was a clear underdog. But coach Julie LaFreniere said that the team looked great in ts first meet of the season.

Yale's top runners put on an impressive display by taking the first four spots simultaneously with a time of 18:09.8. B.C. followed with the next three finishers, and UMass' Shana Smith came in eighth in 19:19.1, followed by freshman Precious Hill in 19:21.6.

Coming in third for the Minutewomen was Laura LaVallee in 19:38. Her performance was praised by LaFreniere, with it being her first experience in a cross country meet.

Kathy Holt and Cathy Crocker were the next Minutewomen to cross the line, with Kristen Peers, Lynn Kirchoff and Amy St. Pierre rounding out the UMass top eight.

Looking ahead to the New England Championships in October, LaFreniere's goal is to get Smith and Hill in front of B.C.'s Heather Grimshaw, who finished seventh in this race.

"If my fifth runner can stay with B.C.'s fifth runner, and if we're aggressive enough, we can catch them in the New Englands. But B.C. is a good team. We can't take that away from them," LaFreniere said.

Overall, LaFreniere was pleased with the performance of her team. "It's tough to open the season against two New England powerhouses. But they got their feet wet. The have to learn to go out more aggressively, though. They held back a little, not knowing what to expect."

with only one match under their belts thus far, this will be difficult.

Greatest aspirations are held for the senior tandem of Brian Gable and Joe Desormiers, who as doubles partners last year almost captured the championship.

"Brian and Joe are sleepers in the tournament even after their performance last year. The Ivy League teams tend to look past our players and concentrate on teams they are more familiar with," Roberts said.

The tournament runs all weekend and with a little luck, maybe the team will still be around on Sunday for the finals.

The next meet will be this Saturday here against Springfield College. LaFreniere feels that Springfield is more reasonable competition.

"Yale and B.C. are out of our league at this point, but we're starting to establish a strong program. I think we've got more talent that Springfield," LaFreniere said.

Sox demolish Jays, 13-2

TORONTO (AP) — Wade Boggs became the first player this century to get 200 hits in six consecutive seasons as Roger Clemens and the Boston Red Sox trounced the Toronto Blue Jays, 13-2 Tuesday night and maintained their lead in the American League East.

Boston, in beating the Blue Jays for only the second time in nine tries this season, began the day with a five-game lead over Milwaukee, which played later at California. New York stayed 5½ games back with a victory over Baltimore while Toronto fell 8½ back.

The Red Sox have won 12 of their last 16. Mike Greenwell's two-run double highlighted a four-run first inning and Boston scored seven times in the fifth, including Jim Rice's three-run homer.

Clemens, 17-11, has won only twice in eight decisions since the end of July. The two-time Cy Young Award winner allowed six hits, struck out three and walked one in seven innings.

Boggs, charging to a fourth consecutive batting title and fifth in six years, went 3-for-3 and also drew two walks as he raised his average to .362. He lined a single in the first inning, got hit No. 200 on a grounder to left in the fourth and added another single in the seventh.

The All-Star third baseman also drew his 116th and 117th walks and joined Hall of Famer Lou Gehrig as the only players to get 200 hits and 100 walks in three consecutive seasons.

The Red Sox jumped ahead in the first inning against Jeff Musselman, 6-5. Greenwell's double and Ellis Burks' two-run single sparked the inning.

Then, with Clemens nursing a 4-1 lead, the Red Sox exploded for seven runs in the fifth against Musselman and relievers Todd Stottlemyre and Tony Castillo. Marty Barrett hit a two-run single, Greenwell drove in his 113th run wih a sacrifice fly, Carlos Quintana had an RBI single and Rice hit his 13th home run.

Rich Gedman completed the biggest scoring outburst against Toronto this season with a two-run homer, his ninth, against Doug Bair in the seventh.

Toronto scored in the second when Kelly Gruber walked with two out, stole second and came around on Nelson Liriano's single. In he sixth, George Bell doubled and later scored on Ernie Whitt's groundout.

Sox "happy" under Morgan

TORONTO (AP) — On a recent flight the Bosopn Red Sox joined in singing "Be happy" as a tape deck was played.

That, many players believe, is the key to the team's mid-season turnaround and drive for the American League East championship.

And Joe Morgan, with just over two months as a major league manager, is credited for the new atmosphere.

In his 37th year in baseball, most of it in the minors, Morgan is having fun and so are the hitters and pitchers.

"Everybody loves him," second baseman Marty Barrett said. "His laid back attitude is something else."

Promoted from third base coach when John McNamara was fired on July 14 after the All-Star Game, Morgan's enthusiasm became contagious immediately.

"Joe hasn't changed a bit except that now he's a little more open in his enthusiasm," Barrett said. "The way he goes about things it almost seems at times that we don't have a manager in the clubhouse."

Barrett emphasizes that it's Morgan's attitude for the club's relaxed, happy mood. He notes that Morgan knows the game, can be tough, has "great hunches and makes the moves."

Morgan, approaching 58, grew up in the Boston area, playing baseball and hockey in high school and college. And, with a $190,000 contract for next year, he's "just having" fun in the AL East race.

"I thought we were a lot better than a 43-42 club when I took over and maybe I've instilled a little more confidence in them," he says. "A manager can do only so much, though. It's up to the players to get the job done."

The Red Sox went 19-1 in their first 20 games under Morgan. And, heading into Tuesday night's game with the Toronto Blue Jays, they had an 85-65 season record, good for a 5½ game lead in the division race.

Barrett credits the managerial change for the Boston success.

"Mos of us liked Mac, but it seemed that in the first half of the year the whole topic of conversation seemed to be 'Is Mac going to go.'

"Then the decision was made and Joe's attitude took over. He said he was going to play everyone and that made for a happier clubhouse with everybody contributing."

UMass' Christine McEnroe saw a familiar face in the Boston College lineup: her sister, B.C. setter Jennifer McEnroe.

UMass vs B.C. is keeping it all in the family

Sometimes the outcome of a game goes further than a simple win or loss. There are bragging rights, exclusive to the victor, which begin to factor in. And when you share the same house, hometown, and even last name those rights become all that more important.

Now that the University of Massachusetts volleyball team beat Boston College 3 games to 1 last night in Totman Gymnasium, senior UMass outside hitter Christine McEnroe can look across the dinner table at her younger sister, B.C. freshman setter Jennifer McEnroe and say "I've still got the upper hand."

The two sisters went head-to-head for the first time on the collegiate level, in front of a very partisan crowd.

"It's very nerve racking," said Marie McEnroe, who along with six other family members traveled three hours from Rockville Center, N.Y., to see last night's match. "They are both playing very well."

What was like to play against an older sibling?

"It was nice, but I would like to have beaten her," Jennifer, who had 17 assists in 83 attempts, said.

The victory was the third straight for the Minutewomen in as many games.

"I think they (B.C.) played great. We were a little slow, especially in the beginning," Christine said.

Minutewomen remain unbeaten with three to one victory over BC

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

It was sloppy. It was perhaps too close. But it was also the University of Massachusetts volleyball team's third consecutive victory this season.

The Minutewomen (3-0) came from behind in three of four games to beat Boston College 16-14, 16-14, 13-15, 15-2 last night at the Totman Gymnasium.

Maybe coaches are inherently skeptical, but last night's game left a strange taste in both coaches mouths — kind of like a bad diet soda.

"I didn't think it should have been that close from the beginning," UMass coach Carol Ford said. Ford also said UMass wasn't as sharp as she had hoped.

"We weren't covering the hitters and we weren't real sharp in our positioning," she said.

B.C. coach Gary Gildea said, "It wasn't a clean match by any stretch. We made a lot of errors, a lot of their (UMass) points were made on our errors."

Middle blocker Barbara Meehan (13) and the Minutewomen flew above the net and by the Boston College Eagles last night in their third straight victory.

In the first game, the Minutewomen were hitting the ball solidly, but they couldn't break through the lanky Eagle defense. UMass' Barbara Meehan was rocketing kill attempts at B.C.'s back row but the Eagles stemmed the tide and took an early 5-0 lead.

UMass gathered its poise and came racing back to an 8-7 lead on the power of sophomore Nancy Sullivan's four kills. Meehan added three kills with a mix of power and finesse at the net. Seniors Julie Smith and Juliet Primer each chipped in two kills, and after a 14-14 tie, the Minutewomen took the the next two points to win the first game.

The second game was nearly a copy of the first. B.C. held leads of 5-4 and 8-6 before UMass regained control of their own destiny at 11-8. The Minutewomen jumped to 14-10, but couldn't deliver the knockout punch. After about eight opportunities to end the game cleanly, UMass again let the Eagles tie the score at 14.

Again, the Minutewomen came up with the big points when they needed them. They stole the second game with an identical score of the first game — 16-14.

"We weren't able to put them away," Gildea said.

Only four points seperated the two games but in actuality, UMass now held a commanding two game lead. And it was UMass that was presented with the put-away opportunity.

The Eagles blew to a 6-1 lead in the third game, however, and showed UMass that they weren't ready to go down just yet.

Charactaristically, UMass played catch-up. They put the pressure on B.C. at 10-10 and even took a 13-10 lead.

This time, however, B.C. was not intimidated. They won the next five points and handed the Minutewomen only their second lost game this season.

"We needed a team that was going to fight back," Ford said.

A team with fight was fine, but now the Eagles began to gain confidence. They had lost the first two games by only four points and had now just taken the third game, could they take the next one and force a fifth game.

Nah, wrong fairy tale.

In the fourth game B.C. turned into a pumpkin, and UMass dominated the game throughout.

The Minutewomen took a 6-0 lead, mostly through the strong serving of junior setter Karen Ferguson. And they continued to roll.

Primer pounded out three kills and she was accomponied by Smith and Sullivan who added two K's apiece in the final game.

At 7-2 UMass ahead, Sullivan jammed B.C. with five strong serves and UMass was in full control now at 12-2. Game, set, match - the Minutewomen ended B.C.'s night 15-2, for a 3 games to 1 victory.

Although 3-1 is a convincing win, UMass fans had some anxious moments in the first two games when UMass almost let the Eagles slip by.

"I'm not afraid of losing. The only thing I'm afraid of is if they (the team) don't play 100 percent," Ford said.

The Minutewomen travel to New York on Friday for a two-day tournament at Colgate University.

Men's soccer ready to battle Dartmouth today

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondant

After opening the season with four games in seven days on the familiar home turf of Upper Boyden field, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team (3-1) now hits the road for three consecutive visits to Ivy territory, beginning with today's date with the Big Green of Dartmouth (3:30 p.m.).

The UMass vans bound for Hanover, N.H. this afternoon will be packed with one healthy, happy, and optimistic soccer team, well prepared to take on the 2 ranked team in New England (according to the ISAA pre-season poll). UMass' injury list is short and sweet; freshman fullback Dan Lawrence will decide this morning whether a bruised knee, suffered in the waning moments of Sunday's 4-0 win over St. Joseph's, is ready for play. Rick Probstein and Andrew Schwartz will miss today's game in observance of Yom Kippur.

"We're basically a healthy team, ready to play," said UMass head coach Jeff Gettler. "We're really in a position, both mentally and preparation wise, to give Dartmouth a game."

Not only are the Minutemen physically fit, but they also happen to be playing some very good soccer. Sunday's effort was solid at both ends of the field, featuring the third defensive shutout in four games for UMass, and a four goal offensive outburst fueled by Louis Hollmeyer and Steve Cesnek, who notched two goals apiece. In preparation for the notoriously beefy Dartmouth defense, however, Gettler has been paying extra attention to his offensive troops in recent practices. "We're starting to build in better team work, and better ability to play as a group in the attacking third (of the soccer field).

"This will be a team that'll test our attack," continued Gettler, "They're very big and tall in the back."

The Big Green opened their season Saturday with a 3-1 victory over the University of Pennsylvania. Forward Andrew Shue scored a pair of goals and All-New England forward Valadica Stanojevic chipped in the third for Dartmouth, in a performance that impressed Gettler and assistant coach John Martin, who were on a scouting outing.

'Dartmouth beat Penn . . . in every phase of the game," said Gettler. "It's a good team, that brings out the best in us in past years."

In the four year history of the Dartmouth-UMass rivalry, in fact, the northern squad owns a 2-1-1 advantage. Last season in Amherst, the Big Green beat the Minutemen 3-2, on one of those late-in-the-game high altitude defensive miscues that plagued the Minutemen all season. With the addition of leaping Dan Lawrence, however, last year's Achilles heel has become a strength for the Minutemen.

Whether Lawrence will be able to play is to be determined, but the return of starting senior goalkeeper Sam Ginzburg is certain. With the exception of the one game winning breakaway goal allowed in the loss to Temple, Ginzburg has been spectacular. Ginzburg rested against St. Joes, as sophomore reserve Richard King turned in a substitute shutout performance.

With Schwartz unavailable, freshman Brett Anthony also stands to see time at forward.

Free Kicks: The Minutemen's "top 10 list' isn't so funny. Following 2 Dartmouth, UMass will visit the homes of Vermont, ranked fourth in the Northeast by the ISAA, and Yale, listed at 6.

Men's tennis match washed out; NE's next

By JIM CUMMINGS
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team was let down by the weather again yesterday, as its match with the University of Connecticut had to be postponed due to rain.

Coach Manny Roberts considers playing UConn one of the high points of the year and will surely reschedule the match for sometime after this week's New England Tournament.

The team is traveling to Harvard University on Thursday and though expectations are not exceptionally high, Roberts feels with a favorable draw the team can surprise some of the Eastern powers.

Harvard and Yale University are the top two teams in the nine-team tournament. Other schools planning to attend are Brown, Boston College, Providence College, Boston University Brandeis and Dartmouth.

Roberts decided to enter the New Englands because the format allows for more players to participate and will give the younger players, namely Paul Audet and Kevin Newman, good experience.

The tournament is usually dominated by the Ivy League schools and Roberts hopes his team will play well enough to finish ahead of teams like P.C. and B.U., but

Location of sub-station petitioned

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

A resident of Washington Tower in the Southwest Residential Area is waging war against the University of Masschusetts decision to open a police sub-station in the lobby of the dormitory Oct. 1.

Jeff Filipov, a 23-year-old student living on the 14th floor of the building, has begun soliciting signatures for a petition asking the station to be moved to a new "strategic location in Southwest."

Filipov opposes the sub-station because he does not think having a police station in a dorm is a good idea, he said. "I think police are sort of intimidating. Most of the people I talked to feel like it's a police state and not a residence hall."

He alone gathered about 500 signatures for the petition in about two hours yesterday, he said. Most of the people who signed were in the residence hall or the dining commons, he said.

Copies of the petition and the signatures will be sent to the Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, and Student Government Association co-Presidents-elect Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz.

Hilson spent yesterday afternoon at a State Labor Commission meeting and was unavailable for comment. But the director has told the Collegian the main reasons for creating the sub-station is to maintain an atmosphere of community safety and service and to assist students in developing crime-prevention habits while at school.

"This is just a small piece of the on-going program to help students understand public safety," Hilson said. "We want to improve our relations with the community and the less-than-positive perceptions of the police."

Filipov said he can understand putting a station in Southwest because of the many problems, such as assaults, that occur in the area. But he said, "Putting it in our tower makes it look like we [the residents of Washington] are a bunch of babies." He feels the station's opening will have a similar effect on the rest of Southwest, he said.

Filipov said the only staff member he talked to about his problems with the station was a resident assistant who echoed Hilson's reasons for having the station.

Another problem Filipov has with the facility is students were not warned before the room-selection period about the station's implementation, he said.

"If I had known, I would've lived somewhere else. I might even decide to move out, and so won't a lot of students who talked to me about this," he said.

According to a message on his petition, students were not involved in the decision to put the station in the tower.

Filipov said he does not think police stations should be in any residence halls for the same reasons he does not want them in his dorm.

He fears the UMass administration may put more substations in other residence halls if they deem this one a success, he said. In the three years he has been here he said he has seen the administration act this way on other occasions.

He cited how the alcohol policy was made stricter and stricter to the point where on-campus students now cannot drink, for all intents and purposes.

Pagans plan picket of seminar

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

Practicers of the ancient pagan religion will picket a fundamentalist-sponsored seminar on the occult, scheduled for Saturday, the co-president of the Pagan Students Organization said yesterday.

The seminar, featuring a West Virginia evangelist, is titled "The Occult Explosion — Why?" and is the first in a series planned by the Seventh Day Adventist Church, a Christian fundamentalist group.

"We are going to do a very simple peaceful picket. No arrests. No screaming," said Lew Stead, co-president of the pagan organization.

He said his group cleared their plan with Hadley police, and will carry signs on the median strip outside the Howard Johnson Motor Lodge, the site of the seminar, from 7 to 8 p.m. Saturday.

Stead said his club has been unfairly condemned by the fundamentalist church. A female member of the pagan group telephoned the Adventists to tell the pagans are not Satan-worshippers.

"She was told (by the Adventists) that we were indeed Satanists and we were probably responsible for most of the child abduction in the area," to use for ritual sacrifice, Stead said. "We just don't feel that this should go unchallenged. They're blatant lies, what they're saying about us."

Dwayne Toppenberg, pastor of the Adventist Church in Shelbourne Falls, said, "I don't know their organization. I don't know what they stand for."

Pagans, Stead said, "worship the old, pre-Christian deities. We are not a Satanic group. We do not believe in Satan. We don't have any figure of evil in our belief patterns."

The fundamentalists, on the other hand, do believe in Satan's existence, said Toppenberg.

"We believe there is a God and a devil and there is a conflict between the two of them, and we have a responsibility to encourage people as much as we can towards Christian principles," Toppenberg said.

Janet Toppenberg, the pastor's wife and a member of the church, said Americans do not realize Satan-worshippers practice here.

"You think of it more as being in Africa or down in New Guinea but he (Satan) is very busy here also," she said.

Nine picketers are confirmed for Saturday evening, Stead said.

"It's really hard to get people to come out and protest for a thing like this," he said. "They're telling people we murder children. That's outrageous. We do a little dancing, a little bit of singing, maybe jump over a fire or dance around a maypole. But we don't kill people."

Reagan tells House Speaker to refrain from voicing intelligence information publicly

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan yesterday accused House Speaker Jim Wright of talking indiscreetly about US intelligence secrets, but stopped short of denying Wright's claim that the administration used the CIA to stir up civil unrest in Nicaragua.

Reagan's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, also refused to confirm or deny Wright's statements. But Fitzwater said the Texas Democrat "has always been more than willing to take the positions" of the Marxist government headed by President Daniel Ortega.

Wright said Tuesday that Congress had received "clear testimony" that the administration sought to secretly undermine the Nicaraguan peace-making process, thus damaging long-term prospects for an accord between Ortega's ruling Sandinistas and the Contra rebels.

Wright told reporters the CIA has employed agents covertly in Nicaragua to organize and promote anti-government rallies and protests.

During a picture-taking session with the military joint chiefs of staff, Reagan said, "The reaction I have and I think it should fit the speaker also there is no way we should talk publicly about intelligence operations of any kind."

When questioned about Wright's assertions, the president said, "If I start going down that road, then I'm creating the same violation that he did."

Asked if he thought Wright had abused a process in which the executive branch shares secret intelligence information with selected congressional leaders, Reagan said, "I just say it's common sense to not discuss anything having to do with intelligence operations and so forth."

Chronicle-ing UMass

Chronicle, a Boston television news magazine, will dedicate a full show tonight to a profile on the University of Massachusetts.

A four member crew from the WCVB Channel 5 program visited UMass for three days last week, filming classes and interviewing students and administrators.

Chronicle host Andria Hall said the half-hour show will focus on the development of the University, touching briefly on racial incidents that occurred in recent years and the demonstrations that followed them.

"I'm impressed," Hall said of her stay at UMass. She visited a class on media criticism taught by journalism Professor Ralph Whitehead, as well as a lecture on polymer engineering.

The show will air at 7:30 p.m. It can be seen in Amherst via cable TV.

Explosion in South Africa injures eight

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A bomb exploded on a concrete trash bin at rush hour yesterday next to the main bus terminal for white commuters, injuring at least eight people.

The trash bin was a new type which was installed throughout the city last year to guard against bombs. The trash bin was intact after the explosion, which shattered windows of a four-story building and a car nearby.

Most of the injured were white women, but at least one black man was hurt. Most suffered leg and body cuts from glass fragments. Three were carried to ambulances.

Some bleeding women were treated on the sidewalk as buses continued to pull in and out of the outdoors terminal at Van Der Bijl Square in the the Johannesburg City Center after the 5:10 p.m. explosion.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the blast.

There have been more than 100 bombings in the country since the June 12, 1986 national state of emergency was declared.

Boy accused of demanding sex is awaiting a hearing

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — A first-grade boy who allegedly pulled a gun on two female classmates and demanded sex on the way home from school probably won't be allowed to return to his school, officials said.

The 7-year-old boy, who told investigators he brought the .38-caliber handgun from home, was suspended immediately after the Sept. 12 incident and awaits a hearing, said Bill Duncan, who is in charge of discipline for the Polk County school district.

"He did have a weapon at the school and he did threaten some girls with it," Duncan said. "We know for a fact that he had it because he admitted that he had it."

The child could be suspended for two years and, in any event, he probably will not return to his school, Duncan said.

"It's our job to protect the other 99 percent" of the students, he said.

Although the investigation is not complete, initial reports indicated that the boy demanded a sexual favor from the girls, Duncan said.

Don Woods, who supervises alternative education for the county, cautioned against drawing conclusions before a hearing is held.

"Sometimes the stories come out quite different," he said. "It might come out that it wasn't as serious as it sounded."

Polk County sheriff's spokeswoman Lynne Breidenbach said Tuesday that criminal charges are being examined by the state attorney's office.

DA mails letter to Fadel

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Hampshire County District Attorney's Office has sent a letter to Student Government Association Speaker Robert Fadel concerning a possible violation of Massachusetts open-meeting law.

According to Director of Public Rights Steve Samolewicz, of the district attorney's office, the letter asks Fadel a series of questions to determine whether the SGA is a governmental body as defined by state law.

Samolewicz said he needs the information because it is unclear whether the SGA is a governmental body as defined by state law. If the SGA is not a governmental body, it does not have to abide by the open-meeting law.

Fadel moved a session of the Coordinating Committee into executive session on Thursday, Sept. 8. This barred non-committee members from the meeting.

The move was apparently to discuss misuse of funds by Gil Penchina, the former Budgets Committee chairman. No minutes were taken during the session.

Penchina said he misused the funds to test the system and to see if it could be done. He has since resigned because of the incident.

The Collegian has asked for an investigation into the matter by Samolewicz because Fadel allegedly did not follow the proper procedure in moving into executive session, thus violating state law.

Collegian Editor in Chief Pedro Pereira, who asked for the investigation, said that since misuse of student monies were being discussed by the Coordinating Committee, the meeting should have been open to the public.

Samolewicz said the letter asks Fadel to detail how SGA members are elected, where funds used by the SGA come from, and how they are spent.

"We're looking for whether they're given X amount of dollars out of the state budget, if it flowed through them to the administration," Samolewicz said.

He said he is also looking at whether the SGA has the ability to tax and the authority to use money. Samolewicz said these are some of the criteria used to determine whether a body is considered a governmental body as defined by state law, and subject to the open meeting law.

Fadel would not comment on the matter, except to say he has not yet received the letter.

"I will cooperate to the fullest extent with the district attorney, and I will be seeking legal counsel," Fadel said.

Fadel said last week he does not feel the SGA is a governmental body.

Samolewicz said he is proceeding cautiously because a case like this has never been decided in a Massachusetts' court.

"We want to be certain all the facts are in," Samolewicz said. "We want to be certain they do or don't come under the open-meeting law. We'll probably get a lot more inquiries about this," Samolewicz said.

He said he has given Fadel until Oct. 14 to respond.

Asked what would happen if Fadel had violated the open-meeting law, Samolewicz said, "Normally they would be required to go back and do what they did in executive session in open session. In most instances, our office tries to educate [governmental bodies] to make sure they don't do it again."

"It might be a good idea for them to follow the open-meeting law in the future, since it is a good set of guidelines," Samolewicz said.

Health care promised

BOSTON (AP)— Democrat Michael Dukakis said yesterday the Reagan-Bush administration has given "a cold shoulder" to children and families, and he promised that if elected, no poor mother or child will go without essential health care.

Dukakis commented at Brigham & Women's Hospital in a speech that was his only public appearance of the day. He spent most of the day preparing for Sunday's first presidential debate with Republican rival George Bush.

He spent considerable time reading briefing-papers on issues likely to arise at the debate and he also has rented a meeting room at a downtown Boston hotel for practice sessions.

Preparations included a meeting yesterday with Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, and meetings were scheduled later in the week with Govs. Mario Cuomo of New York and Bill Clinton of Arkansas as well.

During the hospital tour, he was asked to talk about the debate and he quickly answered, "No." But as he walked away from reporters, he said he was "slowly getting ready."

Dukakis, as has been his practice in recent days, sprinkled criticism of Bush into his speech, ridiculing the vice president's stated commitment to the needy by listing what he said were cuts the Reagan administration has made to Medicaid and numerous other programs that assist poor families.

"When children and their families have needed a helping hand, Mr. Bush's administration has given them a cold shoulder," Dukakis said at the hospital, where he met with two new mothers and their babies. "When the time came to stand up for our children's health care needs, George Bush was nowhere to be found."

"But he was there when his administration conducted an annual assault on immunization programs," the Democratic presidential nominee said. "He was there when they cut nutrition supplements for pregnant women and their families. And he was there when they cut off Medicaid for 700,000 children."

ARTS/LIVING

LIVEWIRE

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Correspondent

New ideas are being tried, all in the name of Art in Amherst. Grave Goods, and Gidget Goes to Hell, are playing at the Carriage Shops tomorrow night at 5:00. It's outdoors, admission is free and there will be food and drink. People are encouraged to attend this event sponsored by Modrian and the Carriage shoppes. If this succeeeds, then we could be seeing more events like this before the cold weather sets.

A most bitchin' show tonight is at the Iron Horse, with special artist, Mambo-X. They've just finished recording another album with producer Mitch Easter, and now they're out on a mini-tour playing their 10,000 Maniacs guitars and Nigerian beat. Tickets are only $5 and you can count on it being nothing short of electric. Check out the Rude Girls on Friday night at the Iron Horse. They'll play two shows at 7 and 10 p.m. They've got a strong area following so tickets are $8 in advance. Windham Hill musician Liz Story plays the Horse on Sunday night.

For those attracted to the simple song structure and direct emotionalism of '60's punk and garage music, Plan 9 are playing at Sheehan's tonight. Their most successful album to date, Sea Hunt, consists of a variety of styles ranging from jazz and blues to psychedelia. Worth the mere $4.00 they're asking for at the door. Continuing on the trend of numbers in bands, Lucy 7, an awesome Zydeco band also plays tomorrow night at Sheehan's for a measily four bucks. Treat Her Right bust it out on Saturday. Sunday is the Tim Lee & Loveshake experience with fave opener, Ray Mason. Tickets are $3.00 for both night's shows. However if you believe in Monday night partying, Profesor Harp & the Showmen are only charging $2.00.

Sumlin can still sing the blues

Hubert Sumlin at Sheehan's
Monday night

A small but appreciative crowd was on hand Monday night for guitarist/vocalist Hubert Sumlin at Sheehans.

The former guitarist with the late Howlin' Wolf (Chester Burnett), Sumlin showed us why he is referred to as "the guitar players' guitar player." Every major guiarist from Jimmy Hendrix to Jimmy Page has cited him as being a major influence.

He arrived at Sheehan's following a night at the Lone Star Cafe in New York City. He has no manager, "is freelancing" and has no band of his own. But years of networking and notoriety allow him to call his own shots.

SGA talk show airs on WMUA

By ANDY LENHARDT
Collegian Correspondent

WMUA aired the first show of "SGA Today" Tuesday night with an interview with Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice by student senators Todd Lever and Valerie Vigoda.

"I'm really excited to be their first guest," Orefice said to the hosts before the show went on the air at 8:30 p.m.

The show began with brief biographies of the hosts and guest before getting onto discussing current issues in the SGA.

Lever and Vigoda asked Orefice questions about a multi-purpose convocation center to be built in the fall of 1990, and whether or not she encountered sexism on the Trustee Board.

"I notice subtle differences in the way they treat all the female trustees," Orefice answered, adding that she is also treated differently because she is the only student on the board.

Orefice said she issued a protested the funding for the convocation center by abstaining on the vote because "there are a hundred better things it could be used for. It's not the best use of money."

The center will be used for hockey games, basketball games and possibly concerts. Funding for the center will cost approximately $50 million. The cost for students will end up at $50 per semester from 1993 to 2014.

"SGA Today" airs every Tuesday night at 8:30. Tune in next week when UMass co-presidents Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff will be featured.

Plan 9 plays Sheehan's tonight with opening band The Sane.

Mazursky misses the mark with "Moon"

By STEVE PENHOLLOW
Collegian Correspondent

Moon Over Parador
Directed by Paul Mazursky
Showing at Hampshire 6

Paul Mazursky's new film "Moon Over Parador" has a lot going for it. It is funny, well acted, and often telling. Why, then does if fail so miserably?

There are a number of reasons. The main character, played by Richard Dreyfuss, is an out of work actor who is kidnapped and forced to portray a dead dictator. Dreyguss is good and often subtle in a decidedly unsubtle role. But he has played a version of this character before in Neil Simon's late 70's hit "the Goodbye Girl."

In "Goodbye," Dreyfuss also played a struggling actor and "Moon Over Parador" does not convey half as much about the modern art and conceits of acting as Simon and Dreyfuss did 10 years ago. "Moon" clearly wants to be more successful in this area.

Another problem is Sonia Braga. Braga is also very good in her role as the mistress of both the dead dictator and his replacement, yet as much as they try, Dreyfuss and Braga cannot seem to connect. Their supposedly fiery passion is never more than luke-warm. There is a hollow quality to all the romantic elements in this film. Dreyfuss' dreamy, poetic reminiscings about Parador and its seductiveness never carry any weight with the audience. It's like hearing about your neighbor's vacation with slides.

The film can't seem to make up its mind in the political and moral arenas, either. It appears we are supposed to be outraged by some of the nasty corrupted goings on in Parador, but Mazursky and his fellow screenwriter Leon Capentanos never decide how outraged. The unstable mix of light comedy and murky social commentary flattens things pretty quickly.

The final 20 minutes or so pass at an accelerated rate; loose ends are tied, everybody is made happy. Whatever successes the film has achieved before these 20 minutes are washed away into sitcom land. The film's happy ending is so curiously empty that the moviegoer is inclined to forget that he or she ever enjoyed it at all.

Screenwriters Mazursky and Capentanos have fashioned a rickety screenplay out of lots of good ideas and snappy lines. The only thing missing is a backbone. Mazursky's direction is detached as if he was afraid to touch anything, as if he believed the movie would make itself. It almost did.

■ Sumlin at Sheehan's

When Sumlin is on the east coast, he calls on Little Mike and the Tornados to back him up. Little Mike's band also back up people like Jimmie Rogers, Louis Myers and Roscoe Gordon. Also, look for Little Mike's new album "After Hours" with Pinetop Perkins, Muddy Waters' former pianist.

Playing a chordless Fender Strat allowed Sumlin the mobility to play out on the dance floor, out in the crowd and keep on playing while ordering drinks on the bar. Blues standards such as "Sitting on Top of the World," "Little Red Rooster," "Howlin' for My Darling," "Hoochie Coochie Man" and "Mojo" were all covered.

Those are songs his co-hort Howlin' Wolf either co-wrote or made famous. It was great to see Sumlin keeping those songs alive during shows and on his albums, including his latest release "Hubert Sumlin's Blues Party." Sumlin recounted several stories of his days with the Wolf, including the time they got into an argument over transportation from a show.

Sumlin, who is based in Chicago, played a 2 hour set and promised a return to the Valley again.

Sludge sights narrowed to five

BOSTON (AP) — The number of locations in greater Boston under consideration for a sludge treatment or disposal site has been narrowed to five, a sewer authority spokesman confirmed yesterday.

The Massachusetts Water Resources Authority staff is sending a report to the board that recommends dropping five other regional sites from consideration, MWRA spokesman Paul DiNatale told the Daily Transcript of Dedham.

The MWRA staff is presenting the list in the belief that the trimming will "assist both this agency and the regulatory agencies in directing attention to the more likely sites that are viable for both sludge processing and landfilling," DiNatale said in an interview with the Associated Press.

The spokesman said he could not confirm or deny that any particular site is on the short list. The five preferred sites will be made public on Monday, two days before the board votes on whether to accept the list, he said.

If the report is accepted, the elaborate siting process calls for further studies and public comment before two final, preferred sites are announced in December and then presented to the federal court overseeing Boston Harbor's clean-up in January.

"All along, we have felt we needed more than one site to accomplish both processing and landfilling," DiNatale said.

The MWRA is searching for on-land sites where it can deal with sludge, which is the end product of treating human waste. A final decision on sludge siting is expected in October, 1989.

After surveying 299 possible sites in eastern Massachusetts, the agency released a list of 12 likely locations last year, targeting them for further study. Two of those sites have since been dropped, one in Ashland because it was near an existing federal Superfund hazardous waste site and another in Bedford because the land is involved in expansion plans by Middlesex Community College.

Just my opinion

Loathing November 8

Just about a year ago in one of my columns I asked 'Does anyone get the feeling in 1988 we will be voting for the lesser of two evils' for the President of the United States of America? (nifty title, don'tcha think?)

Well I think my idea has come to light. We can have either George Bush or Michael Dukakis. (Now stop, don't make plane reservations for Australia yet.)

Peter Leon

When looking at a candidate there are many things to consider. One major factor is the running mate. The choice for Vice President is a serious one, the person who holds that office is a literal heartbeat away from the Presidency. This year both candidates for the Presidency have chosen much more conservative men for the second slot. Lloyd Bentsen, Dukakis' VP hopeful, has been a supporter of Contra aid. This is a direct contradiction to the Democratic platform. The Republicans have the same problem. Dan Quayle, Bush's choice, is anti-abortion. Bush though has said, quietly so, he believes if a women's life is in danger or she has been a victim of a crime, she has the right to an abortion. (Note: He said this on video tape.)

The fact is there has been a swing to conservatism. Have we or will we return to the 1950s — I think not. But it's obvious people aren't too keen on the idealist liberalism of the 1960s either. People are looking for something in the middle.

George Bush is definitely moderately conservative.

George was brought up in a wealthy family, and is quite used to being a legacy. A legacy is, for example, someone whose ancestor was in a fraternity and is now attempting to also get in. Remember Flounder in National Lampoon's Animal House? Anyway George hopes to continue the latest legacy . . . Ronnie.

The problem is George is pretending we have a healthy economy. If you agree you probably like having lots of overdue bills and credits cards that you went over your limit on. When I was a senior in high school the national debt stood at two trillion dollars. That looks like this: 2,000,000,000,000. Just try to picture how much that is. Now imagine it four years later, after too many years of multi-billion dollar deficits. The economy is more like a piece of Swiss cheese than anything.

Michael Dukakis is a wholeheartedly moderately liberal.

Mike also grew up in wealthy family, though not as wealthy as George, but that's all relative. Mike is a technocrat-Democrat. This means he is a man with liberal(-ish) ideals that wants to run the government in a more business(-ish) manner. Competence on the job is job one.

How come this campaign doesn't have substance or issues?..
It's been edited for television..
Mike Luckovich of the Times Picayune

Problems with Mike are as loud as problems with George. He claims he can do what he did for Massachusetts for the whole country. But what did he do? The Massachusetts miracle is a myth and a good deal of the money that made this state healthy came from the Federal Government. Having the Speaker of the House of Representatives was a big help. His retirement has also had a profound effect on the state's economy.

This score card does not look good. Hell, it's kind of scary in a way. Right now we have to determine which of these two tickets as a whole is more evil. I'm not completely sure yet.

But just in case, does anyone know a good travel agent?

Peter Leon is a Collegian columnist

What's the matter with me?

A new kind of team chemistry

As a huge sports fan, I've always admired athletes. They've been my heroes and role models ever since I saw my first baseball game in Montreal at the age of five.

But lately, there has been a trend that has caused me to look upon this breed with scorn, leaving a sour taste in my mouth. More and more, athletes are using drugs on a regular basis.

For starters, I hate drugs, period. Anything that empties your bank account and makes you paranoid doesn't seem to be a whole lot of fun. I know it is addictive, and that drug addiction is technically a disease, but that's no excuse.

Jim Clark

Anyway, it's shattering to look up to someone your whole life and then find out that what they're doing is immoral and illegal. Some athletes use drugs as a crutch, thinking they have to pop uppers or speed to get up for a big game, or take steroids to get the perfect physique that will make them invincible.

But there is a wide majority of athletes who go along drug and alcohol-free and have no problem performing at or above the level of the druggies. If they can do it, why can't everyone?

How long has this relationship between athletes and drugs existed? That's a difficult question to answer. Several years ago, drugs weren't a common problem in sports circles, so leagues and teams weren't strict about it.

But it did exist. Dock Ellis, a former pitcher for the Pittsburgh Pirates and New York Yankees, would later admit that he pitched a no-hitter in 1970 during a cocaine high. Terrific. If I were a batter and I knew that the pitcher out there was on something, I'd turn around and go home. The last thing I need is some wacked-out pitcher throwing a fastball right at my head.

Further down the road, the problem became more and more evident. Bill Lee, probably my favorite baseball player of all time, admitted to using marijuana in the newspapers, and then told all in his off-the-wall book, The Wrong Stuff. I'm still a giant fan of his, but knowing that tarnished my image of him.

Then, Steve Howe, a promising relief pitcher for the Los Angeles Dodgers, succumbed to the addiction of cocaine. Despite several tries to come back from his problems, he kept relapsing, and is now out of baseball. A potentially great career ruined.

But at least he's still alive. Surely you remember the sad stories of Len Bias and Don Rogers, two athletes who died within a week of each other from cocaine overdoses. At the time, I was hoping these unfortunate deaths would send a message to not only athletes, but all of mankind. Drugs are dangerous.

But I guess the message wasn't clear enough. This latest rash of suspensions in the National Football League leads me to believe that the problem will never be solved. And the way the league is handling it, with minimal 30 day suspensions, doesn't do much to deter potential users.

Some serious changes are needed in the system. I say mandatory one-year suspensions for all abusers, with permanent banishment for second offenders. Only then will I feel comfortable that drugs will eventually vanish from sports.

Baby-watch '88

Michael Dukakis has finally realized that family values are important to the American people, but as usual his solution to a family issue is full of expensive programs and empty on substance.

The Democrats' response to the child-care debate is to throw money and hope the problem will go away like a bad cold. The truth is children aren't problems, they're victims.

They're victims of the Democratic Party's master plan to create a government baby-sitter. The Dukakis proposal smacks of a big-brother philosophy found in the Soviet Union and 1984.

W. Greg Rothman

The real debate over child-care should not be who should watch the child, but who will decide who should watch the child. Parents must be the authority in deciding who takes care of their children. Dukakis disagrees. He believes parents are unqualified to make those choices.

The child care decision is sacred — a parent's right and in the best interest of the children. Such laws concerning child-care must not just favor working parents, but benefit those who choose to stay home and care for the children. Americans know the government has enough problems controlling itself. A government baby-sitter would be disastrous; our children deserve better. Politicians must remember the best system for raising children is the family.

The future of our country is resting on the hearts and minds of children. To neglect them by simply creating a bureaucratic baby-sitter is destructive. Parents must be given a legitimate choice in caring for their children. The government must be not take a position which makes taking care of children an impossible venture. The government can do this by creating incentives and making it possible for the mother and father to stay or work at home. Intra-family child-care by grandparent and other relatives should be encouraged by tax deductions.

Vice-President George Bush supports a bill introduced by Louisiana Congressman Clyde Holloway. The Holloway bill offers a child-care tax credit for parents with pre-school age children. This proposal gives parents something they deserve — a choice.

The current tax laws require all parents in the household be employed, thus discriminating against intact, single-income and poor families. The Dukakis party has pushed through expensive anti-family legislation under the facade of day care.

Over 100 child-care proposals have been introduced. The Dukakis proposal is an adoption to the anti-family ABC bill. The ABC bill even discriminates against grandmothers being used as baby-sitters. Dukakis's support of this proposal is testimony of his contempt for the family.

Child-care proposals do not need to cost any more money. Bush supports a $1,000 tax credit per child. The proposal puts no limit on the number of children eligible, and doesn't discriminate against poor families.

Parents have the responsibility to take care of children. The government must do all it can to assist the parents. Rhetoric from Dukakis isn't enough.

'M' is for mouth

MTV: leaving famine for thought

America. It's full of entertainment. With some of this entertainment, there is opportunity. Yet there was really no outlet for young people. No television station for them and them alone. Sure, there were shows, but they were stupid.

Years ago, I would have believed this was nation would do nothing about this dilemma. No more. Indeed, I truly believe this country is great, for young people are now given their own television station.

Yes, I believe some kindly souls gathered in a huge boardroom one day and said: "Hey, the teenagers of this country are discriminated against!"

Pamela McCarthy

So they created MTV.

It's the station that plays nothing but music videos. It used to be pretty decent; the bands were alternative but talented. The videos were actually very creative and expressed ideas in some interesting ways.

Then, MTV became top forty.

I have nothing against top forty music, it's just that I get sick to death of it. It's all I ever hear. Every single song sounds the same. Unfortunately for MTV, the videos fell victim to this also. I think there is a set formula for videos now. Make sure there is lots of sex, violence, smoke, posing, and women with teased hair. If you want the video in question to seem artsy, film it in black and white. That's it. "Entomology Today" sounds like a better deal as far as TV shows go.

Now that young people had their own show, they realized something was missing. I guess the board of directors did, too. I can see it: an enlightened soul cried out during one of the meetings: "Fellow money mongers, our task is not yet complete. We have created the ultimate T.V. station for our young people, and this is a good start. We have what we think they want — music videos, a couple of shows that will get their parents angry, a psuedo-news show, and quasi-documentaries. It is good, they feel they have their own private culture. Yet something is missing. In their eyes, adults have one thing they don't. (He paused for a moment.) Game shows!")

So now, the young people of the country have Remote Control, a T.V. trivia game show. Glory be. Hip, hip, hooray. I'm so excited. Remote Control is supposed to take place in the basement of the host's (Kevin Ober) house. The three contestants sit in chairs and choose their subject of trivia by switching "channels" with a remote control changer. "The Brady Physics Channel," "The Prime Time Channel," are among some of the trivia channels.

Of course, since the show is called "Remote Control" it's obvious that the questions are all about television. Since the show is on MTV, there is some music trivia questions with it also. You can "Sing along with Colin." Colin, an obnoxious psuedo-stud brought in for comic relief, sings a line of a song (horribly). Then, a contestant must sing the next line. Also, you can name videos. In a short amount of time, you must name the ten videos being shown. I really have to wonder about the people who are too good at this game. Do they have a life? Seriously, I'm a tad bit alarmed by this. Obviously, these people never did anything with their lives besides watch televison.

How else can you explain it? "What was the name of Marsha Brady's third boyfriend?"

"I KNOW THIS ONE!! He's —"

It's one thing to know fun facts and lots of trivia. Anyone who knows stupid little things about characters in a long obsolete television show is a sad, sad, case.

I have one word of advice to those people. Read a book.

Help fight racism by helping with Civility Day

October 27, 1988, will mark the second anniversary of the racist attack in Southwest, following the 1986 World Series. A lot has happened since then. The students of this campus have shown they are willing and able to fight against racism, and determined to defeat it.

There have been victories, but institutionalized racism is still very much alive at UMass, and therefore the work must continue. It is in this spirit that it is strongly urged that you and your group help organize and participate in Civility Day 1988: Confronting Racism.

Initiated by the Faculty Senate and involving all sectors of the UMass community, Civility Day 1988 will culminate a week-long series of different events, focusing on issues of racism and racial understanding. Some events being considered include: seminars and discussions; a dance; a faculty/student mixer; a concert; a major speaker; an election forum; films showings and more. All faculty members will be encouraged to devote time, in or out of class, to discussion of these issues. Participation of TAs is particularly important.

The goal of the week's activities will be to further the struggle against racism by involving as many members of the UMass community as possible in a wide variety of interesting, thought-provoking events.

Student participation is needed to plan the week's events. The success of the event is dependent upon our playing a leading role. Experience shows students are more enthusiastic about programs sponsored by their peers than those that come exclusively from the administration. It's important that every student group on campus to organize an event during the week, focusing on some aspect of racism, the struggle for equality or the cultural diversity of the US and our campus.

Unity among the undergraduates, graduates, faculty and staff is of the utmost importance to create a peaceful environment. There will be a mandatory meeting of leaders of undergraduate and graduate student organizations to discuss the events for Civility Day 1988. All students are welcomed. The meeting will take place in the 2nd floor lounge of the New Africa House on Thursday, Sept. 22 at 7 p.m.

Please feel free to give me a call or come by and visit, if you have any questions, ideas or anything else on your mind.

McCarthy's column naive. . .

Pamela McCarthy's column ("Here he is, Mr. Veep," Sept. 15) on Bush's selection of Dan Quayle as his running mate was naive. The notion that he was picked to close the 'gender gap' with his good looks in nothing more than a backward idea brought forth upon the public by Dan Rather and his liberal friends in the media.

Bush realized that Quayle's extensive expertise in military and foreign affairs would be a great asset to his administration. Few people have this degree of expertise (certainly not Dukakis or Bentsen). Quayle also represents one of Bush's main campaign themes — the importance of family values. He is an ardent family man, who not only believes, but practices these values.

George Bush will win the female vote due to 8.1 million more women working now than in 1981 and their enjoying an 11 percent increase in the real median income.

Quayle was selected for several reasons. The primary one was to court the conservative right. It is this faction of the Republican party that will contribute, through hard work and money, the most to a Republican victory in November. They must be represented on the ticket. What about Jack Kemp? Well, besides coming across as too arrogant, he does not possess the experience and knowledge in national security and foreign affairs that Bush requires in a Vice President.

Other reasons for his selection include his outstanding leadership in the Senate, his authorship of job training legislation, his representation of the future (age 41), his good campaigning and debating skills and his representation of the mid-western states.

Yes, Quayle's strong support among Indiana women was an added incentive for his selection. But they supported him because of his beliefs and values, not his good looks. Do you really believe the next President of the United States would select a Vice President because of his looks? Smarten up please.

. . .and Gottlieb's columns ludicrous

Calling Stuart Gottlieb a journalist is stretching the meaning of the word. Since I transferred here last semester, I have watched Gottlieb sink himself further and further into the depths of Geraldo Rivera journalism.

I've read several of his articles — he's had one on Jesse Jackson, the Young Communist League, the New Africa House takeover, and most recently, Julius Lester and South Africa's 'expulsion' from the Olympics ("South Africa's expulsion from Olympics unfair, Sept. 20).

In none of these articles does Gottlieb attempt to deal with any of the facts.

If one were to believe everything he wrote, all Communists would be 'stupid,' the participants in the New Africa House takeover would all be 'radical,' and anyone with any compassion for the South African blacks would just be reacting because it was the 'chic' thing to do.

These views at worst are ludicrous, and at best are unsubstantiated. However, he goes even further in his most recent article by trying to compare South Africa's legalized form of racism with the Iran/Iraq war. To compare chemical warfare with a system of government approved oppression on the majority shows a gap in Gottlieb's thinking.

He is an offensive writer with racist undertones who insults me and anyone else accustomed to journalism with a certain moral and ethical standard.

Fight ABC's corporate selfishness

As a former UMass student, I ask for your sincere opposition to the heavily-financed corporate attack by the Association of Builders/Contractors Inc. (ABC) to repeal the prevailing wage law protection covering Massachusetts construction workers.

ABC's greed and lack of respect for the people in Massachusetts distresses me despite the fact I now live 5,000 miles away in Alaska. I will never forget the rights of hard-working construction workers in Massachusetts or any state.

And I will also never forget it was at UMass where I made a personal commitment to work in Labor Law for the rights of American workers.

This drive to repeal the wage protection law is orchestrated by the right-wing ABC under the guise of the outrageous title, "Fair Wage Committee." Their sheer dishonesty and greed drip off this propaganda. In contrast, factually-based national studies have demonstrated that such wage protections not only preserve a reasonable standard of living for construction workers in jobs faced with seasonal employment, but that this wage law also protects responsible businesses in the competitive bidding procedure.

I ask concerned students to take a stand against ABC's attack on workers' wage protection by voting no against the ABC wage law repeal initiative on the November ballot.

Olympics' opening ceremonies embarassing

If you saw the opening ceremonies for the Olympic games on television Friday night I hope you were as embarrassed as I was. The United States team displayed uncommon discourtesy in their attempt to be recognized.

Members of the fencing team were carrying a large sheet with the NBC logo on it. Most of the athletes were waving small American flags (the kind you can buy at souvenir shops) which, according to Bryant Gumbel, was in violation of the opening ceremony rules. The athletes were spread out in a casual display that infringed on the processions of other countries' teams and were generally disrespectful.

These athletes are supposed to represent America's best. They are emissaries from our country to the rest of the world. Unfortunately, they did not carry themselves in such a manner, but instead displayed behavior best described as childish.

It is disheartening to think other countries use such scenes as these as an interpretation of America's attitude toward them.

I'm angry Americans were represented in such a manner. I do not want other nations' peoples to think I don't respect them because a group of Americans does not have the self-respect and foresight to consider the outcome of their actions.

Collegian needs more election coverage

There was something missing from the Collegian this week, coverage of the state primary. The Collegian should publish a profile of the candidates who are running for offices in Amherst. There are many students registered to vote in Amherst.

This wasn't done in March, either. When I went to vote then the only names I knew were the presidential candidates. There were many other people running for seats in Amherst, some even for Congress. I didn't know a thing about these people. If students had had a profile of these candidates they too would have been able to make more educated votes.

I hope in November the Collegian will print a profile explaining what the candidates stand for in other races. After all, we live in Amherst for a good part of the year — these people will have an effect on our lives. In these profiles I also hope to see descriptions of the referendums on the ballot. Referendums can be very serious and we need to know what we might be adding or taking away from our system.

As a newspaper informing the public of important events, it is the Collegian's responsibility to inform the public about the election.

Rack and Roll Sale

The future is Here! Now! At Adirondack Music!! Having that buried alive feeling? Swamped by audio clutter? Well friends, those lunatics at Adirondack Music are here to help you alleviate your audio dilemmas, with the infamous Adirondack Rack and Roll Sale!! Come in and check out the spectacular savings on audio racks, car stereos and more....

Store all your equipment in a lusciously luxurious, super high quality Mylex rack!! These beauties are on sale for nearly halfprice! The Mylex model 490, our usual $99.95, now only $59.95! The model 901, our usual $149.95, ridiculously priced at only $99.95!

Madness Strikes Again!

Yes folks, once again our fearless leader here at Adirondack Music seems to have misplaced his perception of reality and has lowered prices beyond the realm of the peace and tranquility of a normal audio store! Granted, our regular price of $279.95 for the Concord HPL–518 car deck was already a steal for a top quality deck with Dolby NR, CD switch, and 12 Watts per channel of incredibly pure sound, but the lunatic has gone and dropped the price to only $199.95! Now if that's not an indication that he's lost his sanity, dig this deal: the Concord CX70 top of the line, $750 unit which prompted Stereo Review to comment "The Concord CX70 proved to be one of the best car stereo receivers we have tested!", are you ready for this, only $500! You can certainly take advantage of his momentary lapse into a separate reality, especially if you have noisy neighbors who don't like "your" music, just pick up on this deal: a pair of Cerwin Vega D7's, $870 worth of the meanest, loudest, hardest rockin' speakers money can buy, for the insane price of only $499.95 the pair! If that's not crazy enough, try a pair of EPI Stat 450's, esoteric, super sound, premium quality $750 speakers for the outrageous price of only $300 the pair! I think I'm going to faint... Do I have to go on? Ok, he signs the paychecks so I gotta tell ya. He wants to give away, as in FREE, a pair of Blaupunkt TL1680 speakers to anyone that buys a Panasonic CQE290 digital AM/FM cassette car deck for only $149.95! Sometimes I wonder if he's got all his marbles. Now I know that the original dealer cost of the EPI VCS2000 audio/video rack with built in, 3 way, super sounding speakers was about $200, with a suggested retail of $399.95, but does he want us to make money on this one? No, no, no! We have to sell them for only $149.95! I think he must have fallen off his rockin' horse and landed on his head! Really, all I wanted to do when I grew up was work at a normal stereo store... Oh, and one last thing, TEAC W300 dubbing cassette decks are only $139.95!

Ex-PTL man: Bakker had homosexual relation

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A former PTL official said he told a federal grand jury that he had sex with former PTL leader Jim Bakker, but Bakker has denied the allegation in court.

Jay Babcock, the former director of creative television for the troubled ministry, commented Tuesday after being asked questions by the grand jury apparently designed to determine whether PTL money was paid for sexual favors.

Babcock was the first man to publicly acknowledge telling the grand jury of a sexual encounter with Bakker.

Calls by the Associated Press to Bakker's phone number in Fort Mill, S.C., went unanswered Tuesday night.

In August, Bakker denied under oath that he ever had a homosexual relationship.

Told by a reporter Tuesday outside the federal courthouse Bakker had denied ever having a homosexual relationship with anyone, Babcock replied 'I'm saying he's a liar.'' Babcock told reporters Monday that he expected to be questioned by prosecutors about "whether I had sex with the boss."

On Tuesday, after testifying much of the afternoon, Babcock was asked by a reporter, "What did you say regarding sex with Jim Bakker?"

His response was "I commented on that 'yes, it happened a long time ago '' ".

Babcock said prosecutors also wanted to know about the circumstances surrounding that encounter. "I'm not willing to talk about those," he told reporters.

Babcock also told reporters that prosecutors asked him whether Bakker and his personal aide, David Taggart, had a sexual relationship.

"I have no first-hand knowledge of that," Babcock said.

PTL records show that Taggart drew more than $620,000 from PTL in a 15 month period that ended in March 1987 — the same month Bakker resigned as PTL's president. He left after allegations that he had a 1980 sexual encounter with Jessica Hahn and that money had been paid to silence her received a lot of publicity.

Bakker and his top aides are under investigation for possible mail, wire and tax fraud.

The grand jury probe, now in its second year, is focusing on whether Bakker and other ministry leaders violated federal laws by raising money through the mail or on television for one purpose and then spending it for another.

Tunnel construction to limit use of North Shore road to one lane

BOSTON (AP) — A key roadway linking the North Shore to downtown Boston will be narrowed to one lane for the next four years, state officials announced yesterday.

A half-mile stretch of roadway connecting the Mystic Tobin Bridge to the Central Artery in Boston will be restricted to one lane 24 hours a day beginning after rush hour on Oct. 12, state Department of Public Works officials said yesterday.

The move will clear space for the four-year, $300 million job of building a new underground link between the bridge and the artery. When the project is finished, a new six-lane tunnel will pass through City Square in the Charlestown section of Boston.

Instead of rusting elevated roadways, residents of Charlestown will have a waterfront park topping the tunnel. Also, an S-curve that is considered one of the most dangerous in the state will be replaced by a straighter underground roadway.

In the meantime, though, officials are working to prevent mammoth traffic jams from developing on the bridge, which forms the primary link between Boston and dozens of commuters to the northeast.

"We are certainly anticipating some delays, but if commuters use alternate routes, if they carpool, and if they vanpool, (the delays) will be minimized," said DPW Commissioner Jane F. Garvey.

In addition to a number of alternate routes and alternate transportation modes being promoted by the state, Garvey offered another alternative to those who must drive: "If you have to be somewhere, start earlier or leave later," she said.

Drivers are urged to take Route 128 to Route 93 South or take Route 1 South to Route 16 to Route 28 into Boston. On the latter route, according to project coordinator Paul Carr, extra Metropolitan police patrols will be posted at each intersection to help smooth the flow of traffic.

The narrowed lane will begin about 2,000 feet beyond the current toll plaza on the top or Boston-bound level of the bridge. It will extend for about 3,200 feet to the merge with the Central Artery. In addition, the lane connecting the bridge to Interstate 93 North will be eliminated entirely.

The link between the bridge and the artery has long been a Boston traffic bottleneck. Since 1973, traffic on the approach to the artery on Route 1 South has been reduced to one lane during the morning rush hour. The idea was to reduce the volume trying to squeeze onto the Central Artery, Carr said.

But under the new configuration during the construction project, a much longer section of roadway will be reduced to one lane and the lane restriction will be in effect around the clock.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Helen Curtis Cole, center, receives recognition from Delphine Quarles, to her left, Margaret Tuttle, to her right, and members of the planning committee for the Helen Curtis Commemorative Garden.

Garden to honor former UMass Dean of Women

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Helen Curtis Cole, who served as the first and only Dean of Women from 1945 to 1973, will be honored with a commemorative garden at the University of Massachusetts next fall.

Cole, who lives in North Amherst, said she was overwhelmed and moved to be related to a project which will do so much to enrich the college campus.

"It's good to know that students will be stimulated to do creative work and that faculty from various departments and the Physical Plant will cooperate to encourage and assist them," she said.

The project was proposed by an Alumni Planning Committee "because (Cole) has contributed so much to this campus and the quality of life for women students," said Delphine Quarles, activities coordinator in the Student Activities Office and a member of the planning committee.

"We thought of a flower garden because it will be a place people can enjoy and relax in. She (Cole) has a wonderful talent for putting people at ease," said Quarles.

William F. Field, dean of students, worked closely with Cole and describes her as "a fascinating person who was both determined and unbending in her quest to increase the opportunities for women in higher education.

"She was one of the people that opened the doors to the highest level of education for women and then she not only encouraged them, she pushed them," Field said. "She stayed in touch with alumni and encouraged graduate study.

"She came here at a time when the role of women on this campus was very tenuous and precarious," said Field.

"I came here right after the second world war," said Cole. "There were very few women, this was primarily a men's institution.

"In 1946 only 100 women were admitted (to the university)," said Cole. "The GI Bill was really a scholarship fund for veterans, almost all of whom were men, so the college accepted thousands of men."

"You really had to be outstanding to make it," said Field. "For many years women had to have much higher grades and SAT scores than men. Helen was a very persistent and dedicated person in terms of increasing those opportunities."

To open those doors, Cole helped design and get funding for new dormitories, convinced departments to accept women, and developed new scholarship funds for women.

"There was a big push for athletic scholarships," said Cole, "but of course those were for men.

"We got quite a few groups interested in giving money for women," said Cole. The Advisory Council for Women, Massachusetts Garden Clubs, and many other groups and individuals responded to Cole's requests.

"When she was out to do something she thought was right, she was as tough as steel," said Field.

To provide more housing, Cole worked with the Alumni Building Association and assisted architects in designing social rooms, lounges, recreation rooms and kitchenettes to provide women with greater opportunities to build a community.

Under her guidance, a women's residential area was developed which came to be referred to as "Dean Helen's quad." Ten new residence halls and a Physical Education Building for Women were also constructed.

'We were able to increase enrollment as the university got more buildings and more faculty," Cole said. But, she said, there were still many individual departments who resisted the admission of women.

"I believed that women should have the opportunity to major in any field they chose," said Cole. "The engineering department resisted but we finally convinced them to take some women applicants and those women did so well they agreed to take others. The same thing happened in the School of Business."

The Helen Curtis Cole Commemorative Garden will be located between the Old Chapel and Goodell Building.

"Because we are implementing art it is a public art project and not just a garden or landscape project," said Marjorie Tuttle, program director of the arts council.

Under the guidance of four faculty project advisors a competition will be held among students in art and landscape planning, said Tuttle. Students will get credit for participating and may ultimately receive an honorarium.

"We envision this as a $40,000 project," said Tuttle, "but that may change as we get into the design. The Physical Plant has generously donated monies toward the project and we anticipate raising the balance from the Alumni Association."

Construction is targeted for next summer, Tuttle said, and the dedication should occur in the fall.

Petition mystery unravels

Originator still seeking support for EWC

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The originator of a mysterious petition circulating in support of the Everywoman's Center in light of budget turmoil and a realignment proposal has agreed to clearly state in writing that she alone is responsible for its existence.

Nancy Bishop, a re-entry student and member of the Women's Administration and General Educational Support program (WAGES), said she started circulating the petition on September 15 in response to cutbacks that could eliminate many of the center's services.

EWC Director Carol Wallace said Bishop contacted her and agreed to circulate the petition with her signature and a brief explanation of her intent. "I told Nancy I thought it would be important that she identify that she was a student," she said.

A letter written and signed by Wallace will remain in the petition for information purposes. "My feeling is that it's an appropriate action for a student to take. I appreciate the support of the community in any way the community feels it can show support," Wallace said.

Bishop said she was distressed by the potential for elimination of the WAGES program at EWC, which helps older, non-traditional students who return to school.

"It deeply touches me and concerns me that there a lot of women like me who are non-traditional and/or low income. This is a way for them to get into the university," she said.

"I'm very sad because that's how I got into this school and I think it's going to hurt a lot of women. It's going to hurt all women of color, too, because they don't have a really good support system within the university," Bishop said.

Wallace said the WAGES program will be eliminated after this semester to help absorb budget cuts.

"We were limited to the positions where we had vacancies—counseling, WAGES, and public relations and outreach. We're delaying filling the counseling and public relations position until next semester," she said.

Wallace said WAGES coordinator Mercedes Del Valle will become a full-time staff person to assist with referrals. Her services are limited and will last until the WAGES program is discontinued.

"Mercedes will help bridge the gap until we can offer counseling again. It's painful and stressful. We're turning away women who, in some cases, have limited options," Wallace said.

EWC offers counseling referrals this semester, but will not have any direct services until spring semester, she said.

Israeli athletes hold out to observe Yom Kippur

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Israeli athletes abstained from food and competition yesterday in observance of Yom Kippur, the holiest day of the Jewish calendar which for the first time coincides with the Olympics.

However, two Israeli yachtsmen defied the team ban on competition and sailed out of Pusan in the 470 class to come in ninth. It was not known whether team officials would discipline the two.

In Seoul, athletes and team officials took part in religious services conducted at the Olympic Village on Tuesday night and yesterday, heavily guarded by a Korean anti-terrorist squad and Israeli security men.

Security for the Israelis is particularly tight, even by the tough security standards of this Olympics. At the 1972 Munich Games, 11 Israeli athletes were killed by Palestinian terrorists.

When the dates for the Seoul games were set, Israeli sports officials knew it would coincide with Yom Kippur, Hebrew for Day of Atonement, when Jews fast and pray to atone for their sins. All activity in Israel, where church and state are inseparably twined, grinds to a halt on Yom Kippur and any Israeli representing the country overseas must comply.

"If our athletes want to stay in their rooms and eat, it's up to them. But they represent Israel and they cannot compete," said the head of the Israeli delegation, Uri Afek.

He said Israel had written the Seoul organizers three and a-half years ago saying its athletes would be out of competition on Sept. 21 and asking for scheduling adjustments where possible.

"They did what they could and we're grateful," said Afek.

Nonetheless, some of the Israelis had to miss competition or stay home altogether. For Israel, which has never won an Olympic gold and is generally weak in sports, the scheduling problems hurt.

The only Israeli woman gymnast, Revital Sharon, failed to show up for competition because her team performed yesterday morning. Sharon, 17, was hoping to earn enough points to qualify for the individual gymnastics events.

Yaroslava Matlokhova of Czechoslovakia said the competition's technical committee had agreed to an Israeli request that Sharon be allowed to compete after 7 p.m., when Yom Kippur is over.

However, Korean organizers objected to such a change, saying the schedule had been fixed long ago and could not be changed at short notice, according to the Czechoslovak official.

Several fencers, among them fourth-ranked in the world Yehuda Karmi, couldn't come to Seoul because the men's singles fell yesterday.

Club Sports Roundup

The University of Massachusetts men's volleyball club will hold a meeting for anyone interested in playing and/or coaching volleyball. The meeting will be Wednesday, Sept. 28 at 8 p.m. in 249 Boyden.

The Minutemen are coming off their most successful season in the club's short history. UMass, the number one ranked club team in the East, finished fifth at the Intercollegiate Club Championships last year, behind Brigham Young University, the University of California-Berkeley, U-Cal-Davis and San Jose State.

The Minutemen finished their regular season with a 26-5 mark with all five of their losses coming at the hands of NCAA Top 20 teams.

Editor's Note: The Collegian welcomes all UMass club sports to submit information for the Club Sports Roundup column, which will run weekly as space permits.

The Collegian may edit when necessary, and their is no guarantee the colum or information will run every week.

Many people connected with club and non-varsity sports feel they don't get enough coverage in the Collegian, so this is your chance.

Hopefully, enough people will respond to make this feature worthwhile.

■ field hockey faces Providence

With the way the UMass offense has been going in the last three games, it may not be that hard to figure out O'Gorman.

The Minutewomen have outscored their opponents 12-1 in three games. Junior Kathy DeAngelis has led the way with four goals and one assist.

But that might not necessarily be very healthy for UMass. They have yet to be put into a pressure situation. How they will respond in a tight game remains to be seen.

"I don't know if we haven't been tested or that we've not allowed our opponents to test us," Hixon said. "Its a fine line. I'm not concerned with being tested or not tested, I'm just concerned with playing."

Last year the Minutewomen were in the exact reverse situation. It was only five games into the season and PC came to Amherst as the No. 1 team in New England.

"Polls come and go, they change every week," Hixon said. "I think that people are looking for us to be strong this year and I think so far we've proven that we certainly have some strengths, offensively and defensively. Our mentality is just to go day by day."

Men's soccer beaten by Dartmouth, 2-0

Minutemen fall short against No. 2 team in New England

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondant

They travelled an awful long way to come up short.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team opened a stretch of three consecutive road games with a 2-0 loss to the Big Green of Dartmouth, yesterday in Hanover, N.H. The loss dropped the UMass season record to 3-2 (1-1 in the Atlantic 10), while Dartmouth improved to 2-0.

Dartmouth's ability to play the ball up in the air paid off at both ends of the field yesterday. Junior John Milne spent most of the afternoon airborne on defense, knocking down UMass' attempts to cross the ball, and generally frustrating the Minuteman offense. "They were very strong in the air," said Minuteman assistant coach John Martin. "Milne controlled the ball."

Peter McEvoy and the Minutemen were beaten by Dartmouth, 2-0 yesterday afternoon in Hanover, N.H.

Dartmouth had things their way on offense as well. With 32:48 elapsed in the contest, Dartmouth's Andrew Shue lobbed a long pass downfield, where midfielder Richie Graham beat the backpeddling UMass defense to the ball. Graham flipped a shot over the head of sliding UMass goalie Sam Ginzburg, good for a 1-0 Dartmouth advantage.

"It was kind of a breakaway situation," described Martin, "where Graham and the defense were in a foot race."

The Minutemen threatened to tie the score just before the half, as Louis Hollmeyer broke free inside the goal line. Hollmeyer's drive was plugged by Dartmouth goalkeeper Gregg Lomkau, preserving the narrow lead through intermission.

Dartmouth stretched the lead to 2-0, with just 13:53 shaved off the second half clock. Milne, up from the sweeper position, picked up a feed from junior forward Ken Himmelman and powered the ball past the partially screened Ginzburg. The quick strike originated as a corner kick, which was allowed to drop inside the UMass penalty box. In the resulting scramble, Himmelman was able to find Milne, who was trailing the play.

Through the rest of the contest the Dartmouth defense, which has yielded just one goal this season, was tested only occasionaly by the streaky UMass attack. Of the 15 shots the Minutemen steered on goal, only four forced the Dartmouth goalkeeper into making a save. Hollmeyer's near miss and a Steve Cesnek solo fast break were the closest the Minutemen could come to snapping Dartmouth's defensive strangle hold.

Dartmouth, meanwhile, was busy pounding 26 shots at the UMass goal.

"We had our chances," said Martin. "Dartmouth is a very strong team, they played well."

The Big Green, in fact, entered the contest as the No. 2 ranked collegiate men's soccer program in New England, according to the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America pre-season poll. The Minutemen, overlooked in the poll, entered the contest with a 2-0 record against New England opponents, and high hopes that a strong showing against Dartmouth would land their names high on the Marquee.

"This was a chance to prove ourselves against the Northeast," commented Martin. "We came out on the short end."

The Minutemen will get a second chance to show their worth Saturday, at No. 4 ranked Vermont -- a game that now appears, in the words of coach Martin, "very important."

Field hockey faces PC; revenge on Friars' minds

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

A lot has been done to boost the egos of the University of Massachusetts field hockey team in the last few days.

After running all over Michigan for a 5-0 win on Sunday, the Minutewomen were handed the No. 1 ranking in New England on Monday.

And on Tuesday, UMass, which now boasts a 3-0 record, was ranked No. 5 in the country by the National Collegiate Athletic Association Poll.

But both of those rankings can be taken away in a matter of a week when the next poll is taken. Providence College is one team that is waiting to knock the Minutewomen off their perch.

The Friars will be waiting on their home field, and their incentive is not just to move up from the No. 6 ranking in New England that they currently hold.

Providence, 3-0-2, was one win away from the Final Four Championships last season when UMass shocked them with a 4-1 beating in the New England Regional Championship of the NCAA playoffs.

Providence had been the No. 1 seed in that region and had beaten the Minutewomen 2-0 at UMass during the regular season. UMass had to play the University of New Hampshire the day before in the opening round of the tourney, while PC was resting, having earned a bye for being the No. 1 team in New England.

Everything seemed all too perfect for the Friars who showed up at the UMass-UNH game to scout its competition. They seemed confident after UMass won the game that they would walk away with a victory on the following day.

But they didn't, and now they have the Minutewomen on the confines of their own field today for a 3:30 contest. PC has not forgotten what happened last year.

Revenge with a capital R is the theme of this game.

"I think we have to watch out that Providence doesn't use it as a motivator," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "I think after having the season that they had, and then losing to us in the finals like that, I think their probably thinking about it and want a payback."

Something is wrong with PC this year. Last year it was the No. 3 team in all the land but this year, with most of the same supporting cast back, it is off to a slow start.

Its ties were with the University of Connecticut and Villanova University. UConn is not even ranked in the top seven teams in New England and Villanova has not traditionally been a powerhouse in field hockey.

"They are a very difficult team to figure out," Hixon said. "I don't know who's playing or who's doing what. With the people I know they have there, I expect a contest."

One of the people they have there that will make it a contest, if she's on, is goaltender Sandra O'Gorman.

"They're goaltender is excellent and we have to find out a solution to beat her," Hixon said. "That's what we did last year. She was a regional All-American. She was the best goalie in New England last year without a doubt."

Women's soccer visits Adelphi this afternoon

Minutewomen still fourth in the nation

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team takes it to the road to today in its quest to remain unbeaten on the season, traveling to Garden City, NY to face Adelphi University.

History would dictate that this will be a win for the Minutewomen. In their last six meetings dating back to 1982, the Minutewomen have gotten the best of the Panthers all six times.

And in that span, only once, in 1983, did UMass score less than five goals. In that game, the Minutewomen edged Adelphi, 2-1, but they have scored five goals in each of the last three games.

This will be the first time that the Minutewomen face Adelphi with Jim Rudy as coach. But the team, 3-0 on this young season, has looked strong so far.

The Minutewomen remain fourth in the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America national Division I poll released yesterday. The University of North Carolina, winners of last year's national championship, are still the unnimous number one team in the land, followed by North Carolina State and the University of California-Berkeley.

UMass is fourth, just one point behind UCB, while Colorado College rounds out the top five.

BOG gives conservatives deadline to move out

Other student groups displaced

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

After much heated debate between left and right, the Board of Governors moved several student groups into new spaces last night and set a limit on when one conservative group can stay in their present offices.

The board moved Concepto Latino and the Central American Students Association to room 415 of the Student Union building, while the publication Spectrum will now share space with the Minuteman in room 322. The motion also allocates space to Graduate Student Organizations and Abilities Unlimited in Campus Center room 103.

The Third World Caucus will now occupy SU 404 with the Commuter Area Government.

The move, lauded by conservative factions, will have Students for Bush and the Minuteman occupy SU 322 until Nov. 9, when a decision about reallocation of the space will be made.

Heated debate ensued, in which Southwest Area Government appointee Brian Darling questioned whether board members who have an interest in the outcome should vote on the motion.

Vice Chairperson Liz Hart became acting chairperson when Chairperson Eric Nakajima stepped down to debate the motion. Hart asked governors decide for themselves whether they should vote on the issue.

Gov. Jay Festa, who co-authored the motion with Rita Sachdeva, said, "I don't see what's so threatening about this motion. It's not politically motivated, it's giving more RSOs space."

"We're dealing with a limited amount of space, and we've been very fair. We're making accommodations," he added.

In a sharp outburst, BOG Facilities Coordinator Dan Collins said, "This whole motion makes me totally sick. This is a fiasco, this is all about who can stack the board in their favor."

Collins said the proper procedure would be to refer the moves the Space Committee. He said making this move was not in the best interest of the students.

Darling, in his first meeting as a governor, said the office to be shared by Spectrum, the Minuteman and Students for Bush was not big enough for all the groups.

Darling saw the motion as an attack on conservative organizations. "It's just partisan politics again," he said.

"It seems like special interest groups have hijacked the BOG and railroaded it through," he added.

After the motion was passed, Darling said he was resigning from the board.

The relocation of the RSOs changes an emergency move made by BOG officers earlier this month.

"This is not an issue of political charge," Festa said. He added that although the motion changed the move made by officers of the board, it "supports the spirit of that motion."

New attorneys enlisted in campus assault case

By FRANCIS HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Seven months after an alleged racially-motivated beating of two black students, private attorneys for both parties will assume prosecutor and defense roles, after the Northwestern district attorney's office withdrew from the case.

The office, which dropped the case in late July, decided the cross-complaints in the case could be handled best by private attorneys, according to Shutesbury Attorney Michael Pill. Pill and Amherst Attorney Thomas Whitney are representing the four men accused of the attack.

Police reports state that early Feb. 7, a group of white students shouted racial slurs at, and then attacked, black students James Cunningham and Jerome Smith. Smith and Cunningham were escorting Smith's white girlfriend, Sarah Whittle from a party in the Sylvan Residential Area.

Smith and Whittle were represented by attorney Joseph F. Bardouille of Lynn until this week when an undisclosed attorney adopted the case.

"Smith has declined any mediation," said Pill, who added that he had unsuccessful attempts to mediate between Smith and William J. McPhail, Jr., one of the alleged attackers.

Former UMass students Stephen M. Wolff of Attleboro, David C. Johnson of Plymouth, and McPhail, of Arlington, are facing charges of assault and battery, assault and battery with the purpose of racial intimidation, and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Non-UMass student Daniel Johnson, the brother of David Johnson, faces the same charges, plus an additional assault and battery charge, along with McPhail.

Cunningham and Smith were charged by McPhail in April with assault and battery, and assault and battery for the purpose of racial intimidation. Smith pleaded innocent to all charges. Cunningham, who lives in Philadelphia, did not make his court date and presently has a warrant out for his arrest.

University disciplinary actions in late spring resulted in the placement of two of the white men on deferred suspensions for violation of the Code of Student Conduct by attacking Cunningham and Smith. McPhail withdrew to avoid disciplinary actions against him.

Kennedy to speak on civility

Collegian Staff Report

Ted Kennedy, Jr. will deliver the keynote address at the second annual University of Massachusetts Conference to be held tomorrow at the Campus Center and Student Union building.

Kennedy, who lost a leg to cancer, will address issues of civility and the rights of the disabled at 10 a.m. in the Student Union.

"The University is strong on issues of civility," said student development coordinator Andrea Kandel.

"It's not just here students are going to have to learn to live with people of different backgrounds and with different abilities," she said. "That's one of the reasons we wanted Ted Kennedy, Jr. to speak. He's an incredible leader of young people around civility issues."

Kennedy will also address a five-college event tomorrow at 1 p.m. on the Smith College campus at Stoddard Auditorium. According to Kevin Bourque, Western Massachusetts college coordinator for Sen. Kennedy's re-election campaign, the younger Kennedy will discuss his father's campaign as well as try to get students involved.

Local race starts to brew

Republican says area citizens 'are not tax dollars'

By SYLVIA GAUDETTE
Collegian Staff

Co-owner of the local tavern The Spoke, Miles Washburn threw his hat into the state Senate race last June with the slogan "Let's bring politics back to the people."

Washburn said the political needs of Western Massachusetts are being ignored and local tax dollars are not being spent locally.

He said the Massachusetts Senate "forgets that Hampshire and Franklin counties are west of the 495 belt-line. We're not tax dollars to be used in Boston."

"There needs to be a Western Mass. voice in Boston," he said. "Instead of a Boston voice in Western Mass."

Washburn said our current senators "forget the people that put them in office." If he wins, he plans to commute to Boston from his home in South Hadley in an effort to keep politics close to the people who elected him.

This is not the first time Washburn, 25, has leapt over the bar into politics. He is currently a Republican State Committee Member and chairman of the Republican Town Committee in South Hadley, as well as a town meeting member in South Hadley.

Nor is he a stranger to his constituency. A 1987 UMass graduate in economics, Washburn established The Spoke four years ago with his partner Douglas LeBlanc. He has also been a member of Delta Chi Fraternity since 1985 and currently serves as financial advisor on their Alumni Board of Trustees.

Washburn said, especially in a presidential election year, that there are a lot of students registered in Amherst. He said the UMass campus vote is important to him, since he feels a majority of students will vote central-right.

"You'll find a lot of conservative Democrats that will vote Republican," he said.

Two key issues in his campaign are the opposition of new or increased taxes and fees, and auto insurance reform.

He said Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and current Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, are "tax and spend Democrats" who tax more so they can spend more. He said Massachusetts has a one party system with 32 Democrats and eight Republicans in the Senate and a ratio of four to one in the House.

This, he says, allows for "incredible abuse" of power.

Another issue he strongly disagrees with Olver on is the Massachusetts weekend furloughs for first-degree con-

Mass. furlough program evaluated

BOSTON (AP) — While Gov. Michael S. Dukakis still is taking heat for a controversial Massachusetts prison furlough policy, officials say early-release programs at two state prisons are quietly re-integrating offenders into society.

Officials at the Worcester County House of Correction in West Boylston and Hampden County Jail in Springfield said none of the inmates completing the programs have been arrested again since serving their sentences.

"In the beginning, we took a deep breath to see what would happen, but it's been recognized as one of the only alternatives we have to ease prison crowding," said Assistant Deputy Paul J. Westberg of the Worcester County House of Correction.

The programs' success is a relief to officials following the outcry when convicted murderer Willie Horton raped a Maryland woman and stabbed her husband in April 1987 after escaping while on a furlough from a Massachusetts prison.

Vice President George Bush has been using the furlough program, started by Republican Gov. Francis Sargent, to charge that Dukakis is soft on crime. Dukakis repealed furloughs for first-degree murderers in the ensuing controversy after Horton's arrest.

Fledgling falcons live in room for the birds

By DEBORAH RITTER
Collegian Correspondent

While the Campus Center Hotel accommodated convention guests and prospective students over the summer, the south end of the roof was headquarters for another type of guest — five peregrine falcons.

The University of Massachusetts has become the latest site for the re-introduction of the still-endangered peregrine falcon, a species that last bred successfully in the Massachusetts wild in 1946.

Curt Griffin, professor in the Wildlife and Fisheries Program, has spearheaded the hacking, or re-introduction, project.

According to Griffin, the term hacking refers to the hackbox that serves as home for the young falcons as they adjust to their new location. While not currently occupied, the hackbox is in place on top of the Campus Center and is easily visible to passersby.

The falcons began residence on July 7, when they were about 30 days old. For one week they were confined to the hackbox to "imprint an attachment to a geographical location," Griffin said. They they were released.

The next day the three males flew for the first time. By July 21, the rest had flown.

Once they learned to fly, the birds could be seen on all the highest perches on campus. The birds appeared to particularly to like Thompson Hall, the Tower Library and the smokestacks, Griffin said.

Griffin is satisfied with the project. "This is one of the major success stories in wildlife management," he said. "We're all very pleased and anxious to do it again next year."

The goal of the project is to re-establish the peregrine falcon as a breeding species in the area. There are several historic nesting aeries in this area, most notably on Mount Tom. These aeries have not been used since the widespread use of DDT caused the disappearance of peregrines 40 years ago. Griffin said he hopes the falcons will eventually return to the original sites.

The released birds have been raised in captivity by the Peregrine Fund of Boise, Idaho. Each bird costs $2,000 to $2,500.

The project is funded by the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife, Griffin said. "Actually, the money comes from that box you check on the State Tax Form, the one called the Non-Game Fund. That's the fund that supports the Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program," he said.

Peregrines are available on a regional priority basis, said Griffin. Because of the success of the hacking program east of the Mississippi, the birds may be hard to get next year.

"There are 15 active aeries in the East right now, so we are not a high-priority area," he said, adding the birds are being sent to western states.

While peregrines are among the fastest flying birds in the world, their speed does not protect them from their natural predator, the Great Horned Owl, Griffin said. The owls hunt at night when the falcons are most vulnerable. They sleep on open ledges and do not see well in the dark, he said.

The risk from predators is the main reason re-introduction projects have not worked in more natural settings, Griffin said. The first successful hacking project occurred in downtown Boston in 1984. This year a pair has returned there to nest, he said. In the city the birds eat mostly starlings and sparrows.

UMass was the second site selected in the state, partly because of Griffin's lobbying efforts, which stem back to his arrival in Massachusetts in 1984.

While he provided the scientific expertise, Dick Nathhorst of the Physical Plant made the logistical arrangements, Griffin said. Under Nathhorst's direction, volunteers built the hackbox and installed it on the roof.

The birds were monitored from dawn to dusk by two senior wildlife biology students, Katherine Kripp and Katherine Becker, said Griffin. As site attendants, they fed the falcons frozen quails, monitored the birds' progress, and answered questions from curious onlookers.

"Some people thought it was a pigeon control program," said Griffin. "We had to explain that wasn't the case at all. Pigeons are fast flyers themselves and hard to catch. A couple of the birds did learn to hunt them, however, and I'm sure the people from the Physical Plant were thrilled."

The falcons were last seen Sept. 15 on campus. Last Monday the decision was made to stop feeding them, Griffin said.

Program offers 'healing process' to rape victims

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

The Rape Survivor Support Group sponsored by the Everywoman's Center provides a safe place where women can talk about their experiences with other survivors, said the program's coordinator.

Pat Barrows, coordinator of the Counselor/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, said the goal of the program is to "break the silence and provide women with a safe place to talk about what happened to them."

"We want women to become aware of how such an assault effects their lives and to see the strengths they develop as they deal with those stresses," she said.

The support group is designed to increase self-esteem, develop feelings of empowerment and help women make the transition from victim to survivor, Barrows said.

"The group is an educational forum where we talk about the issues," she said. "We try to help women see rape in connection with society."

Statistics show one woman in three in the US will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime, she said.

"Rape is not a personal act against one woman; it is systematic in our culture. It's a political issue," she said. "We live in a rape culture."

"Rape is in some ways condoned by our culture as a whole," she said. "It is the only felony where the victim ends up having to prove her own innocence."

"In other felonies the general public does not focus on the victim or what they did to provoke an attack," she said. "You would never ask the victim of a mugging what he or she was wearing or what they were doing at the time of an assualt."

"In the group we talk about those issues thereby breaking down some of the isolation," she said.

"It's still very painful, but it can be very empowering to share your experiences. It's a very important part of the healing process," she said.

There has been a Rape Survivor Support Group every semester for at least the last five years, she said, adding it is a diverse group in terms of age, class background, ethnicity, sexual preference and race, and is made up of students and community women.

The group is facilitated by two community therapists with experience working in the Counselor/Advocate Program. It will begin in October and run for 10 weeks with one two-hour meeting each week.

The group is free of charge and confidentiality is assured. For more information on how to register, call the Counselor/Advocate Program at 545-3474.

Profile delayed

The University of Massachusetts took a back seat to the presidential race last night, when Chronicle, the Boston television news magazine, delayed its broadcast dedicated to the University to cover George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

Amy Hassan, productions coordinator for Chronicle, said the show will likely air tonight.

"The chances are very high it will run Friday, but I don't want to make any promises," she said.

Chronicle, a 30-minute program that follows ABC World News Tonight on Boston's WCVB, will profile UMass, touching on its development over the decade, student life, and recent racial turmoil, according to host and producer Andria Hall.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Nummo feels new magic of written, spoken word

By SUZETTE HUNTE
Collegian Correspondent

Nummo, a publication conceived in times of struggle, continues to struggle today for survival.

Nummo, the first and only black student newspaper on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, is a publication especially, but not exclusively, for black students in the five-college area.

The paper operates as a news and information medium with articles and editorials targeted at a black audience.

Nummo's main goal is to establish a five-college network through which black students can freely express their concerns, views, and opinion to their Black peers and to students of all ethnic origins.

Originally called Nummo News, it was founded in 1975 as the result of a struggle initiated in 1974 by a black student organization called the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE).

CORE spearheaded an investigation of white media organizations on campus at the time.

They found that these organizations were functioning without black student representation on their staffs.

Enraged, CORE and other members of the black community staged a sit-in at the Collegian.

Their efforts proved successful and shortly afterwards, two positions were created on the Collegian's Board of Editors. Hence, the "Black Affairs" page was born. However, the space allotted to "Black Affairs" soon proved to be insufficient.

According to Rudy Jones, the first Black Affairs Editor and former Assistant Admissions Director at UMass, "they [students] wanted to have a newspaper independent of the Collegian in which they controlled the editorial content of the paper."

So, members of the black community, still striving for an outlet that would enable them to voice their opinions freely, formed Nummo News a year later.

The word "Nummo" is Swahili in origin and means, "the magic power of the spoken and written word."

Through the dedication and drive of the Nummo News staff, under the direction of Editor Sherwood Thompson, currently the Director of the Office of Third World Affairs (OTWA), the magic was put to work.

The result of their efforts was Nummo in its heyday. It provided information not only on a local level but also on a national, international and cultural level. The publication came out weekly with a minimum of 8 to 9 pages. According to Segun Eubanks, a past member of the Nummo staff and currently a caseworker/counselor for the UMass Upward Bound Program, "Nummo was an important tie to the Black community. It let people know what was really going on, rather than relying on gossip. Everyone complained about the inaccuracy of the coverage the New Africa House takeover [last February] received in the press. We had our own media in Nummo, but it is not utilized."

But if the new Editor in Chief of Nummo, senior Kevin Sibley has anything to say about it, the magic power of Nummo will be revitalized.

Said Sibley: "I would really like to see more black participation. This is imperative to keep the black voice alive on campus as well as in the five college area."

Nummo held its first general meeting yesterday afternoon in its office located on the first floor of New Africa House.

Engineering program offers many opportunities to minorities

By PAMELA MCRAE
Collegian Correspondent

With more than 5,000 members, the National Society of Black Engineers is one of the largest student-run organizations in the country. It originated in April 1975 with a handful of black engineering students at Purdue University concerned with n overwhelming deficiency of minority engineers in America's industries.

Conceived by the Society of Engineers, the organization devoted itself to the development of intensive programs for increasing recruitment, retention, and successful graduation of minorities in engineering and applied sciences.

Presently, NSBE consists of more than 150 chartered chapters located on university and college campuses across the United States. As a non-profit, tax-exempt organization, NSBE continues to produce innovative projects on the national, regional, and chapter levels, include tutorial programs, high school/junior high school outreach programs, workshops, career fairs, banquets, newsletters, resume books, and a National magazine international).

Only 5 years old, the NSBE chapter at UMass has matured into an essential resource for minority engineers. Recipients of Outstanding Chapter Awards, they have, and continue to produce Career Fairs, Conferences, Workshops, Resume Books, and Socials.

Acting President, Kim O'Shields of UMass, feels that some of the true personal benefits of NSBE come from 'networking with other minority students with the same goals in mind as well as with other NSBE students from all over the country. From this, a type of unity is developed within the organization that one can depend on."

For minority engineering newcomers, Assistant Director of the Minority Engineering program, Dwight Tavada, expressed how "NSBE gives them an atmosphere of family and support, while helping to gear them towards some basic goals."

Unwilling to diminish, NSBE continues to strive towards its full potential with a

Chinua Achebe, internationally acclaimed novelist and UMass visiting professor, will discuss Africa and the West on the Sept. 29 edition of Bill Moyers' "World of Ideas" on PBS.

She will also address the colonial legacy and the importance of storytelling and writers.

The show will be aired on the PBS network at 11 p.m. Local viewers can watch the show on channel 56.

"World of Ideas" is a new series of 50 half-hour interviews with people of "ideas and vision and insight, to broaden and enhance the conversation of democracy."

Achebe, author of 22 novels, including the highly praised and well-known Things Fall Apart, No Longer At Ease, and his most recent, Anthills of the Savannah, is currently a visiting professor in the Afro-American Studies Department. Of the West and Africa, Achebe says: "The traditional attitude of Europe or the West is that Africa is a continent of children . . . so that a man as powerful and as enlightened as Albert Schweitzer was able to say that 'the Black people are my brothers.' But my junior brothers, you see. We're not anybody's junior brothers."

Speaking on democracy, the novelist says: "When people say we failed to practice democracy in Africa, they assume we were taught democracy during colonial rule, and that somehow we betrayed our education.

"This is not true at all. The colonial regime [British] was not a democratic system; it was a most extreme form of totalitarianism."

Other guests on Bill Moyers' show will include historian Barbara Tuchman, sociologist Robert Bellah, and teacher-philosopher John Searle.

Upward Bound: year-round program, a plan for the future

BY EDWARD P. SMITH
Collegian Correspondent

The Upward Bound Program at the University of Massachusetts is a year round, federally–funded program that was born out of the struggle in the 1960s.

Its purpose is to provide upward mobility for minorities. The program, designed for low income students, originated from six experimental pilot projects during 1965. President Lyndon B. Johnson decided to fund four of these programs — one of the them based at UMass.

"The major theme [of Upward Bounds] in terms of goals and mission is to motivate students to develop the skills necessary to gain admission to and successfully complete college", said Brain Lewis, assistant administrative director of Upward Bound and chairman of the Boston Higher Education Informaton Center.

Lewis stressed that Upward Bound is not only summer-oriented, but a "year-round" program that maintains close contact with students who were in or are entering the program.

During the year, the Outreach program of Upward Bound operates as a tutorial and counseling body that sponsors career days to help students understand the diversity of college life. Counseling is provided on four different levels: family, personal, career, and academic.

Students of Upward Bound may either be honor students in high school or students whose records demonstrate continual academic regression.

"The things these students have in common is very strong survival skills, [and] although they come into Upward Bound with tunnel vision, we try to channel these strong survival skills away from looking for the immediate to planning for the future," said Wilma Tynes, former student [of Upward Bound] and now case worker in charge of projects for the Springfield area.

Students may apply to the program between grades nine and 11. The summer program emphasizes academics with a curriculum that ranges from chemistry to studies in Afro-American history. The wide range of courses encourages diversity in thought and expression of oneself, said UMass senior Duver Gomez, a former Upward Bound student.

Yvette Russel ,a junior at UMASS, said the Upward Bound program "helps a high victed murderers program. Washburn said he has discussed the issues with voters while he campaigns door-to-door.

"I haven't met anyone yet who's for it," he said, adding he couldn't understand why Olver would vote for an issue that was so unpopular in his district.

Washburn also said deregulating auto insurance would spur competitive rates in the insurance market, consequently lowering the price in Western Massachusetts.

"This is a hot issue for everyone right now," he said. "Why should we pay the same (as people in Boston)?" He said car-owners in Western Massachusetts should not face the same theft, accident and vandalism rates Boston car-owners face.

Washburn invited area students to work on his campaign this semester for internship credits. He said the advantage to working on a local campaign like his is the opportunity to talk with the candidate and discuss his platform.

Although Washburn said he will be busy "representing the people as opposed to bartending all the time" he has no plans to leave The Spoke.

Some advice for Mike and George

Ennui-watch '88

Step right up! Step right up!
Peanuts, popcorn, crackerrrrjack!
Peanuts, popcorn, crackerrrrjack!

"Let me tell you, George Herman Walker Bush, that while you were sat there in the White House while the US traded with Iran, Iran of all nations, I was. . ."

David R. Mark

"Now Mike, you may feel it's perfectly fine to have a furlough program that allows murderers and rapists to visit their homes, maybe never to return. But while you were in Boston, I was. . ."

And so it goes. At least, that's what many Americans hope will go when Vice President George Bush debates Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Sunday at 8 p.m. in Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

For Bush, it may signal the beginning of the end, especially if Bush comes across as too upper class (deep doo-doo, etc.), unable to handle simple semantics ("I hope I stand for anti-bigotry, anti-Semitism, anti-racism. . .") or just plain out of it (asking if an audience realized Sept. 7 was the anniversary of Pearl Harbor).

For Dukakis, it may also signal the beginning of the end, especially if he starts rattling off statistics, stays with the tried and true (read: boring) "Good jobs at good wages" routine, and is unable to show even the smallest inkling of emotion.

"George, your efforts to handle drugs have been to handle Noriega with care, while in Massachusetts I. . ."

"And another thing about the next Vice President of the United States, Dan Quayle — he damn didn't burn the American flag. . ."

It probably won't be a 'great' debate. More likely, it will be filled with slogans and evasion, rather than issues and answers.

For your guidance, and with some help from Newsweek magazine and Collegian Associate Production Manager Betty Ann Murphy, we bring you "A Handicapper's Guide to the Great Debate."

So keep your eyes glued to your sets Sunday night, and don't forget your Nytol.

David R. Mark is editorial editor of the Collegian

A Handicapper's Guide to the Great Debate

The first debate between Bush and Dukakis next Sunday will be billed as the Most Important Event in the campaign—at least until the second debate. The search is on in both campaigns for the next one-liner with the resonance of Ronald Reagan's 1980 "There you go again." Tally of "Massachusetts Miracle" or "star schools, not Star Wars" won't cut it. For those planning to watch the temporary interruption of Olympics coverage, here is a handicapper's guide:

George Bush

Height: 6 feet 2"
Weight: 205 pounds
Age: 64
Trainer: Roger Ailes
Dukakis stand-in: Richard Darman
Handicaps: Large body makes his head look small; whiny, gaffe-prone when not well prepped. He's stopped wiggling, but he's started giggling.
Advice: Keep voice low, stay calm, don't wave arms. Banish all spontaneous thoughts.
Favorable conditions: Format doesn't let Dukakis make an opening statement or ask Bush direct questions.
Previous outings: Hyper in '84 Ferraro contest; held his own in '88 primary group gropes.
Likely strategy: A "kinder, gentler" Bush who lets Dukakis be the slasher.
Favorite topics: Peace, prosperity, falling trade deficit.
Running away from: Ayatollah, Noriega, Nixon, Marcos. Reagan environmental record.
Likely canned indignant responses on: Quayle war service, Iran-contra, Dukakis charge of "McCarthyism."
Suggested one-liner: Governor, the sewage in Boston Harbor, which you've failed to clean up, would cover that city to a height of 17 feet. Now that's deep doo-doo.
Expectations: Lowered so far they're rising again.
Worst-case scenario: Wins debate, then says, "We kicked a little Greek a– last night."

Michael Dukakis

Height: 5 feet 8 (he says)
Weight: 160 pounds
Age: 54
Trainer: Tom Donilon
Bush stand-in: Robert Garment
Handicaps: No shoulders; can seem arrogant, tedious, dour (do you want this man in your living room?); unlike Reagan, looks smug when he bobs his head.
Advice: Lighten up, crack a joke; use rebuttal time to ask Bush direct questions and get him off his script.
Favorable conditions: Bush has to stand for 90 minutes without notes, increasing chances for The Gaffe.
Previous outings: Too-gruesome demolition of Gephardt in only 30 one-on-one; did well in other primary contests, but often by fading into the background. Moderator for debate series in the '70s—but that was an egghead PBS show.
Likely strategy: Smiling Mike, who calmly shows he's not a crazy liberal after all.
Favorite topics: Drugs, middle class, "President Quayle."
Running away from: George McGovern, Jimmy Carter, Jesse Jackson, Willie Horton, Boston Harbor.
Likely canned indignant responses on: The Pledge, furlough program, intimation he's not on "American side."
Suggested one-liner: George, I'm not Jimmy Carter. [pause] And you sure as hell ain't Ronald Reagan.
Expectations: Falling. But he really needs a win.
Worst-case scenario: Suggests placing United Nations flag in every classroom next to Old Glory.

Do you have a gripe about something? Do you like something? If you do, you'd best get your body down to 113 Campus Center and write about it. Just make sure it's typed and double-spaced. Ask Dave or Pam any questions you may have.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Hello, mobile UMass

Anyone driving to or from Northampton Saturday evening should be sure to check out the UMass Pagan Students Organization, picketing in front of HoJo's on Route 9. The Seventh Day Adventists, a fundamentalist Christian group, is holding a conference on "The Occult Explosion — Why?" and the pagans say they have been wrongly accused of worshipping Satan.

I can hear the groans. Why is it always a picket, always a cause? Yes, there are a few too many of those at UMass. But you have to admit, the issues are pretty interesting. I'll take it over a political rally, or an alcohol protest.

Nancy Klingener

Walking is not such a bad thing. We have a big campus and we get a lot of exercise between classes. But that still does not excuse the yo-yos who take the bus from the stop on North Pleasant Street in front of the Methodist church, and then ride to campus. Yeah, I know. The five-minute walk might just put you over the limit and you're going to drop dead of a stroke. Or worse, you might miss the first five minutes of "All My Children."

They shouldn't have a bus stop there at all. Or else people who are caught taking the bus from there to campus should be tied to the front of those physical plant trucks that just can't seem to find the loading docks and access roads around this campus. Do you know what's fun to do when one of those vans is bearing down on the pedestrian sidewalk? Move into the center of the sidewalk and start walking really slowly. Take your time. Stop and rip a little triangle in your coffee lid. Stop and save that nice earthworm in the puddle from getting flattened. It's your sidewalk. This is an even better tactic when it's people in suits driving state cars. Notice you very rarely see faculty members driving their Volvos around campus. That's because they used to be students.

Did anyone catch state Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, when he was talking about the proliferation of temporary trailers on campus (Collegian, p.3, 9/20)? Rosenberg said we should "celebrate" the hideous things because they show the University is growing beyond its boundaries, and is a vital, dynamic place.

Right. We're supposed to celebrate because our campus doesn't get the funding to build the classrooms and labs it desperately needs. We're supposed to celebrate these ugly, temporary shacks all over a campus that once, before the 1950s and 60s, was beautiful. We're supposed to celebrate because the hardworking people who manage to stick it out here put up with make-do measures, because they have no choice or because they actually care about their work.

Where's the party? I don't see the trustees or the Chancellor's Commission for Celebrating Things (I'm sure there is one) putting out slick posters for the event.

I'd like to see Rosenberg leading the celebration when they alleviate the need for low-income housing in Amherst by building a trailer park in the middle of the Amherst Common. Make no mistake, the trailers on campus are needed, and a lifesaver. But that's not enough, and they're nothing to crow about.

Tune in to what's up with WSUR

I have some good news and some bad news.

The bad news is that WSUR is not going on the air, yet. Due to circumstances beyond the control of the board members, the financial support necessary to complete equipment purchases and renovation of a broadcasting studio has fallen short of our goal. In fact, we're broke. Also, during the summer, we had intended to, with the help of S.W.A.G. and Housing Services, fill out the forms necessary to receive an FCC license for a 100 watt FM station. Again, intentions do not always become reality.

So, WSUR is not a broadcasting station, as we had all hoped.

But don't lose faith, because I do have some good news. Included in the various building projects in store for the UMASS-Amherst campus over the next several years is the wiring of all on-campus housing for cable. This is a complicated process by which all dorm rooms will be equipped to receive college radio and TV broadcasts.

WSUR, by working with housing, has the opportunity to be on the ground floor of this new project.

WSUR still needs your support. We need dedicated individuals to get involved with this project. Those interested may call me at 256-0569. No meeting has been set yet. STAY TUNED!

Bonnie L. Borromeo
Station Manager of WSUR

Approach to drug problem wrong

In his zealous crusade to purge professional sports of "drug addicts," Jim Clark ignores the largest category of substance abusers: those addicted to alcohol. Has he forgotten that Babe Ruth himself was one of the worst problem drinkers the game has ever seen? Maybe he overlooks alcoholics because the word doesn't whip people into self-righteous frenzies as effectively as the words he does use: "druggies," and cocaine addicts," for example.

Babe Ruth sure wouldn't have played long enough to hit 714 home runs if we lived in Clark's crypto-facist state. What a great idea, ban drug users from their only source of livelihood. Is there any other branch of the entertainment industry where drug use results in suspension and ultimately, expulsion? The last time I checked, the Bill of Rights was still attached to the Constitution.

No one advocates drug use for athletes or for anyone. Offenders need treatment and education, not pompous moralists like Jim Clark to kick them out onto the streets. Simple-minded pundits who can in one breath admit that drug abuse is a disease and then continue to scream for expulsions exemplify the very worst of the mindless Nancy Reagan "Just Say No" hysteria.

Column is true — unfortunately

In response to Nancy Cohen's article "Both Right and Left Ridiculous," I couldn't agree more. On a campus so proud of its image of being open-minded, it is amazing to note that 10 percent of the students make 90 percent of the noise.

On this campus, you are either ultra-right, ultra-left, or shouted down. There is no middle ground.

Most of the self-proclaimed "open-minded"people are the most narrow-minded people I've met.

The concept of shouting down opponents applies to both the liberals and conservatives on campus. If you don't believe, me go to a rally and count the number of air horns.

It is time for average students to step forward and express their views on issues. It's time to tell these groups that life isn't all cut and dry. Other people are entitled to their opinions.

Art work from Amherst to Noho to Springfield

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

As the once-mighty art columnist sat down to her work, she realized that there had to be a limit to the inhumanity . . .

Oh,where did that stuff come from? Welcome to week two of the continuing saga known as Art Attack. Anyway, there's quite a bit in the galleries this week.

First, let's check the action on campus. Wheeler Gallery, in Wheeler Residence Hall in Central, is opening its season with an exhibition by Northampton artist Mark Andres, who specializes in landscape painting. He described his work as "sustained evocation" of the "breathtaking first sight of a landscape."

Obviously, if it's that breathtaking, it must not be of the bridge on Route 9 to Northampton. Seriously, folks, there is a reception for the artist on Sunday, September 25 from 3 to 5 p.m. The Gallery's hours are Monday to Thursday 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

Well, now it's time to move off campus. There are three events at Smith College's Museum of Art to begin their 1988-89 season. First, photographer Lynn Stern is

Alice never to be in Wanda-land

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

Some major changes this year. You may have noticed that this week's "Friday Film Follies" is now called the "Screening Room". You may also have noticed that Jim Cole is now called Adam Campbell. The first change is forever. The second is only bi-weekly.

Now, on to business:

Sure it's been out for a while, but if this review should help to inject a little more life into one of the very few current films that deserve to live, it's worth more than paper, ink and time.

A Fish Called Wanda is this year's funniest film. It's a witty, understated, remarkably sophisticated comedy that restores faith in a Hollywood sadly prone to shoddy physical humor and pre-adolescent toilet jokes.

John Cleese is very funny as a conservative barrister who is unwittingly drawn, by the charms of young American Jamie Lee Curtis, into an incomprehensible tangle of deceit. Kevin Kline, however, is the real highlight of the film in his inspired performance as a pathetically deluded, cockeyed criminal philosopher anglophobe("Don't call me stupid."). (Interesting note: Kevine Kline lives with Phoebe Cates. Guess who sat in front of me at the New York premier of "Wanda"? She didn't laugh once).

The story? Suffice it to say that everybody screws everybody(in the strictest biblical sense, of course).

I'm introducing a new section to this column. It's called "Films That Will Never Make It To Amherst". (Motion pictures that play at the mall are called "movies".

The ones that never make it past the New York art-houses are called "films".)

Okay: Alice. An interesting, but contentless adult-oriented adaptation of Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland", it is the brainchild of a Czech animator named Svenkmajer. Well, this is Art, so we can overlook the sloppy execution, negligible storyline, choppy animation, and bad dubbing."A Summer Story", based on a story by James Galworthy. The film is very pretty, very depressing, and very blatant. It's acted well, but the male romantic lead is such a wimp that it makes it rather difficult to suspend disbelief. (Would a beautiful, strong-willed country lass give her life for George Bush?)

Coming soon: "Murder One"; "Dead Ringers"; "Halloween 4"; "Cocoon 2"; "Punchline". More on these later.

Grave Goods play new single at Carriage Shops concert today

By PETER N. PIASECKYJ
Collegian Correspondent

Local band Grave Goods will be releasing their first single "Narrow House" next week. But today they're playing it live at a free concert at the Carriage Shop parking lot at 5 p.m.

Who are they and where do they come from? Lead singer Paul Jenkins moved to the United States from London last fall after fronting the immortal band The Barking Spiders. Colin Sears relocated to Amherst after quiting Washington DC's Dag Nasty. You might remember his drumming on the "Can I Say?" or "Wig Out" records.

Sears bumped into Jenkins and childhood friend Lord Freddy Jim in January 1988 and the rest is history. The notorious Lord Freddy Jim Ventre, formerly from the Amhert garage rock Remnants, rocks out on bass. To complete the line-up, studio guitarist Steven Wardlaw joined the band.

The music is a combined group effort and the social issue-related lyrics are written by Jenkins. "Narrow House," is about a person who is afraid of everything ("We are rushing . . to impending disaster/Here's the invitation to the funeral").

The tune starts off with a guitar sounding like Johnny Marr on speed. The bass and drums keep the song very tight, going at break neck speed. And Jenkin's crisp, clear voice gives it an unusual murky sound.

The second single, "Shadow Season" explains the fate of Great Britain after Thatcher's departure from rule. The syncopated drums make it a real danceable tune. Lord Freddy Jim shows his finnese as a bass player as he carries the tune with Wardlaw's guitar complimenting the bass line. And you can't miss Jenkins' voice crying out "I will be there laughing/ I will hurt you gladly/ In the Shadow Season."

The story behind Grave Goods' name is rather interesting. Jenkins was in the Athol Cemetery visiting the grave of a Titanic disaster victim when he noticed something by the head stone. It was a memorial medallion made of the metal extracted from the lifeboats which rescued the victims . . . Hence the name "Grave Goods."

The band has just signed a contract with Wishing Well/Giant Records to do an album and a 12-inch EP. They will be recording the album in January and releasing it in March.

But catch them today at 5 p.m. at the Carriage Shops with special guests Gidget Goes to Hell. Don't miss them, it should be good.

holding an exhibit titled Unveilings, which will close on Oct.9. A week before, on Oct. 2, at 3 p.m., the artist will give a gallery talk. A second show, featuring the works of the late artist Reinhold Naegele (1884 - 1972) will run until Oct. 16.

Finally, Smith is offering Gertrude Jekyll: A Vision of Garden and Wood, honoring the 19th century artist who was something of a Renaissance woman. She excelled in such varied areas as landscape painting, photography, writing and much more. It's amazing how talented a person can be. The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from noon to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. This exhibit will close on Oct.16.

While we're in Noho, graduate student Libby Hubbard is showing some of her artwork at the Northampton Center for the Arts. It's always interesting to check out a show being held by a student, so if you can catch the show (it closes on Oct.1), do so.

Back to Amherst, and the Jones Library, where Rhoda Juels is showing fantasy painting. It involves iridescent paints, antique beads, yarn and molding paste, and is considered to be influenced by the Art Nouveau style of painting.

If you're into French and American Impressionism, you might want to go to the Museum of Fine Arts in Springfield to check out a show titled Lasting Impressions: French and American Impressionism from New England Museums, on display from September 25 to November 27. Incidentally, there is a lecture series on different aspects of the show each Sunday during the exhibit's run. The only tricky part of this show is that you have to buy the tickets in advance, which only cost $3 for adults, $2 for children and senior citizens. For more information, call the Museum at 1-739-3871, ext.312.

That's all for now See you next week.

Linebacker John McKeown (35) will lead the Minutemen against Harvard at 1:30 p.m. tomorrow in Cambridge.

mind."

That's because offense has been the strong point for the Minutemen this season. In two games, the defense has allowed 1177 yards.

"Right now , our identity is that we're an offensive football team," Reid said. "We're waiting for some things to come together on defense. It's a matter of seven new players getting to know each other."

"Our problems on defense bother me," Reid said. "I think about it every day. But I'd think about it a lot more if I thought it was because of a lack of effort. If this team allows a yard, the opponent will pay for it. It's just a question of our players regrouping. They're tough bastards and they never quit."

Extra points: All 19 meetings of these two teams have been played at Harvard. . . senior running back Ted Barrett reinjured his hamstring during the week and will not play tomorrow. . . Two years ago, in Reid's first season as head coach, the Minutemen survived a terrible rainstorm to beat the Crimson, 17-7. Yohe and Palazzi were the quarterbacks.

■ men's soccer battles Vermont

The main change for UMass will see sophomore Richard King will start in the UMass goal for the second time this season.

Vermont owns a 5-1-1 record, and exclusive claim to the No. 3 position in the Northeast, according to the latest Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America poll. The Minutemen, who shared the No. 5 position with Yale prior to Wednesday's loss, must upend the Catamounts if they hope to remain on the list.

"You can see the importance of the game," said Gettler "we could potentially stay where we are (in the rankings), or move up."

On Wednesday, UConn's stunning 2-1 upset of Harvard, previously ranked No. 1 in the nation, threw the entire New England soccer scene into confusion. While the Minutemen are playing tomorrow to remain in sight, the Catamounts are looking to climb the few remaining rungs on the Northeast ladder.

The Catamounts suffered their only loss of the season to powerful George Mason, at the early season Adelphi Tournament, then played to a 1-1 tie with Adelphi in their second outing. The Catamounts have since rolled to five straight victories, including Wednesday's 2-0 defeat of Boston College — UVM's second consecutive shutout performance.

The Vermont defense revolves around sweeper Kevin Wiley, and junior goalkeeper Jim St. Andre (0.39 goals per game, 5 career shutouts). The statistically steady defense, coupled with a creative offense, has earned Gettler's respect in recent years.

"They're a very hard team to play against," praised Gettler, "They're very organized, they commit 11 players to defense. . . it'll be a real test to see if we can score a goal or two against them."

This contest will also test UMass' resiliance. To bounce back from Wednesday's loss, and play the type of aggressive soccer displayed during the Minutemen's recent four-game homestand, would be a victory in itself for Gettler's squad.

"This team has got to make teams beat us, and not give away games," said Gettler. "We have to learn to find ways to win against teams like this."

Free Kicks: Senior midfielder Michael Mugavero's right knee, worth eight stitches to Dartmouth goalkeeper Gregg Lomkau, should be ready for action tomorrow. . . . . The Minutemen outshot Vermont 35-7 in last season's loss. . . The latest in "lateral slat fence" construction technology is replacing the familiar chain-link fence around Boyden Field. It should be ready by the end of next week and will add about 10 feet of altitude to the hallowed spectator's hill.

"Another weekend off would have killed us," said UMass coach Carol Ford, who scheduled the tourney about 10 days ago to toughen up her squad. "This weekend will give us an opportunity to play a lot."

The Minutewomen will have their serious game faces on when they go to Colgate, according to Ford.

"We are going there to win and we are going to try to beat everyone in three games," she said.

That will be quite a challenge for UMass because it faces the two toughest teams today.

"The schedule is OK with me. I'm glad we're playing the two toughest teams first," Ford said.

The tournament will be a round-robin format, where every team meets just once and the two teams with the best record, at the end tomorrow, meet for the championship game.

The challenge for the Minutewomen is to stay fresh throughout the tourney. They will play five matches in two days, a miniumum of 15 games.

"If we go three or four (games with each team) fatigue will set in," Ford said. "It's going to be a test of our endurance."

UMass, 3-0, is coming off a big victory over Boston College on Tuesday night but Ford said some problems still need to be ironed out before the Minutewomen reach their peak.

"We're working on some weaknesses. We're working on digging hard hits, digging off-speed shots, and being able to play defense in the middle," Ford said. "We've had good practices (this week)."

UMass has also diversified its offense.

"We worked on combination plays. We're working on faking so that hitters are hitting against one, or no blockers,"

"We want to hit around the blockers for points. Now they have to hit where the holes are," Ford said.

This weekend's games will be the first away games for the Minutewomen, who have a lot of catching up to do with the other A-10 teams.

Seven of the other A-10 teams have already played at least six matches.

"I think we'll be ready for George Washington (University)" next week, Ford said.

Over the Net: Although UMass has played fewer games than most of the other A-10 teams, seniors Barbara Meehan and Ann Marie Larese are numbers one and two in the conference in aces-per-game average.

field before they could create any problems in front of our goal," Rudy said.

But it wasn't the prettiest of games. UMass was called for 27 fouls to 14 for the Panthers, but it didn't have a big effect.

"We showed a lot of composure in a very physical game," Rudy said. "The front-runners created space effectively. I'm very pleased with the way we played because we worked so hard."

UMass will be off until next Wednesday, when it travels to Providence, R.I. to face Brown University.

(Jackie Stokes) who is probably the best in New England and she did a great job."

Junior Bernie Martel jumped on PC goalie Sandra O'Gorman for the first goal of the game just 3:30 into the first half when she picked up a rebound after a flurry of UMass shots.

With the offense unable to unleash any kind of attack on Cox, it was up to O'Gorman to keep the Lady Friars close. However, one- woman shows don't win games.

"We were worried about the Providence goalie keeping them in the game and she definitely did that," Hixon said.

At 14:20 of the first, UMass picked up its second goal of the game when senior Tonia Kennedy deflected a drive from junior Kathy DeAngelis. Credit DeAngelis with an assist.

O'Gorman did keep PC in the game for the remainder of regulation but the Friar attack obviously was not equal to the task. The second half was scoreless.

The big problem for Providence was finishing off its plays. The opportunities did present themselves, but the Lady Friars could not capitalize.

"When Providence did come down the field they were dangerous," Hixon said. "I always had the sense that they had the ability to score."

It was Providence's first loss of the season. PC, now 3-0-1, came into the game as the No. 6 team in New England. UMass came in at No. 1 in N.E., and No. 5 in the nation.

Slap shots:sb The Minutewomen continue their road swing this weekend when they travel to Rutgers University tomorrow and the University of Rhode Island on Sunday (both at 1 p.m.) for a pair of crucial Atlantic-10 contests.

The A-10 conference is split into two divisions. No team has played each other in the three team East Division which the Minutewomen belong to. Penn State, 1-0, is leading the West.

If the Minutewomen sweep both games this weekend, they will be in first place and in very good shape for in the A-10 playoff scene.

Rutgers should be a tough game. The Scarlet Knights are 5-0 in non-league play as of Sept. 19. and are ranked ninth in the country. They have outscored their opponents 17-8.

Rhode Island has only played one game which they lost 1-0 to Yale University. The WRams are not ranked in the top seven teams in New England.

UMass tops Adelphi, 3-0

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

One of the good signs that things are coming together for a sports team is when the things it works hard to improve on finally show in a game situation.

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team had been having trouble with its finishing all season, but practiced it constantly this past week. The results were pleasing, leading to a 3-0 win over Adelphi University yesterday at Garden City, N.Y.

"We worked hard on finishing off our flanks all week," said UMass coach Jim Rudy. "It gave us three goals. That showed the work we did."

The main beneficiaries of that were sophomore April Kater and freshman Michelle Woodside. Woodside set up all three goals, two of which were scored by Kater, the other by senior Beth Roundtree.

"I was happy for Michelle to get three assists in one game," Rudy said.

UMass (4-0) could have had problems with the Panthers, who were coming off a big 3-2 win against 19th-ranked Rutgers on Wednesday. But Adelphi would find out that there was a big difference between 19th and the fourth ranking that UMass holds.

Rudy also saw the Minutewomen score early in the game for the first time this season. While the first three wins this season took a while to get brewing, the Minutewomen yesterday picked up the winning tally less than 10 minutes into the contest.

Woodside drove down the right side and crossed a ball toward the far left post, where Kater headed it into the left side at 9:14.

"I hoped to get one in early. We hadn't scored early yet, so that was good," Rudy said. "I'm sure she (Kater) will score more headers in her career at UMass."

UMass closed the half with a 2-0 edge, thanks to another goal by Kater. Woodside dumped the ball off to Kater, who attempted to cross it in front of the goal. But the ball sailed over the head of goalkeeper Christine Missl and into the net at 33:45.

Roundtree got the final goal at 62:37, as Woodside set her up beautifully with a cross pass to the left side. Roundtree, nearly standing in the goal, had no trouble redirecting it past Missl.

"I was glad that Roundtree and Kater got their first goals of the year," Rudy said. "It kind of broke the ice for the season."

The defense took over from there, allowing Adelphi just four shots. That makes a grand total of just 14 shots allowed in the four games so far this year.

"The defense was solid. We won a lot of balls at mid-

Field hockey dumps PC, 2-0

The way the University of Massachusetts field hockey team is knocking out opponents, Mike Tyson might lose a fight before the Minutewomen lose a game.

UMass continued its unbeaten streak yesterday by disposing of the Providence College Lady Friars, 2-0, on PC's home field. The Minutewomen are now 4-0 on the season.

"We definitely dominated the game and that's what we wanted to do," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

And the Minutewomen dominated the game the way that Mr. Tyson dominates a fight. The Lady Friars were limited to one shot on goal and that came in the second half with UMass already leading 2-0.

Cindy Cox made her fourth start in goal for UMass and lowered her goals-against-average to 0.25. It was the third shutout of the season for the Minutewomen but Hixon is still not elated about the play of her defense yet.

"I thought the defense played OK," Hixon said. "Chris Gutheil had to play against Providence's right wing

Minutemen to renew rivalry with Harvard

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

The game alone is something to look forward to, but since it doesn't happen every year, it's even more special.

After a year off, a traditional match-up will take place tomorrow when the University of Massachusetts football team travels to Cambridge to take on Harvard University at 1:30 p.m.

It could be seen as a battle for bragging rights, but UMass head coach Jim Reid sees it as something more, a battle between conferences.

"I think this game is the Ivy League and the Yankee Conference," Reid said. "And it seems every time we play an Ivy League team, they're challenging for the Ivy League title."

Tomorrow will be no exception. The Minutemen, 1-1 and 1-0 in the Yankee Conference, will be facing a Crimson team that won its season and Ivy opener last weekend.

Harvard, the preseason favorite to win the Ivy League, beat up on Columbia 41-7 last week. Columbia has lost 42 straight games, but the Crimson showed some power nonetheless.

"They had most of their points by halftime," Reid said.

Harvard's main weapon is senior quarterback Tom Yohe, who threw for 184 yards and two touchdowns against Columbia. He holds school records for career yards (2914) and completions (214).

"Yohe is an aberration," Reid said. "He's a three-year starter and you know he has to be good because (Harvard head coach) Joe Restic always starts a senior."

UMass' starter, Dave Palazzi, also happens to be a senior. And Reid had plenty of good things to say about him as well.

"I'm proud of Dave Palazzi," Reid said. "He's taken plenty of lumps and he hasn't been appreciated. But he's a fierce competitor and he's emerging as a leader."

In two games, Palazzi has completed 29 of 56 passes for 431 yards and four touchdowns. He threw one interception last week against Ball State University.

"I wouldn't mind if this game came down to Tom Yohe vs. Dave Palazzi," Reid said. "I'm not saying it will, but I wouldn't

Water polo, tennis and x-country all in action

Five other University of Massachusetts sports teams will be bust this weekend, as the men's and women's cross country teams, the men's and women's tennis teams, and the water polo team will all see action.

Both cross country teams will travel to New Haven CT tomorrow to race against Yale and Boston College in a pair of trimeets. The women will race at 3:30 p.m. while the men will follow at 4 p.m.

In tennis action, the men's team will travel to the ECAC tournament, which is being held tomorrow and Sunday.

The women will travel will play a pair of home matches at the Boyden Courts. Saturday they will play host to the University of New Hampshire at 3 p.m. and Sunday they will entertain Colgate University.

The water polo team will face some of the best competition in the nation when it travels to Brown University to participate in the California Invitational tournament.

Today, the team will take on Iona, ranked 18th in the nation. After that, it will be even more difficult for UMass, which will face the University of California-Santa Barbara, ranked eighth in the nation, and UCal-Berkeley, the No. 2 team in the country.

The water polo team won three games last weekend in the Eastern Varsity Tournament.

This is exactly what the University of Massachusetts volleyball team needed.

The Minutewomen have gone out of their way to get a tournament on their schedule before they begin Atlantic 10 competition next week.

The Minutewomen have only played three matches in two weeks but at the Colgate Tournament in Hamilton, N.Y., this weekend they will play five matches in two days.

UMass will meet Colgate (6 p.m.) and Princeton Universities (8 p.m.) tonight, and they will play Sienna College, Howard University, and Fairleigh Dikenson University tomorrow.

Minutemen face UVM

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Correspondant

They're not out of the woods yet, literally. Bleary-eyed from Wednesday's 2-0 loss at Dartmouth, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team must now travel to Burlington, VT to face the Catamounts, tomorrow at 1pm.

The last two times the Minutemen have faced the Catamounts, Vermont has emerged with a 1-0 victory. Last fall's tradgedy turned in the final few moments of the contest, when an errant pass from a UMass defender back to the goalkeeper found its way to the back of the net.

"We scored against ourselves. . . an own goal," recalled UMass head coach Jeff Gettler. "It was a typical game of us not being beaten by our opponent," added assistant coach John Martin.

Kennedy speaks at UMass

Talks about youth movements, civil rights, college tuition

By RICK SASSON
Collegian Staff

Ted Kennedy Jr., speaking to more than 300 students at the University of Massachusetts Saturday, said weak leadership has sent the United States spiraling into an age of indifference.

"When was the last time people were asked to give something back to their country?" Kennedy asked, referring to John F. Kennedy's famous adage, "Ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country."

> When was the last time people were asked to give something back to their country?
> —Ted Kennedy Jr.

Kennedy, on two-day stop-off in the area to campaign for his father's re-election to the US senate, gave the keynote address at a student leadership conference titled, "Putting the pieces together."

The young Kennedy, who did not have a prepared statement but relied on notes, touched on topics including youth movements, civil rights for the physically disabled, and rising college tuition.

Images from around the globe of youth fighting for the right to vote, Kennedy said, hold a disturbing contrast with low voter turnouts in the United States.

"They're fighting for something we have and don't take advantage of," he said. "Some how people here have felt their vote doesn't count."

Throughout his one-hour talk, in which he stressed that US leadership in recent years has come from the bottom, and not the top, Kennedy continually returned to the issue of rights for the disabled.

As a boy, Kennedy lost a leg to cancer. He is the founding director of Facing the Challenge, a leading advocacy group for disabled citizens.

He said he is he disturbed that it is possible and even likely that a student could go through four years of college having no contact with a physically challenged person.

Calling the disability rights movement the "civil rights movement of the 80s," Kennedy said that accessiblity to buildings should become a great concern for the next administration.

"There are still millions of people that are still dramatically left out of America," he said.

With that, Kennedy turned the floor over to students, posing the question, "What makes a good leader?" Students, many resident assistants and some student government officers responded with, "honesty," "compassion," and "caring."

Kennedy agreed with the notions, jotting them down on a yellow pad. He concluded the exchange with a statement that all people are interconnected, and in general, people are willing to help each other if they are asked.

Outside the Student Union Ballroom, where Kennedy spoke, members of the UMass Republican club held signs attacking American liberalism, calling it a "cancer."

Dukakis and Bush clash during debate last night

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

The governor of Massachusetts did some bush-whacking, and duked it out with the vice president.

In the end, the governor could claim a slight victory.

COMMENTARY

It was all part of the fun as Gov. Michael Dukakis and Vice President George Bush debated domestic and foreign policy last night at Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, before an estimated television audience of more than 100 million (see photo and related story on page 10).

Jim Lehrer, the moderator and one of the hosts of PBS' MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour, began by asking Bush why so many Americans use drugs today.

The vice president said the reason was sparked by a deterioration of values in the United States.

"We have condoned what we should have condemned," he said, adding that he thought it was irresponsible for some Americans to try to decriminalize drugs.

Bush said it was important to "instill values into the minds of young people in our schools."

Gov. Dukakis, in a response that, like Bush's, has been heard before on the campaign trail, said the government not only has to instill values in its youth, but must reflect those values. He cited the Reagan/Bush administration's dealings with Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega as an example of misguided policy. Noriega, who has met with Bush, has been linked to drug trade.

In one of the better exchanges of one-liners, Gov. Dukakis said that to lower the federal deficit, he would cut weapon systems, impart economic growth, bring down interest rates, and collect as-yet uncollected taxes. He said with all the weapon programs Bush supports, his opponent's claims of reducing the deficit make him the "Joe Isuzu of American politics."

Bush quickly retorted. "That answer was about as clear as the Boston Harbor," he said.

Both one-liners got hearty amounts of laughter from the audience. Unfortunately, style, not substance, was the key word for debate answers.

Peter Jennings, host of ABC's World News Tonight, asked Gov. Dukakis if he was a "passionless" governor.

Dukakis said he has great passion for "the working people of this country that I dearly love."

Bush said he doesn't deny Dukakis' passion, but questioned if Dukakis' passion was too far left of the American mainstream's passion.

Jennings then asked Bush if his constant mentioning of Dukakis as a 'card-carrying member of the ACLU" was necessary. Bush had mentioned the ACLU is his previous answer.

Bush said he disagreed with many of the positions of the ACLU, and that was the reason he kept bringing it up. He said the ACLU was outside the mainstream, and in turn Dukakis was outside the mainstream. He said he didn't question Dukakis' patriotism, "only his judgment."

Dukakis, in a sharp retort, said Bush was questioning his patriotism by constantly referring to the ACLU and Dukakis' veto of a state bill to make pupils say the Pledge of Allegiance.

"And I resent it. . . I resent it," Dukakis said.

There were few gaffes in the debate, but late in the debate Bush did mistakenly say there were "three men" on the Bush ticket with foreign policy expertise, vice-presidential nominee Dan Quayle, Bush, and an unnamed third member.

Dukakis' closing comments, in which he said he believed in and was a product of the American dream, outweighed his earlier weak-sounding answers as well as the vice president's closing comments. Bush said as president he would continue opportunity and peace, and that he was a man of values, experience and integrity.

Denying Satan worship

Pagans picket seminar

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

HADLEY — About 15 pagan worshippers picketed a fundamentalist Christian seminar Saturday evening, claiming the sponsors of the seminar on the occult had falsely accused the pagans of worshipping Satan.

Carrying signs that read "Witches heal" and "Religious freedom for all," members of the Pagan Students Organization walked along the grass strip in front of the Howard Johnson Motor Lodge on Route 9, site of a Seventh Day Adventist seminar titled "The Occult Explosion: Why?"

Lew Stead, co-president of the pagan group, said they decided to protest after a group member anonymously called the seminar's organizers to find out what they would tell the public about the UMass pagans.

"They basically said we were responsible for some very heinous crimes," including abducting children to use in ritual sacrifice, Stead said. "If you let this get by, the next time, they're going to kick you out of your house."

Stephen Herbert, a Seventh Day Adventist and UMass plant and soil science professor, said his group never heard of the Pagan Student Organization until the plans to picket were announced.

"We didn't know they existed, so we couldn't have been making any direct references to them," Herbert said. "We have no objections to them being here. Freedom of religion is a thing that our church has always been strong on."

But the pagans said they had been accused wrongly of holding Satanic beliefs. The pagan religions are based on divinity in nature, and their deities are pre-Christian gods and goddesses with no figures of evil.

"Pagans are the kind of people that apologize to a fly when they swat it," Stead said. "It's a very life-oriented thing."

Stead said many people hold pagan beliefs, but do not always announce them publicly.

"There are a lot more pagans than most people would believe, mostly because they're afraid," he said.

The seminar inside was only the first in a series of 24 sponsored by the Seventh Day Adventists, on a variety of topics. The lecturer Saturday night was West Virginia evangelist J. Allen Fine.

The occult was chosen as the first topic because it is "an attention-getter," said Pastor Dwayne Toppenberg, from the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Shelburne Falls.

"People are interested in that. And once we've gotten people's attention, we can talk about salvation," he said. "But you can't go on and talk until you've gotten people's attention."

The magic number is: 3

The Boston Red Sox have nearly signed, sealed and delivered their berth in the American League playoffs with a big 6-0 win yesterday over the New York Yankees at Yankee Stadium.

With that win, the magic number to clinch the pennant is noe 3. That means that a combination of wins by the Red Sox or losses by the Tigers or Yankees equalling three will put the Sox in the playoffs against the Oakland Athletics starting next Wednesday.

For complete details of yesterday's pennant chase action, turn to page 18.

Events planned to commemorate the death of John F. Kennedy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Network documentaries, a string of new books, an all-night Capitol vigil, and memorials by former Peace Corps volunteers and PT boat veterans will help commemorate the 25th anniversary of the assassination of John F. Kennedy in November.

But family members plan a low-profile remembrance, much different from the 1983 nationally televised observance of the 20th anniversary of that fateful day in Dallas.
